NOV 6 1940

Congressional Record

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIRST SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

VOLUME 75—PART 9

MAY 2, 1932, TO MAY 17, 1932

(Pages 9357 to 10494)

UNITED STATES
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
WASHINGTON : 1932

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

DOE-HQ 1940

Congressional Record

SEVENTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1932

(Legislative day of Friday, April 29, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 719) to authorize the modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Schall
Austin	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Black	Fess	Lewis	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Long	Stephens
Bratton	George	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Cohen	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	Waterman
Coolidge	Howell	Pittman	Watson
Copeland	Hull	Reed	White
Costigan	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented a resolution adopted by the San Francisco (Calif.) Section, National Council of Jewish Women, favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BLAINE presented a petition of 70 citizens of Westby, Ashton, and Virqua, Wis., praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, and opposing any measure looking toward its modification, resubmission to the States, or repeal, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Federal employees of Local No. 295, Leupp, Ariz., signed by Gabriella Dent, secretary, remonstrating against Federal salary cuts, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Keep Tucson Wages Up Conference, signed by R. L. Yates, chairman, and H. R. Voncolbitz, secretary, of Tucson, Ariz., remonstrating against Federal wage cuts and favoring the imposition of higher taxes on incomes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from E. P. McDowell, department adjutant, American Legion, Phoenix, Ariz., opposing the making of drastic cuts in veterans' compensation without adequate hearings, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NEELY presented a letter in the nature of a petition from D. M. McCartney, of Hacker Valley, W. Va., praying for the payment of World War veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, to be financed by the issuance of "baby bonds," which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KEAN presented a resolution adopted by Monmouth Grange, No. 92, Patrons of Husbandry, of Freehold, N. J., protesting against the imposition of taxes on automobiles, trucks, tires, accessories, and gasoline, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bethesda and Chevy Chase, Md., praying for the passage of legislation providing for the closing of barber shops on Sunday in the District of Columbia, known as the Copeland Sunday health bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REVALUATION OF ESTATES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I request that there be printed in the RECORD a letter received by me from the Lieutenant Governor of the State of New York in reference to the provision of the revenue bill dealing with the revaluation of estates, together with a memorandum accompanying the letter prepared by the director of the budget of the State of New York. I ask also that the letter and memorandum be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying memorandum were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Albany, April 30, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: At the request of Governor Roosevelt and myself, Mr. Mark Graves, Director of the Budget, has forwarded to you a memorandum prepared by him in connection with section 810 of the House revenue bill of 1932 (H. R. 10236) relative to the revaluation of estates for the purposes of the Federal estate tax.

I commend this memorandum to your very earnest consideration. The enactment of the proposed legislation would unquestionably work a very serious hardship on the State of New York and other States of the Union. A considerable part (more than one-sixth) of the taxes collected by the State of New York comes from estates.

You will note that the director of the budget, Mr. Graves, estimates that if the proposed bill is enacted it will possibly require the refunding of about $15,000,000 to the estates of decedents dying between September 1, 1928, and September 1, 1930. He estimates further that in the event a similar proposal is incorporated into law in this State (complementing Federal legislation) a further loss would ensue to the State of between twenty-five and thirty-five million dollars from the estates of decedents who have died between September 1, 1930, and January 1, 1932.

This is so serious a matter to the State of New York that I feel it merits the most earnest consideration and presentation of the facts by you, both before the committee and in the Senate. If in the wisdom of Congress any legislation is required, any one of the alternative proposals made by Mr. Graves, while not eliminating in full the prospective loss to the State, would at any rate substantially reduce it.

May I ask you to keep me informed of the situation concerning the proposed legislation? I wish to advise you, too, that if in your opinion it is wise for the State to be represented at any further hearings which may be held on this bill in order to lay the views of the State administration before the Members of the Senate I would be very glad indeed to arrange it.

I am writing a similar letter to Senator COPELAND.

Yours very sincerely,

HERBERT H. LEHMAN.

MEMORANDUM BY MARK GRAVES, DIRECTOR OF THE NEW YORK STATE BUDGET, RE SECTION 810 OF THE HOUSE REVENUE BILL OF 1932 (H. R. 10236)

In the case of decedents dying between September 1, 1928, and January 1, 1932, this section authorizes the revaluation of estates for purposes of the estate tax 18 months after death. If an estate is revalued, the tax is adjusted to be that part, fraction, or ratio of the tax assessed as of the date of death which the new value bears to the value as of the date of death. Put simply, if an estate has shrunk one-half, the tax is reduced one-half; if the estate has shrunk but 25 per cent, the tax is reduced but 25 per cent; if the estate has shrunk 75 per cent, the tax will be correspondingly reduced 75 per cent.

EFFECT UPON STATES

States have generally, because of the 80 per cent credit provision, integrated their death tax laws with the Federal estate tax law. It follows that a change such as is proposed will depress State revenue or require refunds by States aggregating approximately four times the loss of revenue or the amount of refunds required of the Federal Government. In other words, the States, collectively, have four times the financial interest in this legislation that the Federal Government has. It is thus seen that the Congress should proceed cautiously and ascertain the effect of such legislation on the finances of the States.

The secretary of revenue of the State of Pennsylvania has, in an able brief, covered that aspect of the situation very well. Here in New York we estimate that if this bill is passed it will probably require the refunding of about $15,000,000 to the estates of decedents dying between September 1, 1928, and September 1, 1930. Commenced with September 1, 1930, New York inaugurated an estate tax paralleling the Federal estate tax at 80 per cent of the latter's rates. It is unlikely that the passage of the legislation contemplated by the Congress would have any direct effect upon New York's taxes on the estates of decedents dying since September 1, 1930. Nevertheless, should the Congress pass this measure, New York's Legislature will find it most difficult to resist the pleadings which will be directed to it to follow the example of the Federal Government. Should New York do that it is estimated the loss in revenue from the estates of decedents dying between September 1, 1930, and January 1, 1932, would be somewhere between $25,000,000 and $35,000,000.

I recommend that some relief be given the estates of decedents dying between the dates specified in this bill. I respectfully submit, however, that the measure adopted by the House is not the best proposal and offer alternative suggestions.

ALTERNATIVE SUGGESTIONS

1. That no reduction be allowed in the tax assessed against an estate based upon value at the date of death unless the estate has shrunk to a point where the tax as assessed will exceed 50 per cent of the value of the net estate 18 months after death, and that in no case will the tax be reduced below 50 per cent of the value of the net estate.

The very bill containing this provision designed to relieve estates and excuse them from paying a death tax graduated to 20 per cent also proposes to double the tax. While the Congress has not the authority to enact a retroactive estate tax, nevertheless it can refrain from granting the full relief contemplated by section 810 to these shrunken estates and recognize as this legislation does that higher estate taxes are desirable, and thereby conserve Federal and State funds.

The assumption back of the proposal contained in section 810 is that the value ascertained 18 months after death is the true value, and that computed as of the date of death is a fictitious or inflated value. It is difficult in these times to determine "value." It seems reasonable to assume, however, that the low values of securities which have obtained during recent months may be just as much too low as the values of 1929 were too high. It is true value that we would like to ascertain if that were possible. That is, the value upon which the tax should be based. Being unable to ascertain what "true value" is, it seems to me we are justified in assuming that it is something higher than the present-day market values, and that to deal fairly and equitably with these estates does not require that we base the estate tax upon these extremely low market valuations.

Another suggestion which I wish to offer, if the one I have just discussed is rejected, is—

2. That permission be allowed to revalue estates of decedents 18 months after death, and the tax originally assessed reduced to a sum equaling the amount at which the estate would be taxed under the new revenue bill.

It is proposed by this bill to double estate-tax rates and to bring into the picture gifts made before death and perhaps other important features; while, as has been said, the Congress may not pass a retroactive estate tax law. But granting relief to estates which have shrunk in value is another matter. The Congress can, with perfect propriety if it wishes to do so, simply reduce these taxes which have previously accrued to the amounts which would have been levied under this new schedule of rates and the new plan for computing the estate. The third and last suggestion which I have to offer is—

3. That permission to revalue estates of decedents 18 months after death be granted but that the new value so obtained be added to the value computed as of the date of death and an average value obtained by dividing by 2, then require the estate to pay such fractional part of the tax originally assessed as the average value bears to the value computed as of the date of the decedent's death.

It may be said in favor of this proposal that it recognizes two things: First, that the old values were inflated, and second, that the market values which have obtained during recent months are too low. This suggestion is predicated on the thought that half way between the two extremes true value may be found.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO LAWS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a telegram relating to the bill pending before the Senate providing for amendments to the radio laws. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., May 1, 1932.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate, Washington:

Committee amendments to House radio bill reported without hearings appear utterly unworkable to entire broadcasting industry, and some of them seem so faulty as to call for complete redrafting. Believe it would be most unfortunate for Senate to vote on this bill in its present state and think it should go back to committee for further consideration and hearings, but understand it may be called up for action Monday. Radio people throughout entire country will be grateful for chance to be heard before Senate acts.

HENRY A. BELLOWS.

DUTY ON PINEAPPLES

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, some days ago there was inserted in the RECORD a communication from Mr. H. E. Miles, the chairman of the Fair Tariff League, regarding the duty on pineapples. I referred that communication to Mr. J. N. McBride, general agricultural and land-settlement agent, of Savannah, Ga., of the Seaboard Air Line Railway, and asked his comment on it. He has written me a letter on the subject, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Finance and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY,
Savannah, Ga., April 30, 1932.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am indebted to you for having sent me copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 4, in which appears on page 7652 remarks of Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH setting forth the views of Mr. H. E. Miles, chairman of the Fair Tariff League, regarding the present pineapple tariff. I have read Mr. Miles's statements with a great deal of interest. I do not know who Mr. Miles is, but I dare say his remarks are prompted by the old axiom "The dog that hollers is the one that is hit." I feel that in fairness to the Florida people who are trying to revive and rehabilitate the pineapple industry on the lower east coast something ought to be said to Senator WALSH and Mr. Miles in reply.

I have discussed this article in detail with our Mr. R. A. Carlton, agricultural agent at West Palm Beach, who is probably the best-informed man on the pineapple industry in the entire State of Florida. Mr. Carlton appeared before the Tariff Commission at the time the pineapple case was heard, has visited Cuba and Porto Rico in studying pineapple growing, and has worked very actively with the pineapple interests on the lower east coast in their efforts to reestablish themselves. I therefore feel that Mr. Carlton's views are accurate and authentic.

During the pineapple-tariff hearing in Washington last October it was shown conclusively that the pineapple industry of Florida was for years on a very stable and substantial basis. This industry was probably the most remunerative enterprise, from an agricultural standpoint, on the lower east coast of Florida. The pineapple industry utilized land having little agricultural value for other crops, provided employment for labor during seasons of the year when there was little other work available, and was as prosperous and satisfactory generally as the Cuban pineapple industry or any other pineapple industry is now. It was admitted by the Florida witnesses at the pineapple hearing that the disease "red wilt" seriously upset Florida's pineapple industry, but it was shown that the United States Department of Agriculture in their experiments in Florida had developed a practical and economical method of controlling red wilt; that it is now entirely feasible, from a standpoint of production, to again produce pineapples in Florida, utilizing the methods recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture, and bring back Florida's pineapple industry to a stage of development more intensive than the development prior to the red-wilt disaster.

The tariff act of 1922 accorded the American pineapple grower some small protection against foreign competition. Following this act the Cuban Government established an embargo prohibiting the exportation of pineapple planting stock to Florida. It is presumed that this embargo by the Cuban Government was an act of reprisal for the passage of the pineapple tariff act, and, insofar as I can learn, is without precedent in the exchange of commodities between friendly nations. This embargo on planting material from Cuba further demoralized the Florida pineapple industry, due to the fact that practically all of the plantings within the State of Florida were diseased with red wilt; and in reviving the Florida industry under the recommendations of the Department of Agriculture it was necessary for growers to secure new, vigorous planting stock. The pineapple industry in Porto Rico at that time was not in position to furnish planting stock for Florida growers, and no new planting stock could be secured from Cuba, which made it well nigh impossible for Florida growers to expand their acreages rapidly.

During the time of the Florida real-estate boom pineapple lands on the lower east coast became exceedingly valuable for subdivision purposes, and many growers who had fields of pineapples were induced to dispose of their property to the land speculators at fabulous prices. These fields were subdivided into lots and the pineapples neglected and abandoned, which further dissipated sources of planting material available for expansion. Following the real-estate boom many former pineapple growers again became interested in making plantings of pineapples, but could secure no planting stock at all from Cuba on account of the embargo; practically none from Porto Rico, as the Porto Rico pineapple interests were utilizing their supply of planting stock in expanding their operations under the American tariff; and little from local home sources, as there were only a few fields of pineapples left in Florida from which planting stock could be secured for further expansion. Pineapple growers along the lower east coast of Florida have within the last three years purchased practically all of the planting material available in Porto Rico and brought it into Florida and planted it. This planting material will form the nucleus around which Florida growers can expand their production more rapidly in the future than they have in the immediate past. Substantial interests on the lower east coast are now actively developing pineapple acreages. The Florida Pineapple Products Co. (Inc.), Lake Worth, Fla., of which Mr. H. G. Basford, of Lake Worth, is president and directing head, imported sufficient planting material from Porto Rico last summer and set 20 acres at Lake Worth. This concern has 5,000 acres of land available for pineapple production. They expect to make further importations of pineapple planting material from Porto Rico this summer and to expand their plantings in Florida as rapidly as they can secure stock from their own fields and from importations. There are at present 12 pineapple growers between West Palm Beach and Fort Lauderdale who have approximately 75 acres in pineapples. There are probably 15 or 20 growers in Martin, St. Lucie, and Indian River Counties who now have at least 100 acres in pineapples. It is true that this start is small, yet when consideration is given to the fact that almost unsurmountable obstacles had to be overcome in securing planting stock with which a start could be made the actual results obtained to date indicate the determination of the Florida growers to overcome these obstacles and again build this industry back into the place of prominence that it formerly occupied. Each acre of pineapples in Florida, after it produces its first crop, will begin to produce planting material for further expansion, as well as other crops of pineapples for market. Therefore, the 100 acres now growing on the lower east coast, which will shortly be in production, will soon be producing planting stock for further expansion, as well as fresh pineapples for the trade, and within a short period of years the production of pineapples in Florida should begin to again attain substantial proportions.

The development of this industry within the continental borders of the United States can be made possible by maintaining the present tariff wall and protecting these growers who have overcome already almost countless obstacles. The State needs the pineapple industry because, from the standpoint of utilization of labor and lands, it fills in and rounds out the agricultural program on the lower east coast. Pineapple growing is freer from the effects of common hazards than most of the other agricultural enterprises on the lower east coast. A good start has been made within the past two years in rehabilitating the industry, and material progress should be made within the next few years in further expanding the acreage.

I know that the growers and others interested in pineapple development on the lower east coast of Florida have appreciated the cooperation and friendly spirit of helpfulness which you have manifested toward them in their efforts to bring back this industry.

Yours very truly,

J. N. McBaide,
General Agricultural and Land Settlement Agent.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted a report as indicated:

S. 3786. An act to provide that the United States extend to foreign governments invitations to participate in the International Congress of Architects to be held in the United States during the calendar year 1933, and to authorize an appropriation to assist in meeting the expenses of the session; and

S. 4379. An act for the relief of Yvonne Hale (Rept. No. 628).

Mr. BULOW (for Mr. Norbeck), from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9254) to authorize the exchange of a part of the Rapid City Indian School land for a part of the Pennington County Poor Farm, South Dakota, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 630) thereon.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. WAGNER submitted his individual views as the minority member of the Select Committee to Investigate Unemployment Insurance, pursuant to Senate Resolution 483 (71st Cong., 3d sess.), establishing a select committee to investigate unemployment-insurance systems, which were ordered to be printed, with an illustration, as Report No. 629.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 30, 1932, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3270) for the relief of Daniel S. Schaffer Co. (Inc.).

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 4542) providing for the use by the Veterans' Administration of the old post-office building in Casper, Wyo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4543) granting a pension to Mary C. Brant (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4544) granting an increase of pension to Letha C. Durflinger (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 4545) granting a pension to Jay Dee Hoffman (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 4546) for the relief of Lindsay Hinesley; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4547) to amend the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4548) to amend the immigration act of 1924; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 4549) to authorize conveyance to the United States of certain lands in the State of Arizona for use of the United States in maintaining air-navigation facilities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4550) to amend section 13 of the Federal reserve act by making notes of finance and credit companies subject to discount; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4551) for the relief of the Tampa Marine Co., a corporation, of Tampa, Fla.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 4552) to amend an amendment to the Federal highway act, approved May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 683); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

PAYMENT OF FOREIGN DEBTS IN SILVER

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read by the clerk and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 152) to authorize payment of foreign debts in silver, under certain limitations, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Resolved, etc., When offered by any foreign Government indebted to the United States the President is authorized to accept in payment of the whole or any part of any amounts of principal or interest due the United States prior to July 1, 1936, silver at the rate of 1½ fine ounces for each dollar which such government is obligated to pay to the United States; but no such payment shall be accepted unless such government gives assurance, satisfactory to the President, that it will not melt or debase its own coins to make such payment in silver: Provided, That if any such government shall make provision, satisfactory to the President, for restoring prior to July 1, 1936, all of its silver coinage to a fineness of at least nine-tenths silver, or, if such government does not now mint silver coins, for establishing the use of silver for coinage purposes, then the President is authorized to accept silver from such government at the rate of 1 fine ounce of silver for each dollar of its indebtedness paid in accordance with the terms of this act. The silver so received shall be coined into dollars of standard weight and fineness and deposited in the Treasury of the United States and silver certificates shall be issued, in the manner now provided by law, against the dollars so coined.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in support of the joint resolution I beg to say that European nations which have contracted with the United States to make annual payments based on money borrowed over a decade ago are experiencing great difficulty in finding gold to make such payments. There is nothing surprising in that fact when it is realized that it now requires over $2 in present commodity values to pay a dollar borrowed during or shortly after the end of the World War. These nations are in exactly the same situation as all other debtors throughout the world. With a limitation of time, a limitation of amounts, and a limitation of the source from which obtained, I propose that the United States accept silver instead of gold for the foreign debt payments.

The primary object of the joint resolution is to break the world-wide vicious circle of declining prices by enhancing the purchasing power of nearly one-half of the people of the world, who have no other money than silver. This is to be accomplished by creating a demand for silver during the next four years, which will insure an increase in its value. The demand will arise from continued purchases of silver by the various foreign governments, who will find it to their financial advantage to contract for silver in the open market in order to make payments on their indebtedness to the United States in that metal instead of gold.

The market price of silver is now below 30 cents an ounce. If the price of silver is restored to its pre-war level of about 60 cents an ounce as a result of regular and sustained buying by foreign governments, the inevitable result will be the creation of a market for raw materials and manufactured goods, which are needed in Mexico, India, China, and other silver-using countries. It is assumed that any apparent loss which may accrue to the American Government because of the acceptance of silver in payments on the foreign debts will be balanced by a gain in revenues due to improved foreign trade. We all live in one world and must generally either suffer or prosper together.

It has been urged with great force that merely to provide that silver rather than gold shall be taken for payments on the foreign debts would ultimately do more harm than good because the European nations who owe money to the United States would probably take the stocks of silver coins they now possess and utilize the silver therein to make the payments. Such nations would thereby cease to be users of silver money to any appreciable extent, and thus lessen the current annual demand for silver coinage purposes. My proposal would prevent that from happening by requiring an agreement that the coins of such nations shall not be melted or debased as a means of securing silver to be paid to the United States.

Remembering always America's vital interest in a world which is capable of buying her surplus products instead of lessening the use of silver coins in Europe, the United States can well afford to promote a steady demand based on such use by granting more liberal terms of settlement to any debtor nation which will make provision for the restoration of its silver coinage to a uniformly established degree of fineness. That is why the joint resolution includes an added inducement to any nation indebted to the United States which will leave off debasing its silver coins and make them all at least nine-tenths fine or otherwise expand its use of silver for coinage purposes.

I am advised by the Treasury Department that the subsidiary silver coins of Great Britain were reduced by the act of March 31, 1920, from 925 fine to 500 fine. By act of March 20, 1924, the fineness of subsidiary silver coins of Germany was cut down from 900 to 500 fine and their weight reduced slightly. On June 24, 1928, France diminished the fineness of silver coins to be issued from 835 to 680. It is a remarkable coincidence that nations which owe money to the United States are principally the same nations whose silver coins have been debased. They found it profitable for a time to reduce the quantity of silver in their coinage. The United States can now provide a way whereby it will be profitable for these identical nations to put more real value into their subsidiary coinage and to that extent lift a burden from their gold.

The following information relative to the fineness in thousandths of silver coins of the foreign countries indebted to the United States is taken from data recently compiled in the office of the Director of the Mint:

Austria, schilling, 640.
Belgium, franc, 835 (also 100 per cent nickel).
Czechoslovakia, 5 crowns, 500; 10 crowns, 700.
Estonia, kroon, 500.
Finland, markka, 75 per cent copper, 25 per cent nickel.
France, 10 and 20 francs, 680.
Germany, reichsmark, 500.
Great Britain, half crown, shilling, etc., 500.
Greece, drachma, 75 per cent copper, 25 per cent nickel.
Hungary, pengo, 640.
Italy, 5 and 10 lira, 835; 20 lira, 800.
Latvia, lati, 835.
Lithuania, litas, 500.
Poland, 2 zloty, 500; 5 zloty, 750.
Rumania, 5 and 20 lei, 79 per cent copper, 20 per cent zinc, 1 per cent nickel.
Yugoslavia, dinar, 75 per cent copper, 25 per cent nickel.

An estimate has been made that, beginning in 1920, European nations and their colonies, dominions, and dependencies have sold approximately 375,000,000 fine ounces of silver derived from the demonetization or debasement of silver coins. Of that amount about 200,000,000 ounces were marketed by governments now indebted to the United States and over 100,000,000 ounces by the British Government for India. It was these sales of silver which did more than anything else to cut its market price in half.

To demonstrate the effect of selling silver derived from debased and demonetized coins, I read the following extract from a circular issued by Messrs. Sharp & Wilkins, bullion brokers of London, England, and printed at page 122 of the last annual report of the Director of the United States Mint:

It may, perhaps, be of interest generally to take a review of the silver market for a wider period than this annual circular covers and point out the chief reasons for the fall in the price from 24d. to the present level of about 14d. For many years before the war the price of silver had remained in the neighborhood of 24d., with moderate fluctuations of no great moment. The war caused an abnormal rise in the price of the metal, which in due course reacted and again settled around the old pre-war value. With the recurrence to normal conditions both India and China continued their habit of years and willingly and easily absorbed the world's production. Now, however, arose important factors which were, ultimately, to bring about the debacle which faces the silver market of to-day.

The first blow to the price of silver may, we think, be placed to the credit, or otherwise, of our own Government, by their depreciation of our currency from the fineness of 0.925 to that of 0.500. This caused a large amount of surplus silver to be placed for sale upon the market, approximately 70,000,000 ounces having been disposed of since 1921, in addition to the requirements for foreign coinage orders undertaken by the London Mint. This silver was, in due course, absorbed by India and China, together with the world's production as before.

Following the lead of our Government came continental nations who demonetized their currency and flung the silver upon the markets of the world. The manful way in which India and China stood up to this extra amount of "production," for it was little else than that, lasted for some time, but eventually the purchasing power of these countries broke and the price had to fall. The continental selling practically ceased at about 19d., and at this level the market remained steady for a very long time, and it was then that the Indian Government decided to impose an import duty upon silver into India of about 20 per cent. The consequence was that the silver market could no longer stand the strain and finally succumbed to the inevitable. What, however, has probably contributed most in the past two years to bring about the fall in silver from 24d. to the present level has been the selling of silver by the Indian Government. It was not so much the actual sales that were responsible for the fall as the uncertainty of their next move. The consequence has been that potential buyers have bought from hand to mouth, dreading that at any moment further sales might be made, and it is not too much to say that at every shipment made of silver on Government account from India a decided weakness has come over the markets, both of India and China, with consequent fall in price.

The currency commission in 1926 examined and took the evidence of people of great repute and foresight in this country, America, and elsewhere. The government were warned that if they attempted to sell their enormous amount of surplus rupees the price would fall to 15d. The price has fallen even below that level, and the government have only sold about 100,000,000 ounces out of the 300,000,000 ounces they originally proposed to sell. The price has fallen nearly 50 per cent, and when one considers that the savings of 300,000,000 Indians and 400,000,000 Chinese, or half the population of the world, have been for years and years invested in silver, the appalling result to mankind in general and to these two countries in particular, with consequent disaster to our own trade in England, makes one hope that the policy adopted, so disastrous in its result, will be discontinued and some new arrangement adopted to stem the ruin that has already been brought about. It is perfectly obvious to anyone with any knowledge of the silver market that conditions at the present time make it an absolute impossibility for the Indian government to sell silver to any extent. Any attempt to do so would force the price down still lower, just as every previous sale has done in the past.

It is safe to estimate that to restore the silver coinage of the nations indebted to the United States to nine-tenths fineness and to bring about monetary use of silver in such nations equivalent to that which existed prior to demonetization and debasement will require the purchase of at least 250,000,000 ounces of silver. The amount may be larger than that. Whatever the combined amount of silver is that may be required to restore their silver coinage and to make payments to the United States, the nations which decide to accept this proposal will undoubtedly find it desirable to pool their purchases so that the price of silver will not be unduly enhanced by needless and wholly unnecessary competition between them to secure the total number of ounces required each year.

There is danger that this effort to increase the price of silver may have a greater effect than is desirable. The most powerful argument that can be made against the passage of this joint resolution is that the proposal, when adopted, may result in a rapid rise in the price of silver to a point where the feasibility of the plan will be destroyed. If silver goes to 60 cents, an ounce and a half will cost 90 cents. Considering that under the second alternative specified in the resolution the debtor governments must purchase silver both for the United States and for themselves, a price much above 60 cents an ounce would cease to be attractive. Silver at a dollar an ounce would provide no possible advantage to any government in the payment of its debts to the United States.

Therefore it is imperative that the interested governments shall take joint action to acquire the necessary amount of silver at a reasonable and stable price during the 4-year period. They have a further moral obligation to do so in order that creditors in the silver-using countries shall not suffer undue losses. During the past three years the world has felt the evil effects of a sudden fall in the price of silver. A sudden rise far above the pre-war level would also have evil effects.

In order to throw more light on this phase of the proposal I ask unanimous consent to include as an appendix to my remarks certain data prepared by Mr. Francis H. Brownell, chairman of the board of the American Smelting & Refining Co., in connection with a statement he has recently made respecting limited international bimetalism at no fixed ratio.

I also ask leave to similarly include other information relating to silver taken from the last annual report of the Director of the Mint.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas in the chair). Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

(See Exhibits A, B, and C.)

Mr. HAYDEN. The nations which may join in the acceptance of this proposal will also be afforded an excellent opportunity to confer respecting more uniform standards of size and weight for silver coins, as was done by the countries that entered the Latin Monetary Union in 1863.

In order to insure that the silver acquired by the United States in payment on the indebtedness of foreign nations shall not be thrown upon the market to depress values, the joint resolution provides that when received such silver shall be coined and deposited in the United States Treasury. To make this deposit of silver useful as money, silver certificates are authorized to be issued.

In accordance with the foreign-debt moratorium, the annual payments due for the next 10 years on foreign governmental obligations amount to $74,881,881 on the principal and $195,094,690 as interest, the total amount due each year being $269,976,571. If all of the foreign-debt payments were made in silver on an ounce-for-a-dollar basis, the United States would acquire 1,079,906,284 ounces of silver during the 4-year period.

I ask leave to include in the RECORD a statement sent to me by the Treasury Department a few days ago showing the amounts of principal and interest due the United States from various foreign governments during the fiscal year 1933. I assume that like amounts will be due each year until July 1, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Amounts payable during the fiscal year 1933 by foreign governments on account of their indebtedness

Country	Principal	Interest	Total
Austria	$287,556		$287,556
Belgium	4,200,000	$4,250,000	8,450,000
Czechoslovakia	3,000,000		3,000,000
Estonia	111,000	529,692	640,692
Finland	58,000	276,827	334,827
France	21,477,135	38,522,865	60,000,000
Great Britain	30,000,000	141,500,000	171,500,000
Greece	718,000	431,300	1,149,300
Hungary	12,285	56,704	68,989
Italy	12,300,000	2,490,875	14,790,875
Latvia	46,200	221,613	267,813
Lithuania	39,705	184,772	224,477
Poland	1,357,000	6,630,042	7,987,042
Rumania	1,000,000		1,000,000
Yugoslavia	275,000		275,000
Total	74,881,881	195,094,690	269,976,571
Germany:
Army costs			RM25,300,000=$6,026,794
Mixed claims			40,800,000= 9,719,088
Total			66,100,000=15,745,882

Mr. HAYDEN. In 1900, when Congress provided that all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with gold, the American monetary stock of gold, as estimated by the Director of the Mint, was $1,034,384,000 and the stock of silver was $648,995,000. The per capita of gold was $13.56 and of silver was $8.51.

On June 30, 1931, the estimated monetary stock of gold in the United States was $4,955,921,000 and the monetary silver stock was $848,578,000. The per capita of gold was $39.94 and of silver $6.84. The addition of about $1,250,000,000 to the American monetary stock of silver would leave the relative proportion of silver money to gold in the United States substantially less than it was in 1900.

The total amount of monetary gold in the world in 1930 is estimated by the Director of the Mint to have been $11,522,579,000, of which the United States held about 42 per cent and France about 20 per cent.

The face value of the coined silver of the world in 1930 was estimated by the Director of the Mint to be $4,781,741,000. The stores of silver in existence are not accurately known, but are estimated to be eleven or twelve billion ounces, of which about 7,000,000,000 ounces are in India and two and one-half billion ounces in China.

The 1931 report of the Director of the Mint states that the world production of gold in the 439 years since the discovery of America was 1,061,340,987 ounces. The world production of silver in the same period was 14,976,992,838 ounces. The ratio of this production is 14.27 to 1. The production of gold and silver in the world since 1860 is given at 847,303,170 and 9,819,062,026 ounces, respectively, or at a ratio of 11.6 to 1. The ratio of world production for the 30 years since 1900 is about 10.8 to 1.

The annual production of silver, principally as a by-product of gold, copper, lead, and zinc mining, has averaged approximately 250,000,000 ounces for the past 10 years. To make payment of the sums due from foreign countries to the United States in silver on an ounce-to-the-dollar basis will require an amount equal to about all of the new silver that may be produced during the 4-year period.

If it be considered that silver is nothing but a commodity, and that the plan of debt settlement proposed in the joint resolution is nothing more than a form of barter, yet I do insist that the United States is taking its pay in an imperishable commodity, the gold price of which under the plan proposed is sure to advance. The effect of the plan is to discount that advance with an assurance that the commodity the United States is taking in lieu of gold will not decline in value after it is acquired.

Inquiry is certain to be made as to what will happen to the price of silver after 1936 when the arrangement provided for in the joint resolution comes to an end. By that time the European nations indebted to the United States will have abandoned "the flight from silver" inaugurated in 1920. They will all have a much greater interest in becoming parties to an international agreement respecting the use of silver as money. If the estimates of production during the past four centuries are at all correct, and with allowance for metal consumed in arts and industries, the total available silver reserves of the world in coin, bullion, ornaments, and so forth, can not reasonably be assumed to exceed 15,000,000,000 ounces. The annual production averages approximately 250,000,000 ounces, of which about 25 per cent is normally absorbed in manufactures. The quantity of silver on the market and subject to sale at any one time probably does not exceed 1,000,000,000 ounces. If the marketable silver is placed under control by governments who will share in its use for coinage purposes, there will be no difficulty in stabilizing the price of that metal after July 1, 1936.

On February 20, 1931, the Senate unanimously adopted a resolution reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], suggesting that the President call or obtain an international conference to the end that agreements be obtained with respect to the uses and status of silver as money. The reason why there has been no response to that suggestion by other governments is obvious. They are getting along somehow with a debased silver subsidiary coinage. To make any change whereby they might use more silver as money would, under ordinary circumstances, require placing an additional burden on their taxpayers to purchase the silver. Therefore they are not interested in any such conference. The plan proposed in the joint resolution completely alters the present situation, and after 1936 each government will have a stock of silver coins whose value it will want to maintain and protect.

The American Government is not now concerned as to where the silver which it may obtain under this arrangement is produced so long as it is purchased in the open market. Neither should the United States be deeply concerned as to who shall first take advantage of improved trade with the silver-using countries. If England shall sell more cotton goods or manufactured tobacco in India, we know that a large part of the cotton and the tobacco will be purchased in the United States. The same is true of every other commodity of which this country has an exportable surplus.

There has been no overproduction of silver. The decline in its value is due primarily, if not solely, to the action of governments in directly throwing upon the market silver derived from the demonetization and debasement of silver coins. If governments caused this fall in the price of silver by selling silver, governments can restore the price of silver by buying silver. The proposal I am submitting makes it to the direct advantage of great European nations to purchase silver. They will gain the same indirect advantage as the United States through an improved demand for commodities in all silver-using countries.

EXHIBIT A

Production and Consumption

(A) CONSUMPTION [1] OF SILVER BY CHINA AND INDIA

[As reported by Handy & Harman]

	China, including coinage of Chinese mints	India
	Fine ounces	Fine ounces
1924	41,700,000	108,200,000
1925	59,400,000	106,700,000
1926	73,900,000	91,600,000
1927	85,000,000	90,000,000
1928	124,000,000	89,000,000
1929	136,700,000	81,800,000
1930	123,000,000	94,500,000
1931	59,000,000	57,000,000
Average per year	87,837,500	89,850,000

[1] The ultimate consumption of India and China is in the hoarding by the people as savings. This amount has no necessary relation to the amount used as coined money—in fact, is in the main distinct therefrom.

Average per year for both China and India 177,687,500

(b) The United States Mint (latest report of director, June 30, 1931) estimates world industrial consumption of silver as—

	Ounces
1929	59,544,280
1930	83,084,632
The average of the two years is	71,314,456

(c) Annual production averages approximately 250,000,000 ounces. The peak of all time—over 261,000,000 ounces—was reached in 1929. Production for 1931 is estimated by Handy & Harman at 196,100,000 ounces.

From the foregoing (a), (b), and (c) we may reasonably and conservatively predict mine production and consumption of silver per annum as follows:

		Ounces
Annual production		250,000,000
Consumption of India and China, say	170,000,000
World industrial consumption, say	60,000,000
		230,000,000
This would leave, for the purchase of subsidiary coinage and for the additional purchases necessary by the nations in adopting and maintaining limited bimetallism at no fixed ratio, only		[1] 20,000,000

The proposed return to a pre-war status would stop all further sale by governments, which has been the cause of the fall and continued low level in price. Such further supply being cut off, it follows that, in order to have the larger production necessary to fill demand, it would be necessary to have a higher price, so that mines not now operating may be again stimulated to produce. It seems quite probable that purchases by nations would equal 100,000,000 ounces per annum under the proposed plan of both return to pre-war status and limited bimetallism at no fixed ratio. All past market experience indicates that such a demand would gradually raise the price of silver to around $1 per ounce.

EXHIBIT B

Highest, lowest, and average price of silver in New York, per fine ounce, since 1874

Calendar year	Quotations
	Highest	Lowest	Average
1874	$1.29375	$1.25500	$1.27195
1875	1.26125	1.21000	1.23883
1876	1.26000	1.03500	1.14950
1877	1.26000	1.16000	1.19408
1878	1.20750	1.08500	1.15429

[1] Ounces of silver per annum.

Highest, lowest, and average price of silver in New York, per fine ounce, since 1874—Continued

Calendar year	Quotations
	Highest	Lowest	Average
1879	$1.16750	$1.06500	$1.12088
1880	1.15000	1.11250	1.13931
1881	1.14500	1.11000	1.12823
1882	1.15000	1.09000	1.13355
1883	1.11750	1.09500	1.10874
1884	1.13250	1.08000	1.11161
1885	1.09500	1.02750	1.06428
1886	1.03500	.92500	.99880
1887	1.03500	.95000	.97899
1888	.97750	.92000	.94300
1889	.97250	.92500	.93634
1890	1.20500	.95750	1.05329
1891	1.07500	.94750	.99033
1892	.95250	.83000	.87552
1893	.85000	.65000	.78219
1894	.70000	.59500	.64043
1895	.69000	.60000	.66268
1896	.70250	.65625	.68195
1897	.66125	.52750	.60774
1898	.62250	.55125	.59064
1899	.64750	.58625	.60507
1900	.65750	.59750	.62055
1901	.64500	.54750	.59703
1902	.56875	.47375	.52815
1903	.62375	.47500	.54208
1904	.62500	.53375	.57843
1905	.66500	.55625	.61008
1906	.72375	.63125	.67378
1907	.71000	.52750	.65978
1908	.58875	.48250	.53496
1909	.54500	.50750	.52163
1910	.57625	.50750	.54245
1911	.57500	.52125	.54002
1912	.65625	.55250	.62006
1913	.65125	.58000	.61241
1914	.60875	.49000	.56331
1915	.58000	.47750	.51062
1916	.79125	.57250	.67151
1917	1.16500	.73125	.84000
1918	1.01937	.88937	.98445
1919	1.38250	1.01375	1.12087
1920	1.37875	.60375	1.01940
1921	.73813	.53188	.63096
1922	.74188	.62875	.67934
1923	.69000	.62875	.65239
1924	.72375	.63000	.67111
1925	.73187	.66812	.69406
1926	.68937	.51812	.62428
1927	.60312	.54187	.56680
1928	.63937	.56812	.58483
1929	.57812	.46812	.53306
1930	.47187	.31062	.38466
1931	.37562	.26062	.29013

EXHIBIT C

Estimated monetary stock of gold and silver in the United States and the amount per capita at the close of each fiscal year since 1873

Fiscal year ended June 30—	Population (thousands)	Gold bullion and coin (thousands)	Silver coin (thousands)	Per capita
				Gold	Silver	Total
1873	41,677	$135,000	$18,149	$3.24	$0.44	$3.68
1874	42,796	147,379	21,092	3.44	.49	3.93
1875	43,951	121,135	30,743	2.76	.70	3.46
1876	45,137	130,057	36,416	2.88	.84	3.72
1877	46,353	167,501	50,465	3.61	1.09	4.70
1878	47,598	213,200	82,048	4.48	1.72	6.20
1879	48,866	245,742	111,526	5.03	2.28	7.31
1880	50,156	351,841	142,522	7.01	2.84	9.85
1881	51,316	478,485	169,384	9.32	3.30	12.62
1882	52,495	506,758	197,218	9.65	3.76	13.41
1883	53,693	542,732	227,008	10.11	4.23	14.34
1884	54,911	545,501	255,589	9.93	4.65	14.58
1885	56,148	588,097	283,479	10.48	5.05	15.53
1886	57,404	590,774	312,253	10.29	5.44	15.73
1887	58,680	654,520	352,994	11.15	6.02	17.17
1888	59,974	705,819	386,572	11.77	6.45	18.22
1889	61,289	680,064	420,549	11.10	6.86	17.96
1890	62,622	695,563	456,908	11.11	7.30	18.41
1891	63,844	646,583	516,603	10.13	8.09	18.22
1892	65,086	664,275	568,579	10.21	8.74	18.95
1893	66,349	597,698	615,716	9.01	9.28	18.29
1894	67,632	627,293	624,250	9.28	9.23	18.51
1895	68,934	636,256	624,731	9.23	9.06	18.29
1896	70,254	599,598	627,696	8.53	8.93	17.46
1897	71,592	696,239	632,408	9.73	8.83	18.56
1898	72,947	861,515	637,479	11.81	8.74	20.55
1899	74,318	963,498	638,564	12.96	8.59	21.55
1900	76,303	1,034,384	648,995	13.56	8.51	22.07
1901	77,754	1,124,639	658,006	14.46	8.46	22.92
1902	79,117	1,192,595	667,319	15.07	8.43	23.50
1903	80,487	1,248,682	675,678	15.51	8.39	23.90
1904	81,867	1,327,656	679,932	16.22	8.31	24.53
1905	83,260	1,357,656	683,053	16.31	8.20	24.51
1906	84,662	1,475,707	686,477	17.43	8.11	25.54
1907	86,074	1,466,389	698,702	17.04	8.12	25.16
1908	87,496	1,618,133	715,616	18.49	8.18	26.67

Estimated monetary stock of gold and silver in the United States and the amount per capita at the close of each fiscal year since 1873—Continued

Fiscal year ended June 30—	Population (thousands)	Gold bullion and coin (thousands)	Silver coin (thousands)	Per capita
				Gold	Silver	Total
1909	88,926	$1,642,042	$727,686	$18.47	$8.18	$26.65
1910	90,363	1,636,043	723,437	18.11	8.01	26.12
1911	93,983	1,753,197	727,886	18.65	7.74	26.39
1912	95,656	1,818,188	738,866	19.01	7.73	26.74
1913	97,337	1,870,762	743,469	19.22	7.64	26.86
1914	99,027	1,890,657	750,279	19.09	7.58	26.67
1915	100,725	1,985,539	753,702	19.71	7.48	27.19
1916	102,431	2,444,636	757,161	23.87	7.39	31.26
1917	104,145	3,220,242	766,545	30.92	7.36	38.28
1918	105,869	3,162,808	731,373	29.87	6.91	36.78
1919	106,136	3,113,306	551,016	29.33	5.19	34.52
1920	106,422	2,865,482	527,712	26.93	4.96	31.89
1921	108,445	3,274,730	560,102	30.20	5.16	35.36
1922	109,893	3,784,652	652,385	34.44	5.94	40.38
1923	111,693	4,049,554	761,073	36.26	6.81	43.07
1924	113,727	4,488,391	781,369	39.47	6.87	46.34
1925	115,378	4,360,382	805,533	37.79	6.98	44.77
1926	117,136	4,447,397	822,414	37.97	7.02	44.99
1927	118,628	4,587,298	833,534	38.67	7.03	45.70
1928	120,013	4,109,163	838,972	34.24	6.99	41.23
1929	121,455	4,324,351	844,148	35.60	6.96	42.55
1930	123,191	4,534,866	850,938	36.81	6.91	43.72
1931	124,076	4,955,921	848,578	39.94	6.84	46.78

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. WAGNER, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 4076) to provide for emergency construction of certain authorized public works to aid in increasing employment, and for other purposes (introduced by Mr. WAGNER on March 14, 1932), and it was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SECOND JURY DISAGREEMENTS IN HAWAII

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of a bill as to which there is great necessity for haste. If it leads to any debate, I will withdraw the request.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (S. 4313) to prevent the successive disagreement of two juries, impaneled to try a criminal case in the Territory of Hawaii, from operating as an acquittal of the accused or from permitting the discharge of the accused from custody. I report the bill unanimously without amendment from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Before the question is put by the Chair, I will state what is the situation. The Territory of Hawaii has a law whereby in the case of a hung jury twice in the trial of a case, it is held to be equivalent to an acquittal. This law is one with which we were not familiar and never consciously approved of. The bill which I have introduced, and which was reported unanimously from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, provides that no disagreement of any jury shall operate as an acquittal of the accused. There is no objection to the bill. As I have said, it was unanimously reported from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, as I understand the bill in a case, for instance, like the one which has just been concluded in Hawaii, if the defendants should be tried again and there should be another disagreement, it would mean an acquittal?

Mr. BINGHAM. Exactly. The four gangsters have been tried once and there was a hung jury. They are about to be tried again. If there is another hung jury, under the law of the Territory of Hawaii they are acquitted. Under the terms of the bill to which I am referring the prosecutor may continue with the prosecution as in any State of the Union.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess I was thinking about the other case. It does not apply to the other case at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; that is true; because in the case of the four persons to whom the Senator refers they have been convicted. There was not a hung jury.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I was mistaken. I have no objection to the Senator's request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, which has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me inquire of the Senator from Connecticut if we should not at the same time cure what seems to have been a recent practice in the courts of Hawaii of rejecting the finding of a grand jury by the courts.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish that might be done.

Mr. GLASS. Why should not that be done?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a highly controversial point. The bill to which I have reference is recommended by the Attorney General. There is need for haste and there is no objection to it. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not add anything to it in order that there may be no delay in securing a change in the law as it now exists. I merely ask that the bill may be passed as it has been reported.

Mr. GLASS. I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I think the bill should be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no disagreement of any jury, regardless of the number of disagreements previously existing, in any criminal case now or hereafter pending in the Territory of Hawaii, shall operate as an acquittal of the accused, or shall empower the court to discharge the accused from custody.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon approval.

SEC. 3. All acts or parts of acts, either Federal or Territorial, in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD in this connection a letter from the Assistant Attorney General, Seth W. Richardson.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, May 2, 1932.

Hon. HIRAM BINGHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing you with respect to the bill which you introduced some weeks ago, repealing all Territorial laws which permit a second jury disagreement to operate as an acquittal in criminal cases in Hawaii.

After the bill in question was introduced in the Senate, Governor Judd reported that a similar bill had been introduced in the Territorial legislature, but examination of the proposed Territorial bill specifically makes the new act inapplicable to pending cases, while the bill which is now before the Senate applies to pending cases. This is a very material difference between the two bills.

With the verdict which has just been returned in the so-called Fortescue case, the prosecuting attorney in Honolulu is now confronted with the necessity of retrying the so-called Massie rape case. In this case there has already been one disagreement. If upon a retrial of this case even a single juror should refuse to convict, a disagreement would result, which disagreement, under existing law would operate as an acquittal of these defendants. This procedure ought not to be. The question of a retrial of a case in which there has been a disagreement should be left to the sound judgment of the prosecuting attorney and perhaps the court.

I am advised that a retrial of the Massie rape case may come up within the next week or 10 days. If the pending bill before the Senate is to be passed, it ought to be passed instantly so as to take effect before the retrial commences.

I think you should bring the matter to the attention of the Senate, and, therefore, to the country at large, in order that serious attention be given to the exigency thus presented. I am,

Yours truly,

SETH W. RICHARDSON.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, at the commencement of the session I introduced in the Senate a bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London treaties. The bill was favorably reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs on the 24th day of February. In the meanwhile, on the 1st day of February, I made a speech in the Senate setting forth the need for the passage of the bill, printing with my speech certain tables having to do with the Navy of this country and the navies of the other four powers parties to the Washington treaty. Those tables are in printed form and are now in the possession of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and any Senator who would like to avail himself of the information therein contained can obtain a copy of the tables.

I can give in a few words the situation which now confronts our Navy. A treaty navy consists of substantially 200 combatant vessels. At the present time we have on the Navy list 373 combatant vessels, but under the terms of the treaties by the expiration of the year 1936 the number of vessels will have to be cut down to substantially 200. The extreme modern life of a combatant vessel as defined by the Washington and London treaties is 20 years. Therefore if we are to keep our Navy in modern vessels the whole Navy must be replaced within that time. This would mean that an average of 10 combatant vessels must be built each year of the 20 years. During the last 10 years, from 1922 to 1932, we have laid down or contracted for but 27 vessels in all, which is less than 3 vessels per year.

While we have refrained from building ships, all the other nations, parties to the treaties, have built extensively. By the expiration of the year 1936, the date of the expiration of the London treaty, we shall have but 68 modern ships in our Navy out of an authorized 200.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. There is so much commotion in the Senate Chamber that I did not hear what the Senator from Maine said. He may have already answered the question I am going to ask, but I did not hear him do so. What is the amount of money authorized to be appropriated by this bill?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is a matter that is indeterminate; there is no time limit fixed in the bill. Should the bill become a law, and should it be decided to build our Navy up to treaty strength by the end of the year 1936, which would obviously be impossible, the cost would be, in round numbers, $786,000,000. Should we take 10 years as recommended by the Navy, the cost would be, in round numbers, about $980,000,000. Should we take the full time to build up the Navy, namely, 20 years, we should have to replace the whole Navy, and the cost of that would be about $1,900,000,000, something under $2,000,000,000. It would depend entirely upon what action was taken by Congress in appropriating for the ships as to what the cost would be.

Mr. NORRIS. If nothing is going to be done under the authorization, and it is to be left to Congress, why should we not meet the conditions as we come to them?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, something undoubtedly will be done, as I shall proceed to show. Unless we take some action of this kind, we are going to be in a position during the next few years where we can not do any building at all. However, I will explain that to the Senator in the course of my remarks.

As I have stated, we shall have 68 modern ships only out of 200 at the expiration of the London treaty in 1936. At that time Japan, if she finishes building the ships she has authorized and appropriated for, will have 156 modern combatant ships out of 163 allowed her under the treaty; that is to say, she will be within 7 ships of having her full complement of modern ships, and will actually have more than twice as many modern ships in her navy as we ourselves will have. At the same time Great Britain will have 119 modern ships, nearly twice as many as we will have. France will have 153 modern ships, or within 3 of the number that Japan will have. Italy will have 115 modern ships, which is almost twice as many as we ourselves will have.

Mr. President, before any ships can be appropriated for, and before the Budget Bureau can make any recommendation for appropriations, legislative authorization for building is necessary. To meet this situation in part, last year a modest building program was sent to Congress, with the approval of the President of the United States. This modest building program received the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs of both the House and the Senate; but, unfortunately, due to the pressure of legislation last year, it was not possible to take any action and nothing was done. This year, as I have said, I introduced Senate bill 51. There is no time limit in the bill, as I have explained to the Senator from Nebraska, and the building under the authorization can take place at any time in the future.

Senators will recall that the great 1916 building program had a specified date in its original form within which the ships contemplated by the program must be built, but that date was later cut out, so that the time for building was left indeterminate. Under that program there are still ships that have not been constructed, but the authorization for those ships is there. Last year the Appropriations Committee recommended an appropration for 11 destroyers. Those 11 destroyers came in under the authorization of the 1916 program.

Unless the bill which I am asking the Senate to take up, or the Vinson bill, which is in the House of Representatives, shall become a law, the Budget Bureau next year, when it attempts to allocate the funds of the Government, can not take into consideration the needs of the Navy and can not make any recommendations for appropriations; and next year, Mr. President, we shall confront the same condition that confronted us last year. We shall have a short session, and it is doubtful if we will be able against opposition to put through any naval legislation. If this bill shall become a law, with the financial conditions as they are now in the country, it is obviously going to be impossible in this year's bill providing appropriations for next year to include any appropriations under the authorization of this bill, and any appropriations that may be made under next year's appropriation bill will enable us at the utmost to finish only a few ships of the smaller categories before the close of the year 1936. Meanwhile every year, through the ships of the Navy becoming over age, the Navy is getting into a worse and worse condition. I maintain that this is a shameful situation for a great country like this to get into, and it is in no way what the other naval powers of the world are doing.

This bill may not meet the approval of the Senate. If it does not, the Senate can reject it, or, if amendments are found to be necessary, the bill can be amended; but at least I say that, in a matter which is of the vital importance that this is to the national defense of the country, the Senate ought to have an opportunity to act upon the bill, and Congress, which is charged with providing and maintaining a Navy, and which is alone so charged, should have an opportunity to decide whether or not it is going to allow the Navy to go on the rocks.

Now, Mr. President, I ask for a vote on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 51.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the bill, the title of which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Schall
Austin	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Black	Fess	Lewis	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Long	Stephens
Bratton	George	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Cohen	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	Waterman
Coolidge	Howell	Pittman	Watson
Copeland	Hull	Reed	White
Costigan	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand it, the motion now pending is to take up for consideration Senate bill 51, which provides that the President shall be authorized to proceed to build up the Navy in accordance with the treaties.

As I understood the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] during his address, he stated that there would be no intention, if the bill should be passed, of undertaking this work during the present year at least. If I am not right about that, I would like to be corrected.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely right about it.

Mr. NORRIS. How soon does the Senator think we would proceed?

Mr. HALE. I concede that it would obviously be impossible to get any action from Congress that would provide for additional appropriations for the present year.

Mr. NORRIS. How soon does the Senator think we would proceed to act under the bill, if we should pass it now?

Mr. HALE. I think in next year's appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That would be at least a year from now?

Mr. HALE. Yes; it would be at least a year from now, and in the meantime, as I explained to the Senate, the Bureau of the Budget, in making its allocations of the funds of the Government the coming summer, would take into consideration the needs of the Navy, and provide for the use of a certain amount of the funds for naval construction.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the Budget could commence to take into consideration the fact that we would probably use some money for this purpose next year, and cut out some other appropriations even this year?

Mr. HALE. I do not know how they would do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know how they would provide for this activity unless they did something of the kind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Is it the intention of the Senator from Maine to urge any appropriations whatever for this purpose this year?

Mr. HALE. The Senator means in the coming appropriation bill? No; there is no such intention.

Mr. BORAH. For this fiscal year?

Mr. HALE. I have no such idea in mind whatever. I would like to see appropriations made, but I realize the impossibility of getting that done.

Mr. BORAH. Knowing the Senator's capacity for doing these things, I would like to know whether he intends to try or not.

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; I have stated that I do not.

Mr. NORRIS. That being true, Mr. President, and accepting the Senator's statement at 100 per cent, which, of course, I do, I see no necessity for passing this bill at this time. I see no necessity of taking up the time of the Senate in the discussion which would follow if this motion should prevail, and we should take the bill up. It would undoubtedly lead to a long and, perhaps, wearisome debate; and when we know in advance that even those who favor the legislation do not expect that the Government will undertake during the next year to have anything done under this bill, why not take up something of vital importance, some of the various bills now pending on the calendar, which we ought to pass, many of which everybody realizes will have to be passed before we adjourn? Everybody also realizes that we will probably be short of time before we carry out the program for the session. Why waste the time of the Congress now in debating a bill when we realize that even though it should be passed, nothing would be done under it for a year? Why not wait and bring the bill up when it is expected something will be done under it?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that if we do not take any action on the bill at this time, and the Budget therefore can not make any recommendations for next year, there will be any possibility of getting the matter in next year's appropriations?

Mr. NORRIS. My opinion about it would depend somewhat on whether present conditions continue as they are. It might be that I would be as much opposed to taking it up next year as I am now.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a different notion about it from that of the Senator from Nebraska; but I am wondering why we should take up this particular bill at this time, when a little more than three years from now we will be free to build the kind of a navy we want. As I understand, if we were to authorize this program, we would have to build the kind of a navy other nations, which may be our competitors at some future time, want us to build, but if we just wait two or three years—and we can very readily wait that long under present conditions—we can build a navy which our own defenders think is the proper kind of a navy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield again?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Tennessee knows that in all probability the London treaty will be continued along from year to year.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be, Mr. President, but I am going to use every effort in my power to prevent it continuing.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are confronted now, as everybody knows, with a condition such as has never before confronted us. While we do not agree as to how we can properly economize and yet meet the expenses of the Government, everybody concedes that we ought to do everything we can, and we are trying to do everything we can. We must not only increase taxation to a point where it is going to be burdensome, is going to be a hardship, but we must likewise, on the other side of the ledger, cut the expenses of the Government where that will mean a burden. No one denies but that these burdens are going to be terrible within the next two or three years. Yet we are confronted with the proposition here of authorizing the enlargement of our Naval Establishment, which will go on for years, as the Senator has said, depending upon how rapidly we proceed with it, and may amount to $750,000,000 in a year, or probably more; we are asked to do this at a time when it is conceded that, as long as we are in this awful depression, we will be unable to do it.

The Senator does say—and I think to that extent he let the cat out of the bag—that if we will pass this bill now, the Budget will take into consideration next year, or even this year, in connection with anything they are budgeting, the fact that in a year or two we are to start out on this enormous enlargement of our Naval Establishment. So that if we pass the bill, it will, in some degree at least, affect the appropriations and the levying of taxes during the present session of the Congress.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator speaks about the enlargement of our Naval Establishment. There will be very little enlargement of the Naval Establishment under this bill. What we have to do is to keep up what we have, and that is what we are not doing. By not building new ships we are allowing our Navy to go absolutely on the rocks.

Mr. NORRIS. But we do not propose to even keep it up this year, according to the Senator's own statement.

Mr. HALE. I would like to keep it up this year, though I foresee that it will be impossible to do so; but at least we can appropriate in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we all realize that there are lots of things we would like to do, and that we would not be justified in doing now. There are lots of bills we are going to vote for, in the way of levying taxes, in the way of cutting down appropriations for necessary activities of the Government, which we dislike to vote for, which under ordinary circumstances we would not vote for. And now, if we pass this bill, we will confront ourselves with an enlargement of national expenses along a line upon which there will be great disagreement. I am finding no fault with the Senator from Maine because he believes in enlarging the Navy, but I would rather feed people than build battleships. I do not believe under the circumstances that we ought to allow ourselves, however much we may think we ought to have more of them, to provide for them at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Assuming that the program should go forward as the Senator from Maine contemplates it should, but at the same time saying he does not intend to do anything this year, what is the real necessity for passing the bill at this time?

Mr. HALE. I have just shown it. Unless we pass the bill at this time, we will be in exactly the same position next year that we were in last year and are in now. Congress can not appropriate until the authorization has been made, and the Budget can not make any recommendation until the authorization has been made.

Mr. NORRIS. But suppose we push the calendar ahead a year; if the Senator had his bill up a year from to-day, would not that be time enough?

Mr. HALE. I have just shown, according to the figures I have given, that even if we go ahead next year and legislate and appropriate, by the end of 1936 we can not have more than one-third of the vessels in our Navy that are modern ships. Each year more ships are becoming overage.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator said we are going to pass this bill and then take this problem into consideration in our appropriations and in the levying of taxes. We will have this in view, according to the Senator, and we will have it outlined. The Budget will be looking for it, according to the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Unless we do pass the bill, we will not be able to do anything another year. We will have the same situation a year from now that we had last year and that we have now.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that we will want to do anything in another year. I do not see how anybody can tell that now. I wish we could tell, but nobody knows what is going to happen to the present depression. It may be worse next year. We all hope it will be better.

Mr. HALE. Each year our Navy is getting weaker and weaker. While the navies of the other naval powers have been kept up, we alone have not built. We have done very little building since the Washington treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be right about it, but it is a two-sided question. There are people who do not agree with the Senator at all, but I do not want to discuss that now. I am just conceding for the sake of argument that the Senator is right. I know he believes very fervently in the wisdom of the course he is taking, but I have been acting, and I think other Senators have been acting, in the best of faith in relation to the economy program. We are confronted with conditions that puzzle us all. While we do not always agree as to what we should do, I go along with the others even though I think every step may be unwise, believing that in relying upon the judgment of a majority of the Senate for the purpose of practicing economy we can safely follow the lead even though we do not agree with all the things that are being done. But if we are going to embark in something of this kind, I confess I shall probably lose my interest in the economy program. If we are going to broaden out, as I believe this bill contemplates, there will be many people who will lose their interest in the economy program. It seems to me under the Senator's own statement we ought not to take up the bill.

I want to say just a word by way of conclusion about putting the bill on the legislative program. I do not want any one to get the idea that I am criticizing the so-called steering committee for putting it on the program. They do not follow their own judgment, or put on the program only those bills which they favor, but they try to meet what they believe to be the judgment of a majority of the Senate as to what we should consider. I want to help carry out that program. I feel no embarrassment whatever in opposing the Senator from Maine. This is a motion to take up the naval bill. The judgment of the Senate as to whether we ought to take up the bill can be well decided upon the roll call, which I hope will take place on this motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the Senate considering at this time the bill offered by the Senator from Maine, which, in effect, commits the Federal Government to the construction of a large number of war vessels at a cost between $700,000,000 and $1,000,000,000; indeed, it is impossible to determine just what the final cost would be if appropriations were made measuring up to the authorizations contained in the bill. The bill on its face may seem to be innocent to many, but it is not a silken glove but a mailed hand. Back of the measure is the program of the Navy League and some militarists in the United States. The object is to commit the Government to an enormous naval program, while at the same time its representatives are at Geneva participating in a world conference, which seeks, if not world disarmament, at least material reductions in the heavy burdens of militarism resting upon the people. I invite the attention of the Senate to the text of the armament truce, recently entered into by more than 50 nations, one of which was the United States. As I am advised, President Hoover was one of the first to assent to the provisions of the truce, the text of which is as follows:

Convinced that the crisis which at the present time is creating such profound disturbance among the nations of the world is due to a number of economic and political causes originating principally in the lack of mutual confidence between the nations; and

Convinced that a renewal of the competition in armaments would necessarily lead to an international and social catastrophe the assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all those who are desirous that practical effect should be given to the principles of peace and justice upon which the covenant is based and urges them to devote all their efforts toward creating a world opinion strong enough to enable the general disarmament conference to achieve positive results, including in particular a gradual reduction of armaments, to be continued until such time as the object laid down in article 8 of the covenant is attained.

In view of the fact that an undertaking on the part of all States not to increase their armaments would help to create an atmosphere of confidence, to prevent competition in armaments, and to prepare the ground for the success of the forthcoming conference.

The assembly requests the governments invited to the disarmament conference to prepare for this event by means of an armaments truce; and, accordingly,

Requests the council to urge the governments convened to the said conference to give proof of their earnest desire for the successful issue of the efforts to insure and organize peace, and without prejudging the decisions of the conference or the programs or proposals submitted to it by each government, to refrain from any measure involving an increase in their armaments.

Likewise requests the council to ask the governments to state before November 1, 1931, whether they are prepared for a period of one year as from that date to accept this truce in armaments.

Mr. President, this truce went into effect on November 16, 1931, and its life, unless extended, is for one year from that date. I can not understand how any nation giving its approval to the same could adopt any plan that would be equivalent to a renewal of competition in armaments. I particularly invite Senators attention to this sentence in the document just read:

* * * In view of the fact that an understanding on the part of all states not to increase their armaments would help to create an atmosphere of confidence, to prevent competition in armaments, and to prepare the ground for the success of the forthcoming conference. * * *

As I construe the language of the armaments truce, the bill now before us violates not only the spirit but also the letter of the same. It calls for an increase in armaments by authorizing a stupendous appropriation for the construction of naval war vessels. It is true, an authorization is not an appropriation; but, as Senators know, when a law is enacted authorizing an appropriation from the Federal Treasury, the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate regard such authorization as almost equivalent to a command for such appropriation.

The assembly which prepared and agreed upon the armaments truce just read appreciated that if the disarmament conference "could meet in an atmosphere of confidence and good will" the prospects of failure would not be possible.

It was obvious to the assembly, as it must have been to all thoughtful persons, that if when the disarmament conference met, the great powers, as well as other nations, were actively engaged in constructing war vessels or were seeking large appropriations to embark upon naval building programs, there would be an atmosphere of distrust and fear that would make it difficult, if not impossible, to agree upon a disarmament program or any policy looking to the reduction of armies and navies and the costs of military organizations throughout the world. A convention of individuals armed to the teeth called to secure the abolition of arms would scarcely be in a position to plead for peace and to secure satisfactory results.

This language in the text just read is clear and unambiguous; the nations convened were asked to—* * * give proof of their earnest desire for the successful issue of the efforts to insure and organize peace, to refrain from any measure involving an increase in their armaments.

Can it be said that the United States, having assented to this measure, can now in good faith say that the bill before us is consonant with the agreement entered into? Can this bill be construed as complying with the agreement "to refrain from any measure involving an increase in armaments"?

Obviously not.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator familiar with the attitude of the State Department in relation to the truce of armament?

Mr. KING. I may not be fully cognizant of the position of the State Department in regard to this truce, but, having read the truce agreement which was accepted by Mr. Hoover, I should be reluctant to believe that the State Department has attempted to repudiate the acceptance of our Government and to support a policy calculated to make the efforts of the disarmament conference abortive. I can not believe that the State Department would attempt to torpedo the disarmament conference.

Mr. HALE. I do not think we did accept it in the terms in which the Senator thinks we did. As a matter of fact, I think the Italian proposition was originally that no new keels should be laid down for a period of one year commencing November 1, 1931. However, when the matter was put up to the representatives of the other governments they all put in reservations, and the final consensus of opinion was that replacement of ships in the Navy could be made at any time during the truce.

As I had some doubt in my mind about this matter, and as I wanted to be reassured that my bill would not interfere with the year's armament truce, I took the matter up with the Secretary of State. I do not want to take up the Senator's time, but I should like to place his reply before the Senate.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, but I ask the Senator categorically if he denies that Mr. Hoover accepted the truce as it was promulgated by the assembly and approved by the council?

Mr. HALE. Only on condition that the other countries would do the same thing.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator know that the other countries assented to the truce as it was promulgated?

Mr. HALE. No, Mr. President; they assented to it with conditions. I will read the letter from the Secretary of State.

Mr. KING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. The letter was written in reply to a letter from me asking about the effect of the truce:

JANUARY 9, 1932.

Hon. HENRY L. STIMSON,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: In the hearing before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate on the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties, in reply to a question put by me as to the limitations in building brought about by the so-called naval holiday, Admiral Pratt, in explaining a letter of the department acquiescing in the holiday, read to the committee an extract from a letter of yours to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 28, 1931, as follows:

"In so far as can be seen, the proposed truce does not seriously affect the Navy. It permits the completion of ships building or contracted for; it permits replacement building, and it would seem by omission of any provision to the contrary that it permits authorization and appropriation for other vessels provided they are not begun before November 1, 1932."

Admiral Pratt explained to us that it was with this interpretation that the letter of acquiescence of the Navy Department was prepared and sent to you.

It is very important for the Congress to know just what can be done and what can not be done under the naval holiday. Will you please inform me whether your interpretation of the effect of the holiday, as given by you to the Navy Department, represents your views at the present time, and whether, in your opinion, the Congress may accept those views as the correct interpretation of the effects of the naval holiday?

I shall appreciate an early reply, as I want to put my letter to you and your reply thereto into the record of the hearings.

Very sincerely yours,

FREDERICK HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 12, 1932.

Hon. FREDERICK HALE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HALE: I have received your letter of January 9, 1932, and hasten to reply that the following quotation from my letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated October 28, 1931, represented at the time and still represents my opinion of the effects of the year's armaments truce:

"It permits the completion of ships building or contracted for; it permits replacement building, and it would seem by omission of any provision to the contrary that it permits authorization and appropriation for other vessels provided they are not begun before November 1, 1932."

It was on this understanding that, with the acquiescence of the War and Navy Departments, I informed the secretary general of the League of Nations that this Government was prepared, for the period of one year beginning November 1, 1931, to accept the truce, provided that like action was taken by the other principal military and naval powers.

Then I have a further letter from the Secretary of State in which he says:

MY DEAR SENATOR HALE: During my telephone conversation this afternoon you asked me whether or not the terms of the year's armament truce, which entered into effect November 1, 1931, would, in my opinion, preclude the passage of bills during the forthcoming session of Congress authorizing the construction of naval vessels.

It is my understanding that any authorizations which do not involve the use of appropriations before November 1, 1932, would in no way contravene the purpose of the truce, in that such measures would not raise the level of existing armaments during its term.

Mr. President, Japan and France have already since the truce has been in operation laid down vessels which are replacements of existing vessels in their navies, and we are bound only as the other countries are bound.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the interpretation which the Senator is contending for and which he says was placed upon the language of the truce is followed, it makes the truce meaningless; indeed, such interpretation would be tantamount to an authorization for the agreeing nations to engage in new naval construction and to build up to certain levels. The truce would be destroyed by such an interpretation.

Mr. HALE. It is rather meaningless, so far as our Navy is concerned, and the Secretary of State himself says so. He states that, in so far as can be seen, the proposed truce does not seriously affect the Navy.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator at all. Let me read some of the language again.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary of State says that it affects us very little.

Mr. KING. I may not always accept the interpretation of legal or other documents submitted by the State Department.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator——

Mr. KING. While I respect, of course, the views of the Secretary of State, he is not infallible and his interpretation may not appeal to me or to others. I do not agree with the Secretary's view that the armament truce does not—

* * * preclude the passage of bills during the forthcoming session of Congress authorizing the construction of naval vessels—

Nor with the statement—

It is my understanding that any authorizations which do not involve the use of appropriations before November 1, 1932, would in no way contravene the purpose of the truce—

And so forth.

If I understand the position of the Senator and the Secretary of State, it is that the armaments truce does not prevent Congress from enacting legislation authorizing construction of naval vessels; but that if in addition to authorizing their construction an appropriation of several million dollars were made for the purpose of beginning work upon the same, then such legislation would contravene the letter, if not the spirit, of the truce. I confess that I am unable to accept this view. If it would be a violation of the armaments truce for the United States to begin the construction of new naval vessels, then I insist that an authorization to construct them would likewise be in contravention of the truce.

Mr. President, I can not believe that the view expounded by the Senator is sound or will be accepted by the governments who participated with the United States in the truce agreement. I am somewhat surprised at the Senator's statement that the truce agreement is "rather meaningless so far as our Navy is concerned." If it is meaningless, why did it receive the approval of Mr. Hoover? If it was not intended to affect our Navy or the navies of other countries part to the truce, why did they enter into the truce agreement? Was it a delusion and a snare, a mere play upon words, an emotional appeal to nations without any intention that it should be observed or that it should be given any vitality? No wonder that some people entertain the view that nations make treaties and contracts only for the purpose of violating them.

Mr. President, I do not believe that nations are without honor and that this truce agreement was not intended to be effective or designed to prevent the construction of war vessels or the formulation of plans for the construction of war vessels during the life of the agreement. I repeat that if the agreement affects us not at all it was an act of folly and insincerity for our Government and other governments to assent to it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to proceed for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Yes; but I hope the Senator will let me call his attention to the Secretary's letter.

Mr. KING. I want to again call attention to some of the provisions of this agreement. It declares that there is a—crisis at hand which creates profound disturbances among the nations of the world largely resulting from a lack of mutual confidence between nations.

It then declares—

Convinced that a renewal of the competition in armaments would necessarily lead to an international and social catastrophe, the assembly addresses a solemn appeal to all those who are desirous that practical effect should be given to the principles of peace and justice.

And it then urges that nations and peoples devote their—

Efforts toward creating a world opinion strong enough to enable the general disarmament conference to achieve positive results, including in particular a gradual reduction of armaments to be continued until such time as the object laid down in article 8 of the covenant is attained.

It is obvious that the object to be attained is world disarmament. The assembly has declared to the nations that they are to take part in a disarmament conference; that they are not to engage in "competitive armaments," but upon the contrary should do everything possible to bring the nations together in an atmosphere of good will in order that the disarmament conference might be successful. In the light of these clear and solemn declarations I can not comprehend how the Senator or any other person can find reasons to justify measures such as the one before us, or the execution of policies which would build new war vessels under the guise of replacing existing naval vessels. It seems to me that for our Government to commence now the construction of war vessels at a cost of millions of dollars, even though when built such vessels would take the place of existing war vessels, would not be in harmony with the truce agreement; and, as I interpret the words of the armament truce, legislative efforts to build our Navy up to the limits of the London conference would be in contravention of the terms of such truce. Certainly the psychological effect upon the disarmament conference and upon the peoples of the participating nations would be the same as if our Government boldly stated that it intended entering upon a building program outside of and beyond the provisions of the London treaty.

Senators will perceive that the armaments truce sought to secure agreement upon the part of nations which were to take part in the disarmament conference that they would adopt a program for the reduction of armaments which would continue until the goal of world disarmament was attained. Is it reasonable to suppose that the members of the assembly in preparing the truce understood that during the year when the truce was to be in force the nations participating in the disarmament conference might or would embark upon new naval construction either to take the place of existing naval craft or to fill an important place in some naval category?

I am inclined to believe that the truce agreement was not intended to interdict the completion of vessels which were under construction at the time the instrument was prepared, but I can not accept the view that it was intended that the truce should bear the construction that new vessels were authorized or that appropriations might be made for the building of new naval craft. The Senator's position, as I understand, is that the passage of the measure before us would not ipso facto increase our naval strength, and therefore it is not within the letter or spirit of the truce agreement. Conceding that view to be true—but I do not concede it—the psychological effect would be as serious as if a direct appropriation were made of a few million dollars to immediately begin construction of one or more war vessels.

The truce in effect is an undertaking upon the part of nations assenting to the same not to increase their armaments and not to engage in "competition in armaments," and also a promise to prepare the ground for the success of the "forthcoming disarmament conference."

Does not the bill before us contemplate increasing our naval armaments, and does it not provide for "competition in armaments"? The Senator admits that appropriations authorized by the bill would aggregate hundreds of millions of dollars and would be employed in the construction of a large number of war vessels. With such a measure enacted into law can it be said that we are in good faith observing an armaments truce for one year? It seems to me that the question answers itself and would convict us of being truce violators if we enacted the bill so earnestly supported by the Senator from Maine.

Who can doubt that when the representatives of 50 nations assemble in a disarmament conference for the purpose of limiting armaments with a view to ultimately securing world disarmament, that they would not be gravely concerned if information was brought to them that one of the participating nations had enacted a law authorizing an expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars to build war vessels? The passage of this measure, in my opinion, would have unfavorable—indeed, unfortunate—reactions not only at the disarmament conference but in all parts of the world.

Mr. HALE rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HALE. We are not making a truce here in the Senate or defining the terms of a truce. The only obligation that this Government is under is that set forth in the letter written by the Secretary of State to the secretary general of the league, and the Secretary states definitely:

It was on this understanding that, with the acquiescence of the War and Navy Departments, I informed the secretary general of the League of Nations that this Government was prepared, for the period of one year, beginning November 1, 1931, to accept the truce provided, that like action was taken by the other principal military and naval powers.

All the other principal naval powers have provided that the right to make replacements shall be allowed. The Senator does not think, does he, that we ought to deny ourselves the right when other countries have proceeded to exercise the right?

Mr. KING. I shall not now challenge the statement of the Senator as to what other nations are doing, although my information is that since the truce was entered into they have not undertaken new construction. It is quite likely, however, that they are carrying forward work upon vessels, the construction of which was commenced anterior to the date of the truce.

Mr. HALE. There is no question about what they are doing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my understanding is that those nations accepting the truce place upon it the interpretation for which I am contending. Some of them during the past few years have, within the terms of treaties by which they were bound, laid down keels for a number of war vessels, and when the truce was entered into they did not suspend work upon vessels in process of construction.

Mr. HALE. It has been specifically stated by all the principal naval powers that they reserved the right to replace their existing ships. There is nothing in the Senator's contention whatever.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the terms of the London treaty and know that there was a reservation upon the part of certain naval powers that replacements might be made, but I repeat that since the truce was entered into my information is that its terms, as I interpret it, have not been violated and that whatever work is being carried forward in connection with naval construction is for the completion of vessels, the construction of which was begun months, if not years, before the truce was entered into. It may be that Japan and Great Britain have started replacement work, although my information does not support that view.

Mr. HALE. I did not refer to Great Britain, I said Japan and France. They have already gone ahead and started replacements.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. What I want to ask the Senator is this: If we do not build new ships, where in the world are we going to get ships to sink at the next naval conference? We have got to have some ships; we have got to impress the world. It will be remembered how we impressed the world by sinking 845,000 tons of our best ships in 1922; it will be remembered how we impressed the world by sinking nearly one-fourth of what we had left in 1928. We must build ships. Probably we do not need them for our defense; they are not the kind of ships that we ought to have for our defense; but we must have ships, so that when the next naval disarmament conference takes place we can sink them.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah let me read from the British note of acceptance of the truce?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The British note of acceptance of the truce, dated October 29, 1931, paragraph 2, reads:

> 2. While thus notifying their acceptance of the proposed truce His Majesty's Government desire to draw attention to the following passage which occurs in the report of the third committee of the twelfth assembly:
>
> "Certain delegations made a point of stating explicitly that they do not regard as incompatible with the principle thus laid down, which must remain predominant, such measures as the normal carrying out of legal enactments relating to effectives, the regular execution of programs for the upkeep and renewal of land, naval, and air material or fortifications and the constitution of the corresponding stocks."

In so many words they state that they have the right of renewal.

Mr. KING. The statement just read by the Senator is somewhat ambiguous, and without an opportunity to examine it I would not, of course, assert positively that in assenting to the truce the right was reserved to replace naval vessels. As the Senator hastily read it I was impressed with the thought that the intention was merely to make repairs upon existing naval vessels so that they might be maintained in an effective and satisfactory condition. I know that our Government is expending large sums in remodeling war vessels. At the last session of Congress, as I recall, $30,000,000 were appropriated for the purpose of making important changes upon three of our capital ships. I do not think the armaments truce would compel the United States to suspend the repairs which it is making upon these ships. So far as I am advised—and I repeat—since the truce was signed or assented to, the construction of new warships has not been commenced by nations parties to the truce.

If, however, there should be nations that are pushing forward the construction of new warships upon the theory that they are to take the place of vessels that are obsolete or obsolescent, I believe that the effect upon the disarmament conference will be most unfortunate. Moreover, in my view, if nations that were authorized under treaties to make replacements were to feverishly engage in the work of construction, it might influence nations participating in the conference and lead them to oppose a disarmament program approved by other nations participating in the conference if such a program called for a change in the type of ships then under construction.

The disarmament conference should have as few obstacles in its way as possible, and I submit that all nations participating in the conference should seek cooperation and an atmosphere of peace, and, so far as possible, determine to adopt a policy that would not encourage or continue competitive armaments. Why send our representatives to the Geneva conference to work for world peace and a reduction in armaments, if, while they are so engaged, we here in the United States declare our lack of faith in the conference and in effect contribute to an unsuccessful issue by announcing to the world that the United States proposes to go forward and build war vessels costing hundreds of millions and perhaps a billion of dollars between now and 1936?

The Secretary of State recently rushed to Geneva presumably to aid in accomplishing the objects for which the disarmament conference was called. One of the leading Members of this body has been in Geneva for a number of months, together with Mr. Gibson and other delegates from the United States, cooperating with delegates from other nations in attempting to formulate a program to relieve the world of the frightful burdens resulting from military policies and naval armaments. Is this bill before us calculated to impress the conference that we are sincere in protesting our devotion to world peace and world disarmament? Manifestly the reaction would be the reverse, and the delegates undoubtedly would be constrained to seek the reason for the action of this Government in driving forward a measure authorizing a sum so stupendous for naval construction. Is this measure a threat? Is it a bludgeon to compel the conference to adopt a policy looking to disarmament?

Recent statements attributed to some of our delegates would seem to indicate that they are not looking with favor upon the abolition of battleships or a reduction in their tonnage. But I shall not comment further upon these reports. I repeat, however, that, in my opinion, the passage of this measure will be construed by many throughout the world as an evidence of the militaristic spirit upon the part of this Government.

A number of years ago an effort was made to force through Congress the so-called 1915–16 naval bill calling for appropriations of from a billion to a billion and one-half dollars for the construction of the most powerful navy in the world. At that time I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee and I opposed the bill, because I believed that it would impose unnecessary burdens upon the people of the United States and would arouse fears and apprehensions upon the part of other nations and lead them to believe that the United States contemplated a vigorous foreign policy tainted with imperialistic designs. Europe at that time was prostrate, having emerged from the fires of the World War. It seemed to me not only unwise but cruel for the United States to embark upon a naval policy that inevitably would arouse not only distrusts and ill will but perhaps the hatred of other nations. It was suggested by some who favored the bill that it would act as a club to force other nations to reduce their navies. Senators will recall that following the war Great Britain scrapped hundreds of her ships. The German Navy was destroyed. Japan also scrapped a considerable number of her warships. No nation was building war vessels. The world was hungry; poverty and distress existed in nearly every land. The people wanted peace, not war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will recall that all of that was nullified a year or two afterward, when, just as soon as we got this great Navy built, we had the exquisite pleasure of sending it all to the bottom of the sea under a disarmament conference where the only nation to disarm was America.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am sure my friend will forgive me if I do not assent to his view. In my opinion President Harding and Secretary Hughes rendered a great service not only to our country but to all countries in bringing about the 1922 Limitation of Armaments Conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator be good enough to say what results were achieved by that conference? I should like to hear what they were. I do not know that I ever heard them succinctly given before. I should be glad if the Senator would remind us of what was achieved.

Mr. KING. The benefits derived from the conference were numerous and I shall not be able to recount them all at this time. Moreover, a discussion of that conference is not quite germane to the matter under discussion. However, may I add that the moral effect throughout the world was of incalculable value. There are imponderables in life which it may not always be easy to ascertain or fully appraise. The fact is that the world emerging from the great war desired assurances that there would be, at least for many years, no repetition of the horrors of international conflicts. The world was ready for moral leadership and was willing to follow any great nation that evinced its interest in the welfare of the world and was anxious to aid in healing the wounds of war and bringing the world back into the paths of peace and industrial development. The conference of 1922 was an important step in this direction. It convinced nations that the United States did not desire to embark upon an imperialistic policy; that it was desirous of limiting the costs of naval armaments and of preventing further naval competition. It was an important event when the leading nations of the earth sat down together and worked out a cooperative plan to limit naval armament.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the United States Government had not sunk this billion dollars' worth of ships, if there were that many—and they were in that neighborhood, I suppose—does the Senator think we would now be called upon, as we are being called upon by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, to build another billion dollars' worth of ships? It seems to me that if we had retained the brand-new ships that were built at that time, and had not sunk them without any consideration at all—because other nations did not sink theirs—we would not now be called on to spend another billion dollars to bolster up our Navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not concede the premises of my friend. I do not admit that the United States "sunk" a billion dollars' worth of ships.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was 835,000 tons.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not agree with that view. For a moment let me refer to the 1915–16 naval act, which called for 16 capital ships, each of which was to cost approximately $50,000,000. In addition, there were auxiliary naval vessels, the cost of which amounted to a stupendous sum. I have no doubt that if that program had been carried out it would have cost the people of the United States between one and one-quarter and one and one-half billion dollars. When efforts were made to push this program through Congress it excited fears and apprehensions throughout the world. The peoples of other lands could not understand why the United States, professing as it did to desire peace and the triumph of democratic institutions throughout the world, should suddenly seek to construct a Navy not only more powerful than that of any nation in the world but perhaps equal in strength to the navies of the two other greatest naval powers. It was obvious that the United States was arousing not only fears but the enmities of the world. Nations that had gone through the horrors of war and were bound by the chains of debt felt compelled to take steps to meet what they believed to be a challenge upon the part of this Republic, the most powerful Nation in the world.

It is to the credit of President Harding and Secretary Hughes that they foresaw the danger to the peace of the world if our projected naval policy were carried into execution, and the Washington conference of 1922 was the result of their efforts. They deserve well of their countrymen and the peoples of the world for bringing about the Limitation of Armaments Conference.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I dislike to inject myself here; but since the question was asked a while ago whether any concrete advantage had followed the conference to which the Senator is referring, I wonder if I am wrong in my thought that we were then in the midst of a program that would have made us equal on the sea to the combined navies of Great Britain and Germany in capital ships. If we were in the midst of that program, then any conference that would lead to ending the rivalry on the sea I think was a very good result, and I think it may be stated that it did come about, and ended the rivalry that was then in process.

Then it seems that out of that decision we must have saved the taxpayer a considerable burden, and I also think we lessened the chances of war by the action we took. Some people will dispute that, but I rather think we did.

Then I am of opinion that the conference led also to what President Wilson very tardily agreed to in reference to Shantung. I recall that the President stated that the giving over to Japan of Shantung was a thing to which it was very difficult for him to yield. There was a rescission of that also. Then I think the establishment of the machinery for settling disputes that might arise on the sea was a step in the right direction.

So I think the Senator from Utah is correct when he says that concrete advantages came from that conference.

Mr. KING. I substantially agree with all that the Senator has stated. He has referred to the Shantung controversy, which, as the Senator recalls, was a very live issue in the Senate during discussion of the Versailles treaty. I am glad to say that Japan acted in an honorable way in withdrawing from Shantung and surrendering all control and authority over that important part of China.

Mr. President, the Washington conference, though it did not achieve all that many desired, was one of momentous importance. It relieved the world of much of the spirit of fear and the tension that existed in all lands. It brought assurance to nations and led them to hope, if they did not fully believe, that the day of militarism was over and that imperialistic ambitions would no longer dominate nations.

At any rate, it limited the competitive construction of capital ships, and thus relieved the peoples of most nations of enormous military burdens. It must not be forgotten that when efforts were being made to drive through the 1915–16 naval program Japan became alarmed.

Neither Great Britain nor Japan could understand why the United States—the most powerful Nation in the world, strategically invulnerable to attack—should, when the world was prostrate, enter upon a naval policy that would give her undisputed command of the seas. Japan thereupon, when she learned that the United States was to build 16 capital ships as well as auxiliary craft of all categories, laid down a program calling for 8 capital ships together with auxiliary craft. Great Britain, which since the war had not laid a single keel and had scrapped more than a million tons of her war vessels, became agitated and demands were made that she embark upon new naval construction. I repeat that the calling of the Washington conference was an event of supreme importance. Of course I regret that limitations were confined to capital ships. Many hoped that cruisers and submarines and other naval categories would be dealt with, but all admitted that the results of the conference were of the highest importance to all nations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I rather dislike to suggest it, but is it not true that after the two disarmament conferences in which we engaged, and after we had sunk the greater part of our Navy to the bottom of the seas, Japan entered upon exactly the program of which the Senator speaks, and has she not recently been overrunning a large portion of China, without regard to us and without regard to any other nation, because she had a navy able to take care of herself under any circumstances; and has she not become a second Germany, if the Senator wants to describe her that way, so far as militarism is concerned?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can not assent to some of the statements made by the Senator. As a result of the Washington conference we did not sink the greater part of our Navy. As a matter of fact, as I have stated, we scrapped fewer vessels than Great Britain scrapped. It is true that we scrapped a part of capital ships in course of construction upon which had been expended very large sums. We had laid down the keels of a number of capital ships and upon some vessels we had expended 10 per cent of the limited cost and upon others a much larger per cent. My recollection is that our losses in dollars and cents were approximately $300,000,000, but it must be remembered that if we had completed all these vessels we would have burdened the American people to the extent of at least a billion and a quarter dollars. Many of them would have been obsolete or nearly so by this time. We would have expended a hundred million dollars in their maintenance and in an enlarged naval personnel. We would have been compelled to build larger docks, reconstruct many of our harbors to receive these leviathians of the deep, and expend tens of millions of dollars in the construction of shipyards.

Japan also scrapped a number of her war-vessels and, as I have indicated, abandoned her naval program, which in part consisted of eight capital ships. I am not in accord with the Senator that Japan entered upon a program of imperialism or that she has become a second Germany "so far as militarism is concerned." I do not care to comment at this time upon Japan's recent and present course in Manchuria and in China. I express the hope—as we all do—that peace will come to the Orient; that Japan and China will compose their differences; and that China, distracted and disturbed, may soon be in the enjoyment of peace and be free from internal and external dangers.

Mr. President, I am sure that the American people sincerely desire that the disarmament conference now in session at Geneva will bring important results to the world. The recent London conference was disappointing, but I hope that the Geneva conference will go far in relieving the world from naval armaments and will formulate a policy that will progressively reduce armaments until the world will no longer be an armed camp.

The world to-day is praying for peace, and everywhere there are protests against the heavy exactions for military preparations. This Nation, intrenched as it is and secure from attack, is in a position to lead the world. If it sets an example, the world will follow; but so long as we are expending from one to two hundred millions of dollars a year more for our Army and Navy than are expended by any other country in the world, there will be those who will question our sincerity and look upon us as not being free from unworthy ambitions.

I have before me an address recently made by Mr. Grandi, the representative of Italy at the Geneva conference, which indicates the willingness of Italy to abolish battleships and reduce her naval strength in harmony with the actions of other nations. Mr. MacDonald has said that Great Britain would join with other nations in reducing to the lowest limits naval armaments.

I recently read a statement to the effect that Great Britain has cut her appropriations for the navy for the next fiscal year, but we are asked to authorize hundreds of millions for new construction and also appropriate more than $300,000,000 for the ordinary expenses of the Navy for the next fiscal year.

While our representatives are at Geneva, I hope sincerely for the purpose of effecting a reduction in the armaments of the world, I think it would be a fatal mistake for the Congress of the United States to pass a bill declaring that we propose to avail ourselves of the limitations provided in the London treaty and construct new naval craft which will cost approximately a billion dollars.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if we do such a thing we will subject ourselves to the charge of insincerity and hypocrisy. I can not conceive of the reason for the attitude of my friend in his effort to drive through the Senate a bill committing us to the expenditure of that sum. Of course, he argues, and argues correctly, that when an authorization is made, then the Committee on Appropriations are in duty bound to make the appropriation. How often Senators rise and say, "This is only an authorization," but when interrogated they will admit that when obtained the Committee on Appropriations will feel constrained to report the appropriation authorized.

So, it seems to me, Mr. President, it is a sort of legerdemain performance when we say, "Oh, this does not mean much," and yet we know that when we pass the bill the department can go before the Appropriations Committee and that committee will be in duty bound to report an appropriation for the execution of the authorization.

I am opposed to taking up the bill at this time. It will be time enough to consider it when we learn the result of the Geneva conference. Suppose a spirit of world disarmament and of peace takes possession of the conference and a plan is agreed upon that changes the form of navies and naval craft and calls for reductions and modifications. We will meet again next December, and we can then make such appropriations as the exigencies of the case may call for. By refusing to pass the bill now we are, in the first place, giving notice to the world that we want the disarmament conference to be a success, that we are not hypocritical, that we are not trying to torpedo the conference.

If the conference is a failure and a spirit of militarism takes possession of the hearts of the world and nations enter upon large naval construction, we will then be at liberty to enact such measures as the situation calls for. By taking that course, as I said, we will contribute to the success of the conference and we will not postpone by one hour the realization of the hopes of the Senator from Maine which contemplate construction and not mere authorization. So, Mr. President, I shall vote against taking up the measure because I think it is inopportune, most unwise, and because the effect would be discouraging to our delegates and harmful to the success of the conference.

ANNIVERSARY OF WASHINGTON'S INAUGURATION

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, it had been my intention on last Saturday to say something with reference to the one hundred and forty-third anniversary of the inauguration of Washington, which was observed in New York in rather an unusual manner, as was the anniversary of the inauguration of the Constitution. One of the great celebrations of this year took place Saturday in the metropolitan city of the country.

In 1889, which was the one hundredth anniversary of the putting into effect of the Constitution, the New York Independent, which from the days of the Civil War and even before then, had been a very notable publication in the metropolis of the country, printed a very remarkable symposium on Washington, estimating 100 years after Washington had been inaugurated what he had contributed to the civilization of the world, and especially in the form of popular government here in the New World.

A year or so ago I asked the New York Times if it would do a similar service to the country this one hundred and forty-third anniversary that had been done by the New York Independent on the one-hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of the President. The Times did a very remarkable piece of work, but of a little different type. I sent to the Library of Congress for the number of the Independent issued on the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of Washington in order to get some of the opinions, a few of which I want to include in the RECORD to-day.

I shall only quote the opinions of British statesmen, which will be interesting, because the American Revolution apparently was against the British Government. Really it was not. Really it was against an obstinate British King. It will be recalled that of the 28 counts in the Declaration of Independence all but 2 began with the personal pronoun "he," referring to George III, and only 2 of those counts referred to Parliament, so that it was not a declaration against the British nation so much as against an obstinate British King. I want the people of the country to-day to have their minds refreshed by the opinions of British statesmen as expressed 100 years after Washington was inaugurated.

I am going to read a short statement from William E. Gladstone. This was on January 10, 1889.

All I can say is that I look upon Washington among great and good men as one peculiarly good and great; and that he has been to me for more than 40 years a light upon the path of life.

That statement was uttered by a man who spent 63 years in the Parliament of Great Britain and was four times Prime Minister of Great Britain and six times Chancellor of the Exchequer, a record that has never been equaled in British history.

Here is another:

Both the pleasant recollection of our past relations and a sense of gratitude I owe you for your generous sympathy for my country I experienced when 37 years ago I, a poor, wandering exile, pleaded its cause before the liberty-loving people of your great Republic, that stupendous incarnation of pure democratic principle which has the providential nation to guide the future ages of mankind on the road of infinite progress, make me most sincerely regret that my extreme old age (87 years), the infirmities naturally inherent to it, the more than a quarter of a century's disuse of writing anything for publication in English, and the habitude of reserve grown to a second nature by my absolute seclusion from all social intercourse, compel me respectfully to decline the honor which, overestimating my abilities, you are kind enough to proffer to me.

I am conscious that the poor remnant of forces still left to me would be utterly inadequate to satisfy you and condignly to answer the high dignity of the solemn occasion which prompted your request.

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

He was the refugee who came to America in 1852 out of Hungary. The only opinion outside of the British opinion that I want to read is from Louis Philippe. He said:

I admired him as a soldier and a statesman when, under the flag of the Union during the great crisis of the Civil War, I followed his footsteps mixed with those of Rochambeau around the ditches of Yorktown. I admire him still more now that I have seen how republican institutions are understood and practiced in France.

That is the French opinion. One of the not spectacular but vitalizing influences in the literary life of Great Britain as well as historical is Justin McCarthy, author of a History of Our Own Times and a member of Parliament from Ireland. The one thing that I remember most distinctly about Justin McCarthy was that as a reporter he reported some of the proceedings of the British Parliament, and, among others, referred to the experience of a reporter with the Duke of Wellington. The duke had been opposing some measure in which the Government was interested. The head of the Government rose and criticized the duke by saying that he regretted to say he did not think the duke had even read the bill, at least he did not seem to understand it. The duke's classic reply was, "I read it through once, I read it through twice, I read it through a third time, and if I do not understand it I must be a damned fool." That is the famous classical reply of the Duke of Wellington to a critic, and this incident is mentioned by Justin McCarthy. McCarthy, suffice it to say, puts Washington as one of the greatest names in history written in England. He said:

Washington's nature had a moral greatness, a poised and balanced perfection about it which can be found in no other figure, however heroic and grand, that lives in the history of war and politics.

There certainly is no higher estimate to be placed upon any figure than that of Justin McCarthy. I desire to confine myself entirely to the utterances of foreign statesmen, and mostly to British. One of the very best statements made is by Goldwin Smith, once a professor of history in Oxford and later a professor in Canada and a very notable author. Among other things he said:

Whether they will ever get back again by another road is the secret of the political future. But we most repeat that if the American Commonwealth as it exists or anything that resembles it in any other country is the ideal, and if Washington was really its founder, he builded much better than he knew.

I would not question the judgment of a great statesman, but I sometimes think that Washington was the one man that did have a comprehension of what the Nation might be. When other people in the convention ridiculed the idea that the Government might last 40 years, Washington was the man who indicated that it was to be perpetual. One of his outstanding statements in his Farewell Address was where he referred to this country in due time becoming a great Nation.

One other and only one other statement do I want to quote, and that is from the famous Edward A. Freeman, who was professor of modern history in Oxford University and a very fluent writer. One of his best books is entitled "Washington, the Expander of England," in which he indicated that our own Government is not engrafted upon the British system but represents principles of an Anglo-Saxon democracy developed to maturity in the New World unhindered by the customs that had fastened themselves upon the mother country, a magnificent statement of a great historian. I would like to put in the RECORD this statement from Edward A. Freeman. He said:

It was called "George Washington, the Expander of England." Later, again, when I was asked to write an article in a British periodical, I chose a subject suggested by some remarks of Mr. Lowell. I then, in treating of the growth of great men, picked two men out of the whole history of the English folk as most typical of one form of greatness. The two were Alfred, King of the West Saxons, and the first President of the United States.

Mr. President, in these hectic times, when we are discussing the subject of economic rehabilitation, the question of national defense, and so on, it is not inappropriate for us, on an anniversary occasion, at least, to take just a little time to recall to mind the opinions of Washington expressed by great men 100 years after he was inaugurated. I have read from utterances of men delivered in 1889, and this happens to be the one hundred and forty-third anniversary of Washington's inauguration, and 1932 also marks the two hundredth anniversary of his birth. New York having provided a very wonderful celebration on Saturday commemorating the event of his inauguration, I thought it would not be out of place for me to say something on this occasion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. When the question of the celebration of the bicentennial of Washington was before the Senate some time ago I suggested to the Senator from Ohio the advisability of preparing a small, cheap edition of Washington's selected works for the purpose of distributing it generally throughout the United States. Has anything been done in regard to that suggestion?

Mr. FESS. The committee on program, which meets every second week, took the matter up immediately after the Senator from Idaho made the suggestion and authorized me to consult with Doctor Fitzpatrick, formerly connected with the Library of Congress, who probably is the best-informed scholar on Washington, and to ask him whether that could be done. He stated that it could be done, but that it would be a little difficult to select what should be inserted in such a work. He expressed a very happy willingness to do it if we should give him the authority. We talked the matter over but did not come to any conclusion whether or not we ought to authorize the work to be done, because it would entail considerable additional expense.

Mr. BORAH. How much additional expense would it entail?

Mr. FESS. Doctor Fitzpatrick did not object to doing the work, of course, but suggested it would involve considerable expense. I have no idea what the expense would be. We should have to get that information from the printer.

Mr. BORAH. I think what I suggested would be one of the most commendable ways in which to commemorate the life of Washington.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator from Idaho feels that we could get the authorization for the additional expense, we would give the authority to go ahead with the work.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I should like to know, if we could get a reasonable estimate, what the additional expense would be.

Mr. FESS. I think I can get that information.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I suggest to the Senator that while the commission is investigating the cost of compiling and printing a selected list of George Washington's writings or addresses, it inquire as to the probable cost of printing and sending to the schools of the United States, in a separate pamphlet, what I consider one of the greatest of American documents—President Washington's Farewell Address. I think that document ought to be in the hands of the pupils of the schools of the United States. Some years ago we appropriated money to send to the school children a copy of the Declaration of Independence, which, in my judgment, was a very fine thing to do. I think Washington's Farewell Address is on a par with the Declaration of Independence, and I wish the commission would investigate the probable cost of sending that document to the school children of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator mean that it be sent to each school child or to each school?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think that there should be a sufficient number of copies to enable one to be sent to each schoolroom.

Mr. FESS. Information as to the cost of doing that could be very easily obtained. The Farewell Address has been pretty generally printed, but it has never been attempted to distribute it in the way suggested by the Senator from Minnesota. I could obtain very easily, I think, the information as to how much it would cost to carry out the Senator's suggestion.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Schall
Austin	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Black	Fess	Lewis	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Long	Stephens
Bratton	George	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Cohen	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	Waterman
Coolidge	Howell	Pittman	Watson
Copeland	Hull	Reed	White
Costigan	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine.

POSTAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am going to detain the Senate for just a moment to refer to a statement that was given out by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] on yesterday, and another statement which was given out by the Postmaster General, I believe, on Saturday.

I submit a copy of a statement that is signed by Senator TASKER L. ODDIE, chairman of the Subcommittee on Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Bill, and signed by him as such chairman. He gives out a statement furnishing a tabulation of how many post-office employees will be discharged if the 10 per cent reduction is made in the Post Office Department. The fact that Senator ODDIE is chairman of the Post Office Committee also gives the statement additional weight.

Mr. President, I want to say that it will be absolutely unnecessary to discharge a single employee in the Post Office Department if the 10 per cent rule is adopted. Substantially the entire 10 per cent reduction can be effected by reducing three items. Besides, there are numerous other economies which can be effected without injury to the service. I now speak of the three items.

If the subsidies for ocean mail be cut off and a reasonable amount only paid for the cost of transportation of such mail, there will be a saving of $35,000,000 in this one item alone. The proof in the record is overwhelming that 39 of the 44 contracts are absolutely void, and the Government is under no obligation to pay a dollar under them.

These companies do not need this legalized graft. There is no obligation to pay it on the part of the Government, because the contracts are void, and it will be a crying shame upon the American people to require these subsidies to be further paid.

In the next place, we are paying, in round numbers, $20,000,000 as subsidies to the air companies for carrying both day and night mail. Under the contracts—and whether they are valid or not I can not now say—the Postmaster General can do away with either day or night flying. If he does away with day flying, another saving of $10,000,000 can be had.

In addition to that, there is a provision in the revenue bill to increase the postal rates on magazines so as to make that function of the Post Office Department self-sustaining. This will enable a reduction of $25,000,000 more. It can be effected without difficulty on this appropriation bill.

So it is seen that these three items alone, all of them subsidies, can be stricken out, and a 10 per cent reduction secured. Of course, if the Senator from Nevada and Postmaster General Brown prefer to pay these illegal subsidies, and by preference want to discharge employees, that is a matter for them and for the Congress. The Congress will have to direct it to be done before the Postmaster General can discharge these employees. In my judgment, the Postmaster General is unfair in trying to create an impression that the 10 per cent reduction means a discharge of employees. It does not mean any such thing. I have no doubt in my own mind that the Postmaster General would prefer to discharge employees rather than to cut off the subsidies that he has established, although in my judgment 39 out of 44 of them are absolutely illegal. However, until the Congress directs him to do so, the Postmaster General has no power to discharge employees.

These are the facts; and I hope the newspapers will publish them, in order that the public may know the true facts.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in this connection, as a part of my remarks, a copy of the letter of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] of date May 1, 1932, in which he attempts to show that some 58,000 postal employees will be discharged if this 10 per cent reduction is carried out. Of course there is not going to be any such discharge of employees.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. There could not be if the reduction were all applied in that way; but there is no purpose to apply it in that way. It ought not to be applied in that way.

If the Senator will pardon me, I am going to stop here long enough to say that there is the United Fruit Co. drawing somewhere in the neighborhood of a million dollars a year in a subsidy from the Government for carrying an inconsequential amount of mail.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield, and to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment, and then I will yield to the Senators. That, it will be remembered, is the contract where the advertisement, without authority of law, specified that the ships must have refrigerator space in order to carry the mails. What for? Because they need refrigerator space to carry the mails? Not at all; but because that particular company was slated for the contract, and the Post Office Department put the refrigerator-space provision in it so as to prevent any other company from securing the contract. The vice president of the company came before the Appropriations Committee. His name was Doswell; and, if I recollect the examination, it was something like this:

Mr. Doswell, your company has refrigerator space in its steamers?
Yes, sir; and we are the only company in the world that has refrigerator space.
Do you have to have this money in order to get along?
Oh, no, sir!
What is the value of your company, Mr. Doswell?
From $200,000,000 to $250,000,000.
Are you paying dividends as usual?
Yes, sir.
You have debts, I suppose?
Oh, no, sir!
You have a bonded indebtedness on your plant, I suppose.
Oh, no, sir! We owe no money. We are in fine shape.

And yet the Government is giving, by way of a subsidy, something like a million dollars a year to a company like that under this alleged contract! At a time when we have some eight millions of people out of employment in America, we are devoting the funds of the people to measures like that; and yet the Postmaster General and the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge are saying that we can not effect the saving to which reference has been made without turning off employees!

I am opposed to turning off employees. I say this cut can be made, but it ought to be made out of the legalized graft which is now going on, for that is all it is.

I now yield to the Senator from New York; and I will yield to the Senator from Idaho in just a moment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I understand, then, that the Senator who is pleading so ardently for a 10 per cent reduction desires to defend himself against the charge——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken. I have no defense to make. I am standing here in my right as a Senator, telling the Senate what I believe is the right course of conduct. I am not on the defensive.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. As I said, the Senator is defending himself——

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about that, because I am not defending myself. If the Senator considers that I am, he has misinterpreted what I have had to say.

Mr. COPELAND. At any rate, rather than have any reduction of salaries the Senator would have the Government abrogate its solemn contracts?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator had heard me, if he had listened to me for a moment, he would know that I say as a lawyer that 39 of these 44 contracts are absolutely void. They are not binding on the Government. They ought not to be carried out, or attempted to be carried out, by any official of the Government. I am not in favor of abrogating any solemn contract of the Government. I do not propose to have it done. It ought not to be done if a contract has been made; but 39 of these alleged contracts are void, as demonstrated by provisions of the advertisements under which these shipping companies got the contracts at the highest rates. Why? Because there was no competition. The matter was arranged so that there should not be competition, and I say they are not contracts. They are not only not solemn contracts but they are not contracts of any kind, and they are not binding on the American people or on the American Government. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to stand on that proposition.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that lawyers are not unlike doctors. Doctors sometimes find themselves mistaken in their diagnoses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; and so do lawyers.

Mr. COPELAND. I have been advised by other lawyers, possibly not so well qualified to speak, that these contracts are perfectly legal.

Mr. McKELLAR. I take it that some of the lawyers who have advised the Senator have more knowledge about shipping contracts than I have.

Mr. COPELAND. I think, however, that the Senator leaves a very wrong impression. I hold no brief for the United Fruit Co. It so happens that it is not a New York corporation; but we passed here the Jones-White Act to upbuild the American merchant marine. Before the Post Office Department makes a contract with any one of these concerns, it has the concern sign on the dotted line an agreement that it will invest its money in the upbuilding of the American merchant marine by building new ships. That is a part of the consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not want to make a speech in my time. I shall be through in a moment, and then I will yield the floor to him and let him make his speech; but he talks about building up the American merchant marine. Take this very concern, the United Fruit Co. It flies more foreign flags than American flags. The majority of its ships fly foreign flags and run in competition with American ships; and yet we are subsidizing that company.

I call the Senator's attention to a concern in his own State, the International Mercantile Marine. It is drawing subsidies, under a purchase it has recently made, from the American Government; and yet it is under a contract—"a solemn contract," to use words of the Senator from New York—in the event of war to turn over its ships to the British Government. Yet we are paying that company a subsidy.

A number of these companies not only have illegal contracts but they have ships flying foreign flags; yet we are paying them these subsidies, and the Postmaster General is trying to defend the situation by saying that if this 10 per cent reduction becomes law, he will have to discharge employees. There is no use in discharging them at all.

Mr. President, at this point I desire to submit as a part of my remarks a statement of payments made under ocean mail contracts, which I ask every Senator here to read tomorrow morning. It is not long. It unfolds a tale that every Senator ought to know before this bill is finally passed on. The normal transportation, the value of mail carried, and the amount that was paid are stated here. I will read just one or two of them to show the Senate the sort of situation we have confronting us.

Since I mentioned the United Fruit Co., I believe I will refer to that company first.

We made a contract with the United Fruit Co., No. 39, on July 30, 1930. We are paying that company $392,860 for carrying $3,000 worth of mail—$3,248 worth of mail, to be exact. If that mail were carried for any other customer in the world that would be the amount to be paid under the international rates. The result of it is that under this particular contract the United Fruit Co. earns $3,248. It receives $392,860, or a bounty or subsidy of $389,612 a year on that one contract; and the purported contract runs for 10 years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The word "subsidy" has a very ugly meaning to me; but I am not sure that this is a subsidy.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will examine the contract, I am sure his legal mind will bring him to that view.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask the Senator to explain just what he means when he says "a subsidy."

Mr. McKELLAR. I mean this: In the year 1928 an act was passed by Congress authorizing the Postmaster General to enter into contracts upon open competition, and agreeing to pay certain amounts for mails carried on that route, whether the ships carried any mail or not. One contractor said that only a hatful of mail was carried on his route, and yet he was getting several hundred thousand dollars a year for carrying that hatful of mail.

I say that it is an absolute subsidy. It was intended as such, evidently, although the word "subsidy" is not in the act.

The United Fruit Co. received $247,600 a year for another line. The third one we have not been able to get the facts about. I do not know that they have been put into the RECORD.

The Tampa Interocean New Orleans and Spain route carried $20 worth of mail last year, according to the rates of the international agreement for the carrying of mail, the Postal Union rates. By the way, I think we are still a member of that union, although we do not use the rates any longer. The line to which I refer carried $20 worth of mail last year; but how much do Senators suppose they were paid for that out of the Federal Treasury? They were paid $438,775.

Mr. BORAH. Was that on a competitive bid?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; practically every bid was arranged so that only one contractor could bid on it.

Mr. BORAH. Arranged among those who were going to bid?

Mr. McKELLAR. Arranged among those who were going to bid.

Mr. BORAH. The Postmaster General did not have anything to do with that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I will give the Senator the facts, and he can draw his own conclusions. I shall refer to the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations. There are other members of the committee in the Chamber at the present time; and if I make a mistake, I hope they will correct me.

The United Fruit Co., for instance, answered three advertisements for three routes, and the advertisements contained a clause to the effect that no bid would be accepted unless the contractor had refrigerator space. Mr. Doswell, the vice president of the company, came before the committee. He was asked, "Mr. Doswell, do you carry mails on those three routes in refrigeration, within the refrigerator space?"

"Oh, no."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. In one moment.

"You do not carry refrigerator space?"

He said, "Senator, we are the only company on the seas that has refrigerator space." They were the only company on the seas, and they bid the highest price on those three contracts. There was no other bidder, and they got the contract.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is the contention of the Senator, then, that these contracts are void by reason of the fraudulent manner in which they were taken and that that fraud consisted of a combination upon the part of the bidders not to bid against each other?

Mr. McKELLAR. That, and the advertisement itself. There is nothing in the law requiring refrigerator space. But when the advertisement says that no bid will be received unless the contractor can furnish refrigerator space, and it is limited to one company, it goes without saying that that is the only bidder there could be. There was no competition, there were no competitive bids, as required by the law, and therefore the contract is void.

Mr. BORAH. These bids were all taken under authority granted by Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but they did not follow the grant of authority. Congress did not confine it to any particular company, but Congress required competitive bidding. The department shut out the competitive bidding. That is the whole story, and it is so with 39 out of the 45 contracts; and I say that before we tax the American people further it is high time we were looking into this matter and cutting out this legalized graft to these companies which do not need it. If we are going to give doles to anybody, for Heaven's sake let us give them to people who need them and not to great corporations which are worth from two hundred to two hundred and fifty million dollars, as one of these testified.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. What relation does refrigeration have to carrying the mails?

Mr. McKELLAR. According to Mr. Doswell, it has nothing in the world to do with it, except that the company of which he was vice president was the only company that had refrigeration, and they wanted his company to have this contract without competitive bids.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Was it the design of the Post Office Department to permit the carrying of perishables by mail?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was not so stated by the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLAINE. If the refrigeration has nothing to do with the carrying of the mails, would not that circumstance of itself point to constructive collusion on the part of the public officials and the company?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is a very proper way to put it, constructive collusion between the Post Office Department and the company.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is it true that refrigeration has nothing to do with the carrying of the mails?

Mr. McKELLAR. I assume it for this reason, that there were 36 other contracts, in many instances the ships going into the Torrid Zone of the world, but there was nothing said about refrigeration when those other contracts were made.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator voted for the bill under which those contracts were made, did he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I voted for it because it was said that it was not a subsidy bill. I had a campaign on, and when I came back I found out it was a subsidy bill, and I voted against the conference report. I am always glad to give the facts just as I find them. It was argued here on this floor, it was argued in the other House that it was not a subsidy act, but when I began to look into it and found that it was, I certainly voted against the conference report, the form in which the bill became a law.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator desires to give all the facts, why does he not tell us why the Post Office Department wanted refrigeration space on those boats?

Mr. McKELLAR. If they furnished the reason, I do not recall it. This is the fact about it. There were 44 contracts in all. All three let to the United Fruit Co. required refrigeration space, and those were the only ones which did make such a requirement, as I recall; and I would be glad to have some Senator correct me if I am wrong. I think the first contract that was let was so arranged that the only company on the seas that could bid was the company that was carrying the mails for the Government on that particular route.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator let me complete my question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly; I do not mean to shut the Senator off.

Mr. COPELAND. Is it not a fact that in upbuilding the American merchant marine, in order that these boats may be auxiliaries to the Navy in time of war, it is important that there should be refrigeration space on some of them so that if we were going into the Tropics we could carry perishables without destruction?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is a mighty far-fetched suggestion, but if it meets the approval of the Senator from New York, I have no quarrel with him.

Mr. COPELAND. It meets my approval.

Mr. McKELLAR. It does not meet mine.

Mr. COPELAND. It meets my full approval, and it met with that of the Senator, because we discussed that at the time.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. COPELAND. These vessels were intended to be built in such a way that in the eventuality of war we would have a way of carrying our troops and our supplies, our butter and eggs and milk, and all of the other perishables, to every part of the earth; and therefore the Postmaster General very properly stipulated that some of these vessels should have refrigeration space, or that they might not have the benefits of the Jones-White Act.

Mr. McKELLAR. I next turn, just for the sake of calling the Senate's attention sharply to the situation, to the contract of the South Atlantic Steamship Co., Savannah to Bremen, January 5, 1929. They carried in a year $75 worth of mail. In other words, the cost of transportation, according to the rates of the International Postal Union, was $75. By the way, although this company's route is in a pretty warm climate, there was a reason why it was not necessary to put refrigeration on those boats. This company could not have gotten it if they had. How much do Senators suppose this company received from the American Government? It received $917,169 a year, and they have a contract, so called, for 10 years.

If I recall the fact aright—and I think I do—one concern bought vessels from the Government that cost our Government $16,000,000, and paid the Government for them about a million dollars, and they are getting more than a million dollars in subsidies for running those very ships.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. I am glad to tell the Senate anything I know about the matter. By the way, I really and earnestly request Senators who are members of the committee, and who heard the testimony, to correct me if I misstate the testimony in the slightest degree.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me, then——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I have yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin. When he has concluded, I will yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. BLAINE. I am interested in this matter of refrigeration on these boats. As I understood the Senator from New York, there was an inducement for building boats for use during war, so that we might have refrigeration on those boats.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. BLAINE. For carrying butter and eggs and strawberries, and things like that, for the soldiers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I can not see the relationship of that to the carrying of the mails at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not. Perhaps some Senators can. The Senator from New York, for instance, says he can, and I yield him that power and privilege, but I just can not see the connection. I asked the vice president of the company what it had to do with it, and he did not know.

Mr. BLAINE. Yet I understand these boats, which are equipped with refrigeration, are boats particularly constructed for tropical waters?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I did not know that there was any anticipation that we were going to have war with any of our southern neighbors.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not on the inside, and can not tell the Senator about that.

Mr. BLAINE. I am interested to get the facts with respect to the necessity for refrigeration on these boats, when we do not put the letters transmitted by mail in an ice box.

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked the officials if they put the letters in an ice box, and they said no, they did not put the mails in the refrigeration space. That is an admission, though I am not sure the Postmaster General agreed to it. But I know Mr. Doswell, the vice president of the United Fruit Co. lines, said, at any event, that they did not carry the mails in the refrigeration space.

Mr. BLAINE. Just one other question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. BLAINE. Was there any showing before the committee as to why it was necessary to have refrigeration on these boats in order to carry mails?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall any. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] says I am mistaken, and I will be glad to be corrected; but I do not recall it. I was doing the examining of Mr. Doswell.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, was this subject investigated by the committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Very vigorously and very actively; and I wish Senators would take the time to examine the report of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations. I think the testimony will be a revelation, such a revelation to the Senate that it will not be seriously contended that these alleged contracts should be further disregarded.

Mr. BORAH. Did the committee make any report?

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not made a report yet. The matter comes before us now in this way: The Postmaster General and the chairman of the subcommittee and the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, my good friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], are trying to make it appear that if reductions of 10 per cent are made in the Post Office appropriation bill, the cuts will have to be made in the salaries of the employees.

I have merely shown the Senate that this legalized graft ought to be cut out first, and that there is ample room for reduction if that is done. There will be $35,000,000 saved in the contracts—$10,000,000 saved in the air contracts, $25,000,000 more saved in magazine transportation. Does the Senate know that out of each 7 cents that it costs to transport a magazine in the United States the Government bears 5 cents of it? It costs the American Government $25,000,000 a year to carry the magazines through the mails, over and above what we receive for that service.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think in all fairness it ought to be stated, and the Senator will recognize the fact, I think, that in the making of these mail contracts the purpose is to build up the American merchant marine so far as we can. The purpose is to enable the ships and the shipping companies which have the mail contracts to continue. In the first place, the contracts afford a means of getting rid of the ships that are costing the Government enormous sums to operate. The Shipping Board wants to sell the ships. A prospective purchaser of the ships has to figure on the foreign mail contracts. Those contracts enable him to compete with foreign vessels in the operation of the ships. When he gets a foreign mail contract, he is able to bid for ships now owned by the Shipping Board.

Not only that but the Shipping Board requires that the purchaser who acquires the ships from the Shipping Board shall enter into an agreement to replace those ships so that when the ships he purchases are worn out or become obsolete we will have new ships or comparatively new ships to take their place, and in that way perpetuate and maintain an American merchant marine.

That is one point. Another point is——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just before the Senator leaves that point let me interrupt him.

Yes; but how is the money supplied? Does the shipowner pay for building the new ships and replacing the old ones? Not at all. There is a revolving fund set up by the Congress amounting to some three or four hundred million dollars, placed in the hands of the Shipping Board to be loaned to the very shipping people who have received the contracts. The Government puts up three-fourths of the money.

One of the shipping companies not long ago said they wanted to build four ships which would cost $7,000,000, or $28,000,000 in all. The Government had to put up $21,000,000 of the $28,000,000. Does any Senator know what they included in that $28,000,000? They included a hotel at one of the ports in a foreign country. They included all the kitchen utensils. They included all the table linen. They included all the furnishings.

Mr. NORRIS. At what rate of interest?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Nebraska asks the rate of interest. I am happy to tell him that some of them got the money at a rate as low as one-fourth of 1 per cent; some of them at three-eighths of 1 per cent; some of them at one-half of 1 per cent; some of them at five-eighths of 1 per cent; some of them at three-fourths of 1 per cent; some of them at seven-eighths of 1 per cent; some of them at 1 per cent; and some unfortunate ones had to pay as much as 1½ per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Terrible!

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; horrible! Think of a shipping company enjoying all these bounties and subsidies at the hands of the Government when we give them our ships—because they have not paid for any of them—and then we give them subsidies for operating them in an amount running into the millions of dollars. The bill carries $25,000,000 to aid the shipowners in the form of subsidies for operating the ships and the Government is furnishing the ships, and then the Government puts up three-fourths of the cost of new ships that are built, still paying them this subsidy. Senators, if we continue this system we will eventually have no Government. It is a perfect outrage. Think of it. We charge the farmers something like 5 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. Eight per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Eight per cent is what we charge the farmers on what they borrow, but a shipowner comes along and borrows at one-fourth of 1 per cent and one-half of 1 per cent and three-fourths of 1 per cent. I say the Congress ought to take steps to remedy this situation, and ought to take steps promptly. Talk about not being able to cut down this department 10 per cent under circumstances such as we have confronting us to-day! The only mistake we made was in not cutting more. It is an outrage upon the American people who have to pay the costs.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me yield farther to the Senator from Florida, who had not concluded his statement, I believe.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask a question before the Senator proceeds? Before what committee is the investigation pending?

Mr. McKELLAR. The only way it happened to come before the Senate at all was through the matter being brought up in the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. We are called upon to appropriate for these subsidies at this time something like $39,000,000. I am raising the question about that item. I say there are 39 out of the 44 contracts which are absolutely void.

I now yield farther to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am very glad to have the committee go into the separate contracts. It may be that some of them should be very carefully looked into. There may be something irregular about them. But I am not dealing with the separate contracts. That is a matter to be gone into very carefully by the appropriate committee. I am speaking generally about the policy which the Congress adopted. It was for the purpose of enabling the Shipping Board to get rid of the ships that were costing the Government an enormous amount of money.

As to the loan fund, Congress did enact that law and did make the mistake of specifying in the act that the money would be loaned to the shipbuilders, provided they built in American yards and built according to plans and specifications laid down for them, having in view the national defense, having in view the needs of our commerce, mail routes, and all that sort of thing. They built according to those plans and they got their money cheap. The law provided that they were to have the money at the same rate the Government was paying, and that is how these extraordinarily low rates came into the contracts. They found at the time that the Government was paying these low rates on its money, and the contracts were made upon that basis. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] subsequently introduced a bill which changed that and made the minimum rate 3 per cent, and that is the law now. But it required an act of Congress to do that. We had overlooked the matter entirely.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will my good friend from Florida allow me to continue my speech long enough to pay a compliment where I think it is due? Nobody knew anything in the world about these companies getting this money at these remarkably low rates of interest. It was like a sealed book even to the Government itself, apparently. It was due to the sagacity and the earnest efforts of my distinguished friend the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] that the matter was brought to light. When it was brought to light he introduced a proper measure to correct it, and it has been corrected. We are not lending money at those rates now, but we had been doing it for years.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. May I interject at that point that after the Senator from Michigan called attention to the rates of loans and after a bill fixing legally the rate of interest at 3½ per cent was brought before the Senate, the bill remained on the calendar of the Senate nearly 10 months without action.

Let me call attention to another thing in connection with these loans. Something has been said about loans to shipbuilders and about loans to farmers. I want to tell the Members of the Senate that under the construction-loan fund there have been but 12 loans made, bearing a rate of interest of less than 2½ per cent, and that the total of those loans amounts to about $29,000,000. The effective rate of interest on all loans made as of April of this year to shipbuilding companies from the time the construction-loan provision of the law was enacted in 1920 has been 4¼ per cent.

A year or more after the construction-loan provision was amended in the merchant marine act of 1928 there was passed through the Congress the agricultural marketing act, so called, authorizing in almost identical language of the construction-loan fund of the 1928 act loans to farmers' cooperatives in the country. As against the $29,000,000 loaned to shipbuilding companies at less than 2½ per cent, what is the history under the agricultural marketing act? There has been loaned under that act a total of almost $929,000,000. The average rate of interest has been 1.7 per cent as against an average rate of interest to the shipbuilders of 4.25 per cent. The rate of yield under that marketing act has been as low as one-eighth of 1 per cent.

When Senators are talking about these loans, let us tell the whole story of loans. If the loans to the shipbuilding companies are invalid because of that rate of interest, let us go down the line; let us invalidate the loans to the farmers' cooperatives; let us act in a full appreciation of all the consequences involved.

Mr. McKELLAR. I quite agree with the Senator.

Something has been said about refrigeration. Here is the contract of the Mississippi Shipping Co. showing that it carried $62 worth of mail. When I say it was $62 worth of mail, I mean that the postage under the International Postal Union rates amounted to $62. How much do you suppose, Mr. President, they received for carrying that mail? They received $607,792.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator want to have the business of Latin America brought to the United States or not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope we can get it.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator know if it had not been for the Government subsidy the trade between Latin America and the United States never would have been developed? We never would have been able to get it if it had not been for that Government subsidy. It is a question as to whether we want the trade of Latin America or not.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are paying pretty dearly for it.

Mr. LONG. Furthermore, I can tell the Senator that the Mississippi Shipping Co. has not made anything out of its operations even with the Government subsidy.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Government would turn over to me $970,000 a year for 10 years, I think I could get along pretty well.

Mr. LONG. The Senator could not operate those ships even with a Government subsidy of $970,000. He could not last a month in the business at that rate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now go to my friend from Florida. The Tampa-Interocean-New Orleans-Spain route appears next here. How much mail was carried last year on that route? They carried enough mail to earn, under the International Postal Union rate, the enormous sum of $20. They actually earned that much money! They would have carried that mail for any other Government for $20. How much did this particular company get for carrying it? It got $438,775. That is pretty good business. These may be hard times for some people in this country, but they are certainly not hard times for the shipping interests which are enjoying subsidies and subventions from the Federal Government.

By the way, while they are not refrigerated ships—Mr. Doswell said that no one else except his company had any such ships—they go to hot countries, and when it is desired to carry chickens and eggs for our soldiers in the next war, I can not imagine why this line should not be selected for that purpose.

The American-West African Line runs from New Orleans to West Africa. I have never been to Africa, but I understand it is quite hot there. If we are going to have a war there, as the Senator from New York thinks we may have some time in the future, it does seem to me that we might need refrigeration on steamers in order to carry eggs and chickens and fresh fruits for our soldiers when we send them over there.

How much mail did the ships of this line carry? They carried more than the Florida line; they carried $30 worth of mail. How much did they get for it? Here is shown an injustice done to Louisiana; an invidious distinction made between Florida and Louisiana, which ought to be corrected. The American-West African Line for carrying $30 worth of mail received only $89,820, while the Tampa Interocean Line carried less mail—only $20 worth—and received $438,775. That is a discrimination.

Let me say to the Senator from Florida that Louisiana ought to be put on the same basis with Florida when it comes to these subventions, these gratuities, these hand-outs which the American Government is giving to these rich companies while 8,000,000 of our people are without employment. The Senator from New York said that I am here defending myself about something. I am not here defending myself about anything. A shipping company does not mean anything to me.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. I do, however, have the greatest consideration for the poor fellows who are walking the streets with nothing to do, whereas we are giving $35,000,000 to the great shipping companies, one of which, as I pointed out a while ago, boasted through its vice president that it was worth from two hundred million to two hundred and fifty million dollars, owed no debts, was paying dividends as usual, and had outstanding no bonds. Now I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the discrimination in the amount of the subsidy received as between the line from Florida and the line from Louisiana.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. May not that discrimination be explained in this way: That in the one case there was greater refrigeration space than in the other?

Mr. McKELLAR. Possibly that may explain it.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senator from California to a discrimination against his State. The O. & O. Navigation Co.—I think its name is the Oceanic & Oriental Navigation Co.—of San Francisco, running from San Francisco to Saigon, which is on the other side of the Pacific, in French Indo-China, carried $2,655 worth of mail—a tremendous amount of mail as compared with the mail carried by some of the other lines—and how much do Senators suppose they received for it? They received $300,210 for it. That is an outrageous discrimination against the line from California.

Mr. President, I have these figures before me, and they are all taken from official records. It will be remembered that the Senate in December adopted a resolution directing the Postmaster General to furnish these contracts to the Senate; they are here in printed form; and any Senator can see them and can verify what I have said about them; they are all here. In recapitulation let me say that the total payments under the contracts from the first voyages down to June 1, 1931, were $40,965,031; that the total transportation value of the mail under the International Postal Union rates was $3,667,614; and the amount of the subsidy, or the gratuity, was $37,297,417. I wish to say further that we find in this bill, if I remember aright, a recommended appropriation of $39,000,000 for this year for this service on these ships.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if this bill should be recommitted to the committee with instructions to report it back with a 10 per cent reduction in the aggregate, what assurance he can give the Senate that the reductions will come out of the shipping contracts rather than out of the employees who are working for the Post Office Department as hired men and hired women?

Mr. McKELLAR. As a matter of fact, the Senate has already sent the Post Office and Treasury bill back to the committee with instructions to cut the appropriations it contains 10 per cent. The committee held meetings for several days, and then the meetings were discontinued. I can not say why. The Senator from Nevada, who is chairman of the subcommittee, can tell us why. I can only say that the Postmaster General seemed to think, according to his testimony before the committee, that it would be necessary to discharge employees. I do not think so. I want to say to the Senator that I think the subsidies ought to be cut out.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course that is so; but the danger is, is it not, that instead of cutting out the subsidies, the saving will be made by discharging a large number of employees and letting the subsidies remain?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; that can not be done. The Postmaster General has no authority to discharge employees unless Congress directs him to do so. Congress has the power in the premises.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the Post Office authorities have already said that that is what they will do, have they not?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Postmaster General has said that the reduction would necessitate the discharge of 36,000 employees. He does not want to cut off any of the subsidies, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course not.

Mr. McKELLAR. His plan is to discharge the employees. He says it will require the discharge of 36,000. My good friend from Nevada, the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ODDIE], went him one better yesterday—and that is why I happen to be on the floor to-day—and said that the Postmaster General is mistaken about it, and that a 10 per cent reduction is going to mean the discharge of 58,000 employees.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just a moment. A 10 per cent reduction made along the line I am suggesting need have no such result. That is the way it ought to be made, and there are plenty of other avenues for making reductions in the bill itself besides the three I have been talking about. There never was a better place to make reductions than in this appropriation bill; and yet we are confronted with the kind of a situation I have indicated. The Senator from Nebraska asks what I think about it. I still have a notion that the Senate of the United States is not going to cut off employees, but is going to make the reductions along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope so, but what assurance would we have of that being done?

Mr. McKELLAR. Nothing in the world but a vote of this body.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; but the first vote is going to come in the committee; and suppose the committee reports the bill back in accordance with the recommendations of the Postmaster General?

Mr. McKELLAR. If it does, I hope the Senate will vote it down; and I will undertake to vote with the Senator from Nebraska and other Senators to vote it down if the bill shall be reported in accord with the recommendations of the Postmaster General. I do not think any such report ought to be made.

I want to say for the committee that it has acted with the utmost fairness in the case of the other bills which were recommitted with instructions to make the 10 per cent cut. Under that procedure we have had cuts made in bills affecting five departments. We have cut down the appropriations in the Interior Department bill and in the bill affecting the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor. In bills affecting five departments the 10 per cent reduction has been made. It was fairly made, squarely made after examining every item, and I do not think any harm has been done at all. I hope to see the same thing done in the case of the Post Office and Treasury Departments bill. Why should we make distinctions between the Post Office and Treasury bill and the bills affecting the five departments I have mentioned? I do not think we ought to do it, and I do not think we will do it.

The Senator from Virginia asked to interrupt me a while ago, and I now yield to him.

Mr. GLASS. It was so long ago that I have almost forgotten the particular point. As I recall the incident, however, I wanted to respond to an inquiry made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be happy to have the Senator do so.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Tennessee will recall that the Secretary of the Treasury was before the Appropriations Committee and in a qualified way he referred to the Senate's brutality in compelling him to dismiss 6,000 employees of the Treasury Department under the 10 per cent reduction. I challenged the Secretary of the Treasury to show one word or sentence in the resolution of the Senate that required him to discharge a single, solitary employee. What had been expected was that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General would cooperate with the Committee on Appropriations in making reductions in these appropriations without the discharge of a single employee, and that could be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Tennessee will permit me——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in just a moment. I want to say that the Senator from Virginia is absolutely right in his recollection of what transpired before the committee. We have not had any cooperation from any of the Cabinet officers; they have all opposed these reductions; they have all put their opposition on the ground that it affected employees, when it does not affect employees.

By the way, while I am on my feet and before I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, as I will with pleasure in just a moment, I want to say that the Secretary of the Treasury, as I recall, made one very valuable suggestion. It will be remembered that the Senate itself in sending the Treasury and Post Office bill back to the committee excepted the building program. It developed that the appropriation provided by this bill for buildings was $108,000,000. It also developed that up to April 1 of this year, under the greatest pressure, the department had spent only $60,000,000 for buildings, and it expected to spend some $25,000,000 more—I doubt if they will spend $20,000,000 more—during the last three months of the present fiscal year. However, suppose they do spend $25,000,000 more or what they expect to spend; that will amount to $85,000,000 expended this year under the greatest pressure. They have been able to spend but $85,000,000; and yet they are recommending that we appropriate out of money in the Treasury which we have not got $108,000,000, and the Senate——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. And the Senate agreed to that and accepted it. I am inclined to think the Secretary of the Treasury is right and that we could easily save not less than $15,000,000, at any rate, and have an even greater building program carried on than has been carried on during the current year. I am inclined to think that the Senate made a mistake in excepting the building program. I do not believe the department can spend $108,000,000 if we give it to them; I doubt it. Mr. Mills took that position, and I for one am inclined to agree with him. So we may have an amendment about that before we get through. Now I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The Senator said something which perhaps he wanted me to notice, although I do not think it is very material.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps not.

Mr. LONG. The point I want to make is this: If the American merchant marine can not be maintained except under these subsidies, the question is whether we should or should not maintain an American merchant marine. Is it not a fact that practically all the ships in the American merchant marine plying between the United States and South American and Central American ports are to-day flying the flags of foreign countries, with the sole exception of those having Shipping Board contracts and those operating the so-called subsidies, which the Senator is mentioning?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is not correct about that. For instance, the Munson Line has more foreign-flag ships than American-flag ships, and it is drawing its portion of the subsidy. It came before our committee fighting an amendment put on by the House to the effect that a subsidy should not be granted to any company which had a foreign-flag ship running in competition with an American-flag ship. Do you know that that amendment is being fought? The fact that one of these companies is drawing a subsidy from our Treasury, and operating more foreign-flag ships than American-flag ships, does not seem to have made any difference. They are here fighting the provision. Their officials came before us fighting for the subsidy.

Mr. LONG. I do not think the Senator understood my question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sorry.

Mr. LONG. I am not speaking about the Munson Line having foreign-flag ships and domestic-flag ships; but the concern that the Senator mentioned, running from New Orleans, for instance, does not fly a foreign flag.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Mississippi Valley Co.—and, by the way, I think that was a very improvident contract, but the Senator was not in the Senate at the time—the Mississippi Valley Co. is one of the few shipping companies that apparently have good contracts. The Congress awarded that contract over the head of the department, and the result is that the company probably got a valid contract; but it is a very improvident contract, and one that never should have been made.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator's approval of appropriations for construction work leads me to interject that under the merchant marine act of 1928 there has already been contracted for the construction in American yards of ships which will cost more than $300,000,000. That sum will be paid out in American shipyards to American workingmen for building American ships—a substantial contribution to the cause which seemingly is near the Senator's heart.

Mr. McKELLAR. All that means is that the Government has contributed $225,000,000 of that amount.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, no!

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; because all these shipping concerns that want it get three-fourths of the money from the Government. All they have to do is to apply for it, apparently.

Mr. WHITE. They borrow it from the Government and are liable for its repayment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course they borrow it from the Government; and I have my doubts about whether it will ever be paid back.

Mr. WHITE. The Government takes back mortgages on the ships, and such additional security as the Government demands; and there have been no losses.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about it. There has been no additional security in the case of any of the contracts; and everybody knows that after a ship gets in the water it is not worth three-fourths of its building price.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. I want to apologize to the Senate for having taken so long. I intended merely to put these things in the RECORD in refutation of the statements given out by the Postmaster General and the chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, as I thought. I believed them to be a refutation of their statements. I may be mistaken, and they may be right; but I thought they were wrong, and that is all I rose for. Various questions have brought on this argument, however; and I thought I would let the Senate know what I happened to know about the matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I listened to the radio address of the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] about the effect of this 10 per cent cut with reference to discharging employees, and I must say I was impressed with the idea that we had made a mistake.

Mr. McKELLAR. Naturally so.

Mr. BORAH. I do not see how the 10 per cent can be taken off these subsidy contracts, because they are contracts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; the so-called contracts are void.

Mr. BORAH. But somebody has to declare them void.

Mr. McKELLAR. We are going to invite the companies to go before the courts, of course, so that whatever rights they have can be adjudicated.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I know; but can that be done in time to save the employees from being discharged?

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, we are not going to discharge employees if these contracts are taken away. What is the necessity of it? Here are $35,000,000 in subsidies paid to shipping companies. Here are $10,000,000 paid under contracts to the air mail companies. Here are $25,000,000 paid to the magazine owners for transporting their magazines through the mails. That is $70,000,000. That is 10 per cent of the $700,000,000 that it costs to run the Post Office Department.

Mr. BORAH. Are not all of those sums paid under contract?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; they are just paid in money. It may possibly take some clerk in the department a little time to attend to the matter. I imagine there would not be half a dozen employees engaged in turning over this money to the contractors.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the payments that are promised are under such contracts that the Postmaster General could at his own discretion discontinue them?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not sure but that he could do that. I know he could in the case of the air mail contracts, and I am inclined to believe he could in the case of the others. The Comptroller General is examining into the matter now; and if he were called on to testify I do not see how he could do otherwise, after examining the contracts, than to say that they are void, and that we ought not to pay out this money anyway. That would carry the matter to the courts, and the shipping companies would be obliged to go to the courts in the case of 39 out of the 44 contracts.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Treasury, before the Appropriations Committee, unqualifiedly censured this body. He then proceeded to make suggestions that would enable the Treasury Department to make this 10 per cent cut without the discharge of a single employee.

I resent for myself, and I think the Senate should resent, the attempt to make it appear that this body brutally and arbitrarily imposed upon these two departments the duty of discharging in one instance 58,000 employees, and in the other instance 6,000 employees. I gather from what the Senator from Idaho said a moment ago that he had no such idea in voting for this 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course not.

Mr. GLASS. Certainly I had no such idea; and I do not believe a single, solitary Senator here was so unmindful of the situation as to propose to make a brutal discharge of this number of employees. It is not necessary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Before I yield further to the Senator from Idaho, which I shall be glad to do in just a moment, I want to make a statement about one of the most remarkable things that has happened to me in my public life, and I have been here quite a good long while.

The Secretary of the Treasury came before our committee Friday afternoon a week ago, and in the course of his remarks stated how he could assist in making this reduction. He said, "I have a way in which part of it can be made." Mind you, these two bills involved over a billion dollars. He said, "I will tell you how you can save $500,000 if you will just abolish one of the customs offices in Los Angeles," I believe, "one in Nevada, one in Nebraska, one in Louisiana, one in Florida, one or two in Texas." I do not think he sought to abolish any in Massachusetts, but he suggested abolishing one in Maryland, one in Virginia, one in South Carolina, one in Louisiana. I believe there was one in South Dakota, too. These collectors of customs in the various States cost the Government about $500,000.

I take it that the Secretary made that recommendation in good faith; and, strange to say, I never asked him a question about it. I have looked at the record since, to be absolutely sure whether I did or not. It is a wonder I did not.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator wanted to find out whether or not it was proposed to abolish any in Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I failed to say that he did propose to abolish one in Tennessee; but even that did not bring a comment from me, as I find from the record.

That was in the afternoon. Either that night or perhaps before daylight the next morning somebody from Memphis called me up and said, "Look here. We have just been notified by the Treasury Department that you have introduced a bill to abolish the office of collector of customs in Memphis." Think of it!

Mr. BORAH. The Senator got caught. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I got caught. I did not make a recommendation about it. The Secretary of the Treasury made the recommendation, but the propaganda went out. They were building a fire under me. [Laughter.] That is what they thought. That was the purpose of it, of course. That was the purpose of giving out the statement that there are going to be 36,000 postal employees discharged. Why, just let me show you. Look at this—and, by the way, I again request that this matter be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the data referred to by the Senator from Tennessee will be inserted in the RECORD at the end of his remarks.

(See Exhibits A and B.)

Mr. McKELLAR. Here is a statement made by the Postmaster General, given out over the radio by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], as to what will happen if the 10 per cent reduction is put on this bill along the lines we have been talking about here, or any other lines. The first State is Alabama. There is nobody here from Alabama at the moment, so I will not read it. Let me find Nebraska.

In Nebraska 18 assistant postmasters will lose their jobs, 109 clerks, 203 city carriers, 11 village carriers, 40 railway postal clerks, 3 vehicle employees, and 199 rural carriers. One hundred and ninety-nine rural routes will be consolidated and 224 rural routes will be reduced to triweekly service. The Senator from Nebraska will be getting more letters and telegrams from postal employees in his State two days after this statement reaches Nebraska than he has received in a long time.

In the case of the Senator from Idaho his mail will be delayed a little longer, because it takes a little longer for the news to get to Idaho; but every Senator here is going to be appealed to by postal employees in every State in this Union. Why? Because of the outrageous propaganda that is being put out by the department. The Post Office Department is putting out this propaganda that the purpose of this reduction is to cut off employees and not to reduce expenditures, such as we have been talking about here this afternoon.

I think it is the duty of the Senate to legislate for the benefit of the people and to cut down these subsidies and let these poor people who are getting small salaries go on drawing their salaries as usual. The idea of taking away, as is proposed here, the pitifully small salaries that now are paid and allowing a concern like the United Fruit Co., with $200,000,000 of assets, without any lien or mortgage on it at all, to receive a gratuity of $1,200,000 from the Government! Senators, if we do that we are unworthy, as it seems to me, to legislate for the American people.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. I assume from what the Senator has stated that he is not in favor of cutting 10 per cent off the appropriation for salaries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, no. There is no proposal in the 10 per cent reduction to do that at all. Whatever of that kind comes up is purely incidental. There is a bill pending over in the House that seeks to deal with the question of cutting salaries. We are not undertaking to deal with it. What we are trying to do—what I am trying to do, and what the Senators who have so splendidly helped me in the past are trying to do—is to cut down these wasteful, indefensible expenditures of our Government, sometimes for purposes that are improper.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that even if the reduction did involve a 10 per cent cut in salaries, to which I am opposed, that would not necessitate the discharge of all these employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, it would not.

Mr. GLASS. A man would rather have his wages cut 10 per cent than lose his job. So that the brutality in this whole thing rests upon the department officials who are seeking to impute something to the Senate which the Senate never attempted to do. So far as I am concerned, I would be willing to modify the resolution and instruct the Committee on Appropriations to preclude from the operation of the reduction all of the employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the committee is going to do that anyway. I hope it will. I want to say again for the committee, that while a majority of the committee has not agreed with me in these matters, they have lived up to the directions of the Senate like men, and I honor them and respect them for it. They are good men.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Another item which the Senator has not mentioned, and I assume it has not been called keenly to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, is with respect to the larger leases for postal service, for instance, the leases which call for $6,000 annual rental.

The Senator will recall that I made some remarks on the floor of the Senate a few days ago pointing out that those leases totaled, in round numbers, $6,000,000 a year. I made the proposal that the Government construct and own the essential post-office facilities, and that the amount necessary to meet the cost of construction could be raised by a bond issue, the same as a municipality or a county raises money by a bond issue for permanent improvements. That would not mean immediately a $6,000,000 saving, but it would mean such a saving within a very few years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say that, in my judgment, the Senator from Wisconsin has done a wonderful work in his examination of that particular matter. I have no doubt in the world, from the cursory examination I have given to the matter, that great sums have been wasted in these rental contracts. A system ought to be devised along the line the Senator suggests. The matter has not come before the committee, although I am quite sure that is one of the items on which a saving can be made, for the reason that rents are infinitely cheaper to-day than they have been in many years, everywhere except perhaps in Washington. I know that what little property I have is largely in real estate, and I doubt whether I am getting enough in the way of rents to pay the taxes on that real estate. I am quite sure that very large savings can be made by the Government in its rental of post offices.

Mr. President, I ask that there may be published at the end of my remarks the figures about which my good friend the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] talked yesterday and put into the hands of all the newspapers of the country. I think they ought to go into the RECORD, if they have not already done so.

I want to add this very valuable comparison of payments made under ocean mail contracts.

I earnestly ask that Senators give this matter their attention. It is a matter involving at least $100,000,000 to this Government. I hope they will give it enough attention tomorrow morning so that they may be informed about the true facts.

I have taken a great deal longer than I intended. I should never have spoken this long, but under the circumstances I am quite sure the Senate will forgive me.

The matters referred to by the Senator from Tennessee were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT A

MAY 1, 1932.

Memorandum to correspondents.

For your information I am sending you a tabulation made by the Post Office Department showing, by States, the number of postal employees whom it will be necessary to dismiss in the event the Senate adheres to its recent decision and compels a 10 per cent reduction in the appropriation for the Post Office Department. It is my purpose, in the near future, to ask the Senate to reconsider this order.

The department points out that for each consolidation of two rural routes one carrier must be dismissed; in an even larger number of instances rural service would necessarily be curtailed from daily to three times a week.

In the large cities the department advises me that carrier service in the business sections would be reduced from four to two deliveries daily; in the residential districts a 10 per cent cut in appropriation would reduce deliveries from two to one each day. In many small villages carrier delivery would be dispensed with and patrons would be forced back to the old custom of getting their mail at the post office. The number of railway mail clerks to be dispensed with is also shown.

Inasmuch as the appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments are combined in one bill, and both are covered by the order for a 10 per cent cut, I invite your attention to tables appearing on page 8951 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 26.

TASKER L. ODDIE,
Chairman Subcommitte on the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Bill.

State	Assistant postmasters	Clerks	City carriers	Village carriers	Railway postal clerks	Vehicle employees	Rural carriers	Rural routes consolidated	Rural routes reduced to triweekly service
Alabama	11	70	131	44	22	1	200	200	225
Arizona	4	23	42	1	1	------	7	7	8
Arkansas	9	53	98	19	27	------	140	140	156
California	92	565	1,050	14	51	17	98	98	111
Colorado	16	100	186	5	26	3	58	58	65
Connecticut	25	157	291	11	20	3	51	51	57
Delaware	3	18	33	10	6	1	19	19	21
District of Columbia	------	91	169	------	36	8	1	1	1
Florida	14	85	158	8	27	3	53	53	59
Georgia	22	138	256	52	60	4	279	279	316
Hawaii	2	12	22	------	------	------	------	------	------
Idaho	4	23	42	------	5	------	40	40	45
Illinois	181	1,091	2,028	77	195	48	466	466	525
Indiana	36	223	414	44	80	5	314	314	355
Iowa	32	196	365	25	75	2	389	389	438
Kansas	19	116	215	29	40	1	318	318	360
Kentucky	16	98	182	26	40	3	176	176	200
Louisiana	13	79	147	9	16	------	65	65	73
Maine	10	59	111	17	20	2	94	94	105
Maryland	20	122	227	13	21	7	74	74	84
Massachusetts	70	433	805	12	80	25	57	57	64
Michigan	55	337	626	34	45	12	310	310	349
Minnesota	41	254	471	9	90	8	304	304	343
Mississippi	7	44	81	7	14	------	176	176	200
Missouri	67	413	768	52	135	17	402	402	454
Montana	6	36	66	------	10	------	24	24	27
Nebraska	18	109	203	11	40	3	199	199	224
Nevada	1	8	15	------	1	------	1	1	1
New Hampshire	5	34	63	6	7	------	48	48	54
New Jersey	48	295	549	36	57	5	57	47	64
New Mexico	4	23	42	------	7	------	9	9	10
New York	299	1,790	3,331	44	235	73	348	348	392
North Carolina	17	102	190	17	22	1	239	239	270
North Dakota	7	41	76	2	15	------	142	142	160
Ohio	97	599	1,112	77	150	28	441	441	497
Oklahoma	17	105	195	18	11	------	220	220	249
Oregon	13	80	149	7	18	------	50	50	56
Pennsylvania	121	728	1,354	106	170	42	388	388	437
Porto Rico	1	8	15	4	------	------	------	------	------
Rhode Island	8	49	90	8	6	2	8	8	9
South Carolina	5	31	57	37	12	1	149	149	169
South Dakota	7	41	76	6	8	------	124	124	139
Tennessee	19	120	223	29	60	5	294	294	331
Texas	49	302	562	12	75	4	409	409	442
Utah	5	34	63	16	19	------	12	12	13
Vermont	4	26	48	7	9	------	64	64	72
Virginia	19	117	217	11	40	6	203	203	229
Washington	21	129	239	3	32	------	76	76	85
West Virginia	11	67	125	14	18	------	85	85	95
Wisconsin	36	221	411	19	40	4	315	315	356
Wyoming	2	15	28	------	6	------	4	4	5

EXHIBIT B

Comparison of payments made under ocean mail contracts (Title IV, merchant marine act, 1928) with the normal transportation value of the mail in fact carried

(Compiled by John Nicolson from data furnished by the Postmaster General to the U. S. Senate, in response to Senate Resolution 85 (S. Doc. No. 69), April 30, 1932)

[Based on International Postal Union rates]

Mail route No.	Names of line and terminal ports of routes	Date service began	Total payments under these ocean mail contracts to June 30, 1932	Commercial value of the transportation (I. P. U. rates)	Excess of contract payments over commercial value	See S. Doc. No. 69
						Page
4	Munson Line, New York and Buenos Aires	Aug. 1, 1928	$3,679,132	$239,718	$3,439,414	408
5	Export Steamship Co., New York and Mediterranean ports	Aug. 20, 1928	3,856,403	89,697	3,766,706	411
6	American-South Africa Line, New York and East African ports	Oct. 27, 1928	782,692	43,237	739,455	421
8	Grace Steamship Co., New York and Chili	Aug. 2, 1928	2,676,706	374,634	2,302,072	422
10	New York & Porto Rico Steamship Co., San Juan, P. R., and Santo Domingo	Dec. 3, 1928	132,312	12,720	119,592	425
15	Eastern Steamship Lines, Boston and Yarmouth, Nova Scotia	Aug. 16, 1928	648,432	9,246	639,186	429
16	American-Scantic Line, New York and Baltic area	Oct. 1, 1928	1,618,941	246,647	1,372,294	442
17	American-West Africa Line, New York and Capetown, South Africa	----do----	796,557	10,294	786,263	446
18	Atlantic & Caribbean Steam Navigation Co., New York and Maracaibo, Venezuela	Oct. 3, 1928	1,025,017	175,358	849,659	448
19	Colombian Steamship Co., New York and Colombia, South America	Apr. 2, 1930	334,182	56,050	278,132	452
20	New York & Cuba Mail Steampship Co., New York and Habana, Cuba	Oct. 6, 1928	1,461,152	99,416	1,361,736	454
21	New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Co., New York and Vera Cruz, Mexico	Oct. 4, 1928	1,153,724	28,507	1,125,217	459
22	Gulf Mail Steamship Co., New Orleans and Progreso, Mexico	June 1, 1929	48,548	4,735	43,813	463
23	Lykes Bros. Steamship Co., Galveston and San Domingo	Oct. 1, 1928	789,258	665	788,593	465
24	Oceanic Steamship Co., San Francisco and Australia	Oct. 18, 1928	1,915,625	675,951	1,239,675	470
25	Dollar Steamship Lines, San Francisco and Manila, P. I.	Oct. 12, 1928	3,517,944	410,074	3,107,870	472
26	Admiral Oriental Line, Seattle and Manila	Oct. 6, 1928	2,965,098	699,092	2,266,006	474
27	Dollar Steamship Lines, San Francisco and Ceylon	Oct. 5, 1928	3,156,770	123,344	3,033,426	476
28	States Steamship Co., Portland and Manila	Oct. 15, 1928	1,098,735	11,275	1,087,460	478
29	States Steamship Co., Portland and Dairen	Oct. 5, 1928	537,950	6,162	531,788	480
30	Oceanic & Oriental Navigation Co., Los Angeles and New Zealand	Oct. 1, 1928	480,930	12,367	468,563	481
31	Oceanic & Oriental Navigation Co., Los Angeles and Melbourne	Oct. 11, 1928	580,140	11,181	568,959	483
32	American Line Steamship Co., New York and Balboa	Apr. 1, 1929	885,280	52,353	832,927	484
33	South Atlantic Steamship Co., Savannah and Bremen	Jan. 5, 1929	917,169	75	917,094	487
34	Pacific Argentine-Brazil Line, San Francisco and Buenos Aires	------	759,036	274	758,762	490
35	Mississippi Shipping Co., New Orleans and Brazil	------	607,792	62	607,730	491
36	Tacoma-Oriental Steamship Co., Tacoma and Manila	Aug. 1, 1929	666,384	1,901	664,483	493
37	Panama Mail Steamship Co., San Francisco and Habana	July 12, 1930	443,152	1,821	441,331	495
38	Grace Steamship Co., Tacoma and Chile	July 11, 1930	238,500	329	238,171	496
39	United Fruit Co., San Francisco and Armurellas	July 3, 1930	392,860	3,248	389,612	497
40	United Fruit Co., New York, Habana, and Port Limon	(1)	(1)	(1)	(1)	7
41	United Fruit Co., New Orleans, Habana, Cristobal, Cartagena	(1)	(1)	(1)	(1)	8
42	United States Lines (canceled)	(2)	(2)	(2)	(2)	8
43	United States Lines, New York, Plymouth, and Hamburg	Mar. 4, 1931	490,248	141,421	348,827	499
44	United States Lines, New York and London	Apr. 24, 1930	1,254,906	118,763	1,136,143	500
45	Tampa-Inter Ocean, New Orleans and Spain	July 1, 1930	438,775	20	438,755	502
46	Roosevelt Steamship Co., Baltimore and Hamburg	July 1, 1931	(3)	(3)	(3)	9
47	America West Africa Line, New Orleans and West Africa	July 19, 1930	89,820	30	89,790	503
48	Oceanic & Oriental Navigation Co., San Francisco and Dairen	July 3, 1930	224,650	4,292	220,358	504
49	Oceanic & Oriental Navigation Co., San Francisco and Saigon	July 2, 1930	300,210	2,655	297,555	505
	Total	------	40,965,031	3,667,614	37,297,417	------

[1] Subsequent to June 30, 1931. This compilation is as of June 30, 1931, and effective date of contracts is Mar. 21, 1932. The initial fleet and schedule will require annual payments of not less than $247,600 for No. 40, and not less than $245,750 for No. 41.

[2] This contract was canceled before its effective date. (S. Doc. No. 69, p. 8.)

[3] Effective date subsequent to June 30, 1931. The initial fleet and schedules will require annual payments exceeding $1,223,000.

	Steamship line	Effective date of contract	Annual payment for initial fleet and schedules will exceed—
52	Eastern Steamship Lines: New York to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia; Boston to St. John, New Brunswick.	May 1, 1932	$300,000	9
53	American Diamond Lines: North Atlantic to North Europe.	Oct. 1, 1931	520,000	10
54	Waterman Steamship Corporation: Gulf to North Europe.	do	650,000	10
55	Gulf Pacific Mail Line: Seattle and Tampico.	do	150,000	10
56	Seatrain Lines: New Orleans to Habana.	After Jan. 1, 1932, and before Oct. 31, 1932.	120,000	11

NOTE.—First voyages all subsequent to June 30, 1931.

RECAPITULATION

I. Total payments under the contracts from the first voyages, respectively, to June 30, 1931 ..... $40,965,031

II. Total transportation value of the mail in fact carried, computed at the rates prescribed by the International Postal Union 3,667,614

III. Excess of the payments actually made, over the commercial value of the transportation service performed 37,297,417

IV. Services since effective: Contracts for mail routes Nos. 40, 41, 46, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56, listed above, have become effective since June 30, 1931, the date to which this compilation relates. The total annual payments thereunder, on the basis of the initial fleets and minimum schedules, will aggregate more than $3,450,000 annually, in addition to the foregoing.

NOTE.—The United States pays American vessels not having these ocean mail contracts a higher rate than the International Postal Union rates; but the excess over the International Postal Union rates is itself a subsidy, hence this comparison is made with the International Postal Union rates, for otherwise the comparison would not reveal the excess over true values.—J. N.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to discuss somewhat the matter of the merchant marine. I am particularly interested in that, and I do not want to see this great country of ours deprived of an adequate merchant marine to serve the country in commerce overseas, to provide for emergencies, such as we have contemplated, and, in so far as this measure affects the merchant marine, I want to submit a few observations.

I do not know that the measure really does reach the merchant marine, except indirectly. If these foreign mail contracts are laid to one side, then we will find ourselves in the position where some people who have purchased ships from the United States Shipping Board will be unable to carry on under their contracts, and will probably have to surrender those ships and get out of the business. Others who are contemplating the purchase of ships owned by the Government will not be able to carry through their efforts in that direction, and we will find the Government still operating certain ships at considerable loss.

There has been a deficit year after year on account of ship operations. This bill does not ask for any appropriations for the Fleet Corporation at all. They are asking for nothing. It does not provide for a dollar of appropriations. They have sufficient to take care of the deficit if any arises this year from the operation of ships. There is no provision here for the Shipping Board, except for their ordinary administrative expenses. So that the appropriation does not affect the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

When we come to the question of canceling the ocean mail contracts, then that will affect subsequently the disposition of ships now owned by the Government and the contracts which are now in existence.

We are in this situation: The Government of the United States now owns 357 ships. The number in actual operation to-day is 115. The number available for sale for operation is 167. The number in lay up, to be sold for scrap, is 75.

That is the situation with our shipping. Certain consolidations are proposed and are now under way, and I think they will be accomplished. When those consolidations are finished the Shipping Board will have five lines in operation, as follows:

America France Line, from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Hampton Roads to French ports.

The Gulf Lines, from the Gulf ports to the Orient, United Kingdom, and continental ports.

The American Hampton Roads Line, from Philadelphia, Baltimore, Hampton Roads, and Boston to the United Kingdom, Hamburg, and Bremen.

The American Republics Line, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Hampton Roads, Savannah, and Jacksonville to the east coast of South America.

The American Pioneer Line, from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and Hampton Roads to Australia, the Orient, and India.

It is important for us to keep these services going, important for our trade, our commerce, and the general welfare of the country.

The effort has been for the Shipping Board to get out of this business and turn it over to private enterprise. They have sold quite a number of ships and a number of lines.

The Senator referred to the Tampa Interocean Line. The Tampa Interocean Co. was an operating company for the Shipping Board, operating a number of ships out of the Gulf to foreign countries. The business was not there. A good deal of money was spent in developing the business, and there were deficits occasioned in the operation of those ships. Finally, partly persuaded by the Shipping Board, induced by the Shipping Board, and under arrangements by reason of this ocean mail contract, this Tampa Interocean Co. was able to buy these ships and operate them at their own cost and expense.

A subsidy, if Senators want to call it that, a subvention, as some people more euphoniously speak of it, an ocean mail contract, enabled them to buy these ships, save the Government the cost of operating, the deficits that occurred year after year, and take care of the services at the same time. That is how that contract arose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it will be conceded that if the Government keeps in operation all of the other activities of the Post Office Department, for instance, and is unable to levy taxes sufficient to pay the expenses for these additional things, there will be some things which the Government is obligated to do which it will be impossible to do. Why would it not be all right, assuming that we can not escape from these contracts, to apply the same principle to these subsidy contracts that has been applied and permitted by us with our debtors who owe us, and declare a moratorium?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, does the Senator mean for the Government to suspend all payments under these contracts?

Mr. NORRIS. Suspend payments, just as we have agreed that other nations should suspend payments when they are due us.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is just a question of whether the Government wants to abandon the conception, which I think was a very wise one, that it was our duty to establish and maintain an adequate merchant marine to serve our commerce, or lend it this assistance. They can scrap all these ships, which are costing something.

Mr. NORRIS. It is evident, it seems to me, that the Government, with its present income, is not able to keep all of these activities going. They must either declare a moratorium, as far as the post-office activities are concerned in the country, or they must cut these payments they are making to these shipping lines. At least, it seems to me it would not be unfair to apply the same principle to these shipping concerns that our foreign debtors have applied to us, and simply say, "We have not the money. We can not raise it." Rather than to discharge employees drawing several hundred thousand dollars in salaries in the Post Office Department in our own country, and thus kill it, why not declare a moratorium on these subsidies?

Mr. FLETCHER. It would tie up these ships, and if the ships are unable to run, then of course it will be necessary to discharge a number of seamen and officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I would like to hurry on; but I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask about the contract to which the Senator has referred. That was with a Government-owned line running out of Tampa.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The operators of the line entered into a contract to buy that line at about one-sixteenth of the cost of the ships. They made that contract with the Shipping Board.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then at the same time, after getting a tremendous subvention, or subsidy, in the price of the ships, they went before the Postmaster General and got a contract.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And they got it in this way. Under the advertisement they started the line to run under the contract so quickly that no other line on the seas could bid on it except this particular line. That is what happened.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many ships were in that line?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not remember.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government was losing money on these ships year after year. The cost of operation far exceeded the revenue from the earnings of the ships. So the Government unloaded an unprofitable business on these purchasers. There is no doubt about that. I assume, taking all the circumstances together, that the purchasers figured and understood that they were to get a foreign mail contract. Otherwise they never would have bought the ships at all. I expect that was all understood when the trade was made. They would not otherwise have bought the ships, because they were losing money operating them for the Government, and they had to have something to offset the loss, which they conceived an ocean mail contract would provide. That is how the transaction went through. Out of $18,000,000 of contracts made throughout the country for foreign mail service this is the only contract in the Gulf.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming now, which, of course, I do, that the Senator's figures are correct, that the figures given by the Senator from Tennessee are correct—and that is that the shipping company got the ships for one-sixteenth of their value——

Mr. FLETCHER. Oh, no; not of their value.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of their original cost.

Mr. FLETCHER. They could not sell them at all now at any figure.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; so that the ships to a great extent were gifts, and assuming that they got enough money out of the Government to operate them and still could not make them pay and still made a financial failure of it, what excuse can be given for trying to operate them in the line at all?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are not making a financial failure at all. I did not say that. I said they would have incurred a loss year after year and month after month and day after day except for the ocean mail contracts. That enables them to even up, and they are going on and developing trade, sending our commerce to the Orient, to Africa, and to various points of the world.

Coming back now to the matter I was discussing, the America France Line made 52 voyages per year; the American Hampton Roads 58 voyages per year; the American Republics Line 44 voyages a year; Dixie Mediterranean Line, Southern States Line, American Gulf Orient Line, 205 voyages per year from the Gulf. The total of all services, the sale of which is contemplated, was 359 voyages per year.

The total out-of-pocket cost of the whole service is $5,010,456 per year. That is, the total cost, if the board continued to operate them, would be $6,669,148 per year. Continuing these lines would cost the Government $6,669,148 per annum. The total of the mail contracts for all these services and all these lines amounts to $4,175,463. In other words, there is a saving of $2,500,000 by letting the ocean mail contracts and letting these people operate the lines and relieving the Shipping Board of the cost of operation.

The question is whether we are willing to continue to burden the Government with the deficit in the cost of operating this service which could be offset by the ocean mail contracts and the Government could save over $2,000,000 a year, pay the contract, and have the service at the same time. That is the question to be considered. I do not want to see the service abandoned. I do not believe the country can afford to have the services abandoned notwithstanding exports and imports have fallen off. We have to go out for this business all over the world. We are in touch with all the nations and all the ports of the world. We must keep that up because some day we are going to extend our trade and increase our exports and imports.

Reference was made to the United Fruit Co., a rich company which has mail contracts. What is the United Fruit Co. doing? The people who get contracts are required to maintain the line and replace the ships. The United Fruit Co. is to-day building 6 magnificent ships in American yards for their service, 3 at Hampton Roads and 3 in northern yards. They are actually building those ships at costs running into millions of dollars, to be operated under our flag and engage in American commerce.

Some sport was attempted to be made about the matter of refrigeration. Refrigeration is necessary not merely for the ships but for our commerce, because they operate to Central and South American countries and carry fruit. We can not deliver fruit across the Atlantic Ocean—grapefruit, oranges, and so forth—without refrigeration.

Therefore it was specified in the plans for their ships that they should be equipped with refrigeration facilities in order to serve our trade and commerce, to do business with these people with whom we are seeking to do business. That is why the requirement is incorporated. It does not have anything to do with the mails, but in making the contract for carrying the mail we reserve the right to plan the ships, to design the ships—at least they must comply with standards laid down by the Navy and by the Shipping Board. That is one of the requirements which we exacted. We exacted the requirement that they must build the additional ships and that they must be built in American yards and operated under our flag. That is a part of the contract.

Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from Mr. O'Connor, chairman of the Shipping Board, addressed to the Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS, a Member of the House, on April 18, 1932, and the statement to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the letter and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 18, 1932.

Hon. EWIN L. DAVIS,
Chairman on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHAIRMAN DAVIS: Referring to letter of April 16, 1932, regarding economies which can be effected by the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation, I beg to advise you that the board this morning ratified and approved the letter as delivered to you.

The board particularly desires to call your attention to an additional figure of saving which can be effected if all the lines are sold, amounting to $443,945. The board feels that the cost of mail pay first year for the Gulf lines as already calculated in Exhibit C of the April 16, 1932, letter is overstated by the figure just named, and therefore we can assure you that there will be an additional saving of $443,945 over and above that already shown in the April 16 statement.

This additional figure does not include the advantage to the Treasury of the 25 per cent down payment in cash which would accrue from the sale of the lines the first year. This cash would amount to $1,255,477.56.

To summarize: Whereas our letter of April 16 shows total savings by the board and Fleet Corporation of $2,305,240, we may go further and say that there will be in addition to that $443,945 and $1,255,477.56, making a total figure of economy through the retrenchment and sales program submitted, of $4,004,662.56.

Exhibit C of our letter of April 16, 1932, is resubmitted, showing revision in amount of mail pay for Gulf services and stating the sailings and figures of operation and mail pay as one consolidated line. You will note column headed "Total out-of-pocket cost." This figure is the amount the board would save in cash requirements were the respective lines sold, i. e., the amount inclusive of the lump-sum payments and the fleet overhead. The out-of-pocket cost does not include the non-cash items of depreciation and overhead.

Very truly yours, T. V. O'CONNOR, Chairman.

Financial results to Government from sale of Shipping Board Lines and award of mail contracts

Lines whose sale is contemplated	Voyages per year	Lump sum, all voyages	Merchant Fleet Corporation overhead [1]	Total out-of-pocket cost	Depreciation, 8 per cent	Interest, 3 per cent	Total cost continued Shipping Board operation	Total cost mail pay first year
America France Line (O. A. 1924)	52	$535,756	$114,916	$650,672	$115,872	$43,452	$809,996	$441,920
American Hampton Roads Line (includes Oriole & Yankee)	58	446,600	140,642	587,242	135,328	50,748	773,318	579,435
American Republics Line	44	396,000	146,909	542,909	133,384	50,019	726,312	654,108
Gulf services: Dixie Mediterranean Line, Dixie U. K. Line, Southern States Line, American Gulf Orient Line	205	2,495,000	734,613	3,229,613	821,752	308,157	4,359,522	2,500,000
Total all services, sale of which is contemplated	359	3,873,356	1,137,080	5,010,436	1,206,336	452,376	6,669,148	4,175,463
LINES WHOSE VESSELS CAN NOT BE SOLD BECAUSE THEIR MINIMUM PRICE AS FIXED BY LAW IS PROHIBITIVE
American Pioneer Line:
Australia	5	125,000						144,750
India	11	385,000						296,725
Orient	10	330,000						337,500
Total	26	840,000
Excess repairs		150,000
Total		990,000	165,910	1,155,910				778,975

[1] Estimated

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, on several occasions in the last two weeks I have discussed this matter somewhat in detail and I do not intend at this time to refer to it again at length. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] has referred to a statement to which I have just given out publicity through the press, including a table showing the number of men in the Post Office Department who will have to be discharged in case the 10 per cent cut is carried into effect. The statement was by States. I asked the Post Office Department to give me the figures, and to break down the total figures into States. They have not volunteered this information. I have asked the Post Office Department to give me other information, which they have furnished, in relation to the effect of the 10 per cent cut. I have requested the Secretary of the Treasury to give me various forms of information, which has been furnished. They have not done this voluntarily.

The Senate instructed the Appropriations Committee to make a 10 per cent cut in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill. In making that 10 per cent cut somebody must be hurt. The Senate excluded the building program from the 10 per cent cut, and, in my opinion, acted wisely in so doing. Therefore it must fall on the balance of the bill. The 10 per cent cut must also fall on the Post Office Department appropriation. It becomes necessary under that order of the Senate to cut $80,000,000 from the Post Office appropriation. Where can this be done? The Senator from Tennessee states that it can be done by canceling the ocean mail contracts and the air mail contracts. I contend that that can not be done at this time. There are various forms of machinery provided by the Government for attending to matters of that kind, but the Appropriations Committee is not the organization to decide whether these contracts shall be cancelled or not. The canceling of the contracts means the repudiation by the Government of its definite and positive legal obligations, and I do not believe the Government is going to repudiate its contracts. If anything wrong is found in the contracts, there are ways of correcting them, and I would be in favor of righting them, of course.

Mr. President, the Post Office Department has stated plainly time and again that the only place the cut can be made is through reduction in the various services of the department. That means discharging employees. I have given out the statement to the public a number of times lately and, I hope, in a clear form. It will mean that tens of thousands of men and women will have to be discharged. I do not want to see this done, and that is the reason for my special activity in getting the question before the American people, so they can give their word that they do not want these faithful employees discharged and do not want to have the various branches of the Government service disorganized and crippled. They do not want these services to be curtailed and done away with, as they would have to be in many instances.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the Post Office Department is consolidating rural routes in every part of the country to-day? Are they not engaged in the consolidation of rural routes all over the country?

Mr. ODDIE. I understand the Post Office Department is active in trying to make consolidations and to effect economies in that line wherever possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that whenever they consolidate rural routes it means throwing some employee out of employment?

Mr. ODDIE. That is true; and where it is not necessary that two lines exist and where they can consolidate them without doing any harm, that will be done. But this arbitrary wholesale demand on the Post Office Department to consolidate thousands of them, as they will have to do at once if the 10 per cent cut is carried through, is working a great hardship and will seriously curtail the services which the people in our cities and towns and on the farms are receiving to-day. We can not afford to make these wholesale drastic cuts in this manner now.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think the Federal personnel should make any contribution of any nature to the deficit situation which we confront?

Mr. ODDIE. That goes to the question of wage reduction; and I do not propose to discuss that question at this time. I have not brought it into the discussion. I am discussing the question of the 10 per cent cut which the Senate has ordered in the appropriation bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The question in my mind is whether or not the 10 per cent cut to which the Senator addresses himself is not bound up in some degree with the economy program now being developed in the House, and whether it is possible for us to answer intelligently the Senator's question until we know the answer to the question raised in the House.

Mr. ODDIE. There is a great deal of merit in what the Senator from Michigan has just suggested; but suppose, before the House has decided what shall be carried in the economy bill in regard to wage and salary reduction, the Senate should make an arbitrary 10 per cent cut in the bill now under discussion? Then we would have to readjust this bill with what had been done in the House economy program. I think there is a great deal in what the Senator has suggested. There should be more coordination between the House and the Senate in this matter. I think informal discussion among the leaders and those specially interested would help solve the problem. But if the Senate is to make the 10 per cent cut before the House and Senate have determined what will be carried in the economy program bill in regard to wages and salaries, I am afraid something unintelligent will result.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Can the Senator advise me whether all the Federal personnel in Washington has the benefit of a 30-day annual vacation with pay and 30 days' sick leave with pay?

Mr. ODDIE. My impression is that it does. It may be that I am wrong about it. I have not studied all the details of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think at that point there might not be some reasonable contribution which might be made to our program this year?

Mr. ODDIE. I have no doubt there might be some contributions made, but that is a matter which should be considered in connection with the economy bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I agree with the Senator respecting that.

Mr. ODDIE. I do not think it belongs in this particular bill.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has commented on the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to the Treasury appropriation bill, which is a part of the bill we are now discussing. The Secretary of the Treasury was requested to state where, in his opinion, this cut could be made with the least harm to the service. He pointed out that, in his opinion, the public-buildings program could be cut with less harm than would result from the discharge of employees; but the Senate has given its approval to the elimination of that suggestion, and I am very glad it has taken that course.

The only alternative open to the Secretary of the Treasury in that case was to state that personnel in his department must be discharged, because a large part of the appropriation goes to the payment of personnel. He stated that upwards of 6,000 employees in the Treasury Department would have to be discharged if the 10 per cent cut were made. I have pointed out where harm would come from that wholesale discharge. I have shown that the Government will lose in revenue many times the amount of the cut if it shall be made.

The Secretary of the Treasury pointed out that one method of applying the cut, if it were carried through, would be the abolishment of customs offices in the interior States and the consolidation of certain others on the seacoast. He did not offer this as a voluntary suggestion, but made it in answer to our request to point out where cuts could be made with the least harm in case they had to be made.

Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this question further at this time. It will be again brought up on the floor of the Senate. I simply want to state that I take the responsibility for having called this matter to the attention of the American people as best I could. In the first place, I called the attention of the American people to the harm that would come by eliminating under the building program from 250 to 300 public buildings which are now ready to be started in the cities of the United States. That would cause severe suffering and untold disappointment. We should not think of taking a step of that kind, and the Senate unanimously decided not to do so. The Senator from Tennessee disagrees with me, and thinks that those buildings should not be constructed at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ODDIE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Secretary of the Treasury also disagrees with the Senator.

Mr. ODDIE. I will admit that he does.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will remember his testimony to the effect that he did not think the department could very well spend $108,000,000 on public buildings next year; that he thought $14,000,000 could easily be cut off the building-program appropriation without hurting that program in the least; and that as much as $25,000,000 might be cut off, as I remember his testimony. I think I am right.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, some days ago I referred to the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I placed in the RECORD, in which he stated that if a 10 per cent cut were made in the whole bill the building program for 1932 and 1933 would have to be indefinitely postponed. I am relying on his statement on that point. He feels that a cut can be made in that program, but I disagree with him in that respect. I feel that too much harm will be done to American industry and American labor to permit a thing of that kind to be done.

Mr. President, I will not discuss this matter further. The Senator from Tennessee referred to my remarks over the radio on this question on Saturday night as those I have given to the press regarding the number of post-office employees who will have to be discharged in case the 10 per cent cut is made. They are different statements. To clear the matter up I ask to have my radio address printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

We in Congress are providing for the appropriation of money with which to run the Government of the United States during the next fiscal year. The need for economy is great. We are all well aware of it and doing our utmost to bring it about. But we also are burdened with the duty of seeing to it that the essential functions of government are discharged with efficiency. We can not permit ballyhoo and hysteria to take the place of sound judgment and thoughtful action.

The several appropriation bills to provide funds for operating the great departments of government must, under the Constitution, originate in the House of Representatives. The House bills are based on estimates made up in the first place by the various bureaus. These estimates are then revised and reviewed by the several Cabinet officers, and finally scrutinized and revised by the Budget Bureau. This process requires months of work, study, and conferences. The final estimates, as approved by the Director of the Budget, then form the basis on which Congress builds each appropriation bill. The work on these bills in Congress begins with the House Committee on Appropriations, whose duty it is to translate the Budget into the form of appropriation bills, and start them on their journey on the road to become laws.

The work of the departments in estimating their needs for this year has been conducted with economy as the paramount objective. This, under strict instructions from the administration. The Cabinet officers cut down the estimates of the bureau chiefs. The very efficient and merciless Director of the Budget, Colonel Roop, in his turn, pared down the Cabinet officers' estimates to the very bone before approving them for presentation to the House. These Budget estimates were then considered carefully and further reduced by subcommittees of the House. The findings of the subcommittees were approved by the full Committee on Appropriations. The finished bills were then debated at length on the floor, and passed by the House with such amendments or specific reductions as the House determined advisable, and are now appearing in the Senate for action by that body.

The Interior Department bill came to the Senate first, after having gone through these stages. It carried $50,000,000 in round figures. When it reached the Senate it was referred to a subcommittee which held hearings, gave it due consideration, and reported it to the full committee, which in turn reported it to the Senate with recommendations.

And then came the most astounding action! Following the leadership of Senator McKELLAR, of Tennessee, a majority of the Senate, without a moment's consideration of the report and recommendations of the committee, with no thought of the months of work and study given to the preparation of that bill, abruptly sent it back to the committee with the arbitrary order to reduce it a flat 10 per cent below whatever sum it carried as it came over from the House.

The Department of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor bill met the same fate.

And then came over to the Senate from the House the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill carrying $1,100,000,000, the largest of all the appropriation bills. It was referred to the subcommittee of which I am chairman. We determined it was a waste of time to report the bill based on the Budget recommendations if our work was to be cut as had been the other bills. We therefore sought instructions from the Senate in advance. Some of us took the floor and endeavored to convince our colleagues of the folly of such a method of working out the Government finances. But we were defeated by a vote of 37 to 31. Our task then became one of cutting from the House appropriation bill $110,000,000, whether we could do it sensibly or not.

We called before us Secretary of the Treasury Mills and Postmaster General Brown, "whose departments were affected by the proposed reductions," to get their views as to how we could best carry out the orders of the Senate. After hearing these two Cabinet officers I have become convinced it can not be done unless vital activities of the Government, such as the mail service, collection of customs, and income taxes, etc., are to be crippled or entirely paralyzed. It is my conclusion that this method of managing our Government's finances is not such as the people of this country expect us to use, and I have determined to ask the Senate to reconsider its order. I believe our responsibilities as legislators are too great to permit this appropriation bill committed to our care to be torn down by unthinking, unreasonable hysteria.

Let me remind you that when the Senate first proposed a 10 per cent cut in the Treasury-Post Office bill, the Secretary of the Treasury informed our committee that if such a cut was made it would mean the indefinite postponement of construction of between 250 and 300 public buildings authorized by the last Congress, some in every State. This information spread over the country. Senators began to hear from home. Interested labor that had looked forward to work on these buildings protested against having these vast contracts withdrawn from the market. So the Senate revised its instructions, and our committee was told to apply the 10 per cent cut to all appropriations save that for public buildings.

That you may better understand the problem that now confronts our committee and the Senate, let me cite a few illustrations of what necessarily will happen if the Senate's order stands—for the Senate still insists on cutting 10 per cent out of the remaining $146,000,000 in the Treasury Department bill. This cut, amounting to over $14,000,000, must be borne by the various bureaus of the Treasury Department which include the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Secretary Mills informed us that this cut could be made only by the wholesale dismissal of deputy collectors and internal-revenue agents in every State and district. Measured by past efficiency, he demonstrated that through the dismissal of this army of tax experts the Government would lose not less than $95,000,000 in income taxes.

Our committee can not see the economy of saving $14,000,000 if such a saving means the ultimate loss of $95,000,000. But such is one of the consequences of this blind 10 per cent order.

No branch of the Government service is closer to the people than the Post Office. It serves every city, town, and hamlet; it reaches into the most remote rural districts. The most costly of all departments, because its benefits are the most widespread, the Post Office Department, has on its pay roll the major portion of all Government employees.

As the Post Office bill came from the House it carried $805,500,000. A 10 per cent cut would be more than $80,000,000. Seventy-one per cent of the Post Office appropriation goes for the payment of salaries and wages. The Postmaster General informs us that the proposed reduction in the Post Office appropriation would compel him to take from the Government pay rolls and add to the list of unemployed no less than 40,000 letter carriers, mail clerks, rural carriers, and other handlers of the mail. Every State, every city, every rural community would feel the effects.

To-day the business man in the large city is accustomed to having four deliveries of mail a day at his office. Under the 10 per cent cut ordered by a majority of the Senate the Postmaster General has told the committee that the business man will have to be content with only two deliveries daily, and where the mails are delivered twice daily in residential districts of the large cities, the Senate order, if persisted in, would mean but a single delivery daily. In the smaller towns and villages that have grown proud of their carrier delivery there must be a step back; the villager would be obliged, as in past ages, to go to the post office for his mail, for Senate economy would mean the discharge of every village carrier, and the village carrier would find himself jobless.

And in the rural districts the effects would be even more disastrous. In those regions where rural free delivery has been built up to a daily service; where the farmer gets his "city paper" almost as promptly as the city reader, carrier service must of necessity be cut to triweekly. Nine thousand rural-delivery routes would be so affected, to say nothing of 8,000 additional rural routes that would have to be consolidated, two into one, which would mean not only a slowing down of deliveries but the discharge of 4,000 rural carriers.

Secretary Mills tells us that if the Customs Service must take its 10 per cent cut, he must close every port of entry in the inland States and must close the majority of ports along our coasts and borders, or consolidate the smaller with the larger ports. Each office closed and each consolidation means dispensing with the services of experienced men and women trained in the collection of Federal revenue; it means the discharge of clerks and other employees. Each office closed affords just one more loophole through which may be smuggled drugs and narcotics and one more loophole through which may be smuggled cheap alien labor to compete with American labor.

No arbitrary cut made by the Senate since it went on its economy spree more clearly demonstrates the unwisdom of percentage slashes than the cut in the appropriation for Hoover Dam.

The Interior Department, in preparing its estimates, asked for $12,000,000 to carry on work on this great dam enterprise for the next fiscal year. The Budget, looking for opportunities to save, reduced this figure to $10,000,000, and when the bill was presented to the Senate it carried only $8,000,000, the figure the House approved. When the Senate ordered a 10 per cent slash in the Interior Department bill, Hoover Dam took a 20 per cent cut, and as the bill went to the President it carried $6,000,000, just half the amount held necessary by the department to continue work at the pace set by the contractor. Five million dollars in interest per year will be lost if the work is delayed. The cut in this appropriation, if allowed to stand, necessarily will slow down progress on the work; it will mean dismissal of half the 4,000 men now employed there from every State in the Union, 40 per cent of whom are ex-service men, and, like every other arbitrary economy forced by the Senate, will add to the army of the unemployed.

Last year the aggregate appropriation for the Treasury and Post Office Departments was $1,104,586,000. This year this was reduced by the Budget Bureau to $1,082,575,000, and the House of Representatives made further reductions, bringing the total down to $1,059,898,563. In other words, if the Senate should accept the House bill as it stands, the appropriations carried by the Treasury-Post Office bill would be $44,688,327 below what was appropriated a year ago.

Out of the large number of striking illustrations that might be given I have selected a few which should convince the American people that these indiscriminate 10 per cent cuts in the appropriation bills are unwise and uneconomic in the extreme, and will result in irreparable damage to the American people and to American industry generally. The conscientious effort of the Senate to curtail governmental expenditures in the midst of this period of depression has on later investigation been shown to be a most damaging and costly experiment. I feel confident that on further study the Senate will desire to reconsider this matter and rescind its action. American industry, with that in other parts of the world, is suffering from economic distress. There is much destructive pessimism in the air. Our people have been affected by it almost to the point of hysteria. This period of depression will end. We should enact constructive legislation that will encourage our people, relieve this period of distress in so far as possible, and expedite the return to normal prosperity. We have heard too much of this destructive pessimism. Let us start now to instill into the economic thought of our country a new spirit of constructive optimism and start the wheels of industry turning again.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I want to offer a casual observation, supplementing the remarks of the able Senator from Nevada. I cordially agree with him that it would be unconscionable for any general disruption of the Federal service to be precipitated at this time by a wholesale dismissal of Federal employees in any branch of the public service, but, Mr. President, it seems to me that, sooner or later, we must frankly confront the question whether or not the Federal personnel must not make a fair contribution to a temporary answer to our difficulties. The best way to assure that it is fair is to discuss it as a reality and avoid arbitrary extremes. This is what I have in mind, bearing upon the proposition that sooner or later some reasonable formula must be discovered.

In one issue of one newspaper from my home State of Michigan to-day I find several illuminating news articles. I find one from the State capital indicating that the entire State personnel in Michigan has undergone a 10 to 15 per cent salary cut. I find that the entire teaching staff of the public schools of Grand Rapids has met in a spirit of high service and voluntarily proposed, on its own behalf, the acceptance of a temporary 15 per cent cut in compensation for the current year. I find that, after the city manager of Grand Rapids called together the other civic employees of that municipality and made a presentation to them of the condition in which the municipal treasury finds itself, they, patriotically and with a fervor suggestive of the old-time war devotion, agreed voluntarily to accept a certain degree of temporary contributory cut in this emergency. I might add that another newspaper clipping of the same day indicates that in the city of Detroit municipal employees are soon to receive their first pay checks since April 1, and that there is serious discussion of a temporary 50 per cent reduction of pay checks during the months of May and June, or a 100 per cent reduction in June. I take it that these conditions in the public service are typical across the country.

It seems to me if that is the tax situation in the State of Michigan, which is one of the largest taxpayers to the Federal Government, it is unavoidably necessary, sooner or later, for us frankly to inquire whether the Federal employee is the only governmental employee in the United States who shall be completely immune to all types of temporary contribution in working out this situation. I think the Federal employees are just as patriotic as are the State employees and the municipal employees. I think that all in the world they want to protect themselves against is inequity and unfairness, prejudice, and discrimination in the treatment which they receive. They ought to be protected upon all of these scores. None of their hard-earned rights should be permanently jeopardized. But, sooner or later, if the Government is going frankly to confront the personnel situation, it must face it in some such terms as are now pending in various forms before the House of Representatives in connection with the so-called economy program bill. Some method must be provided by which some legitimate degree of relief shall be contributed by every factor involved in the Federal situation; and we may as well realize that sooner or later this must be done. It is bitter business; but it is less bitter if done on a reasonable scale which does not precipitate additional wholesale unemployment.

Let my position be wholly plain. I believe in the maintenance of wages. I believe in the maintenance of jobs. I am not discussing a raid on either. I oppose such raids. I am speaking only of what temporary readjustments may be necessary in connection with these public expenditures. I am saying that these readjustments are no more to be wholly avoided in the Federal service than in State and municipal services. Therefore I am suggesting that we all, including the Federal employees themselves, should face these realities in a candid study of what may be best for all concerned, so that whatever temporary readjustments may occur shall not spell wide and needless disaster. I am agreeing that there should be no arbitrary and unreasoning action. I am saying that the best way to defeat this latter hazard will be to have in hand a rational formula. Instead of intrenching in extreme positions at either end of the equation, our need is for quest of a meeting of minds upon middle ground.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I believe that we are facing this problem in the wrong manner. Distress is over the country; unemployment is widespread; the wheels of industry have been slowed down. We want the wheels of industry to start turning again. I believe that if the Government shall insist on the cutting down of governmental activities and the wholesale discharge of employees and the cutting of Government wages and salaries, it will have a discouraging and damaging effect on industries generally throughout the country. I do not think we should do it. We should not set such an example.

Mr. President, we are robbing the foundation of our governmental structure to add to the superstructure. I do not think it is the right thing to do; I think we should take the opposite view. The wheels of industry will start again in this country with a little optimism and encouragement here and there. One of the first cities to feel the benefits of an improvement in conditions will be Detroit, in the great State of Michigan, which is, to a very large extent, the home of the automobile industry.

I for one will continue to preach optimism and to decry Federal cuts in pay and the discharge of Federal employees. I think the example of such action will be damaging and wrong, and I hope—and feel confident—that we can get through without it.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 51.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Kean	Schall
Austin	Dale	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Davis	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dickinson	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Dill	La Follette	Smith
Black	Fess	Lewis	Smoot
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Frazier	Long	Stephens
Bratton	George	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Gore	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Harrison	Norris	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Cohen	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Hayden	Patterson	Waterman
Coolidge	Howell	Pittman	Watson
Copeland	Hull	Reed	White
Costigan	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, Senate bill 51 is an important measure; and it seems to me it should not be voted on at this hour, when there is such a small attendance. The Chair has just announced that there are 86 Senators present, but it will be observed that very few of them remained in the Chamber after answering to their names. I think I can speak until 5 o'clock, or a little later, if necessary, but I am not particular about doing it. I should like to see a vote on this question go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator had better go forward with his statement until 5 o'clock. At that hour we will determine whether we will stay in session longer or take a recess.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, Senate bill 51 is an authorization bill. It is rather indefinite. No one seems to know just what it means. It may mean the ultimate expenditure of anywhere from about $100,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, according to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

During recent months, and, in fact, for several years, a great deal has been said about disarmament, about cutting down naval armaments, about cutting down naval expenditures and Army expenditures. At the League of Nations meeting last September this disarmament proposition was discussed and an urgent appeal was made to bring about at least one year of truce in the building of armaments. That proposition was put up to the various nations. President Hoover, of the United States, was one of the first to accept the proposition of an armament truce. It is claimed that by the 16th of last November some 50 nations had agreed upon the truce. They agreed to refrain from any measures involving an increase in their armaments.

While Senate bill 51 carries no direct appropriation, and probably no appropriation will be asked for this year, I submit that it is a measure involving an increase in armaments. I believe it is contrary to the truce that has been agreed upon by the great nations of the world. It is contrary to the sentiments of the United States as they have been expressed at the various armament conferences.

It seems to me this is a mighty poor time to ask for the passage of a measure of this kind, authorizing appropriations for building a pair of battleships, when at the present time we have our delegates at a world conference looking toward disarmament. I am at a loss to know whether Senate bill 51 means what it says or whether it is just a bluff to try to demonstrate to the world, and particularly to the disarmament conference meeting across the Atlantic at this time, that we really do not want disarmament; that we want to keep up our present naval force and, if anything, to increase it. Certainly, if we meant what we have said in the past, we should not pass at this time a measure like Senate bill 51.

The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee stated, as I remember, that there are about 200 vessels in the United States Navy at the present time; that their life is 20 years; and that we should keep repairing and building all the time in order to keep up our allotment under the London treaty. It will take about $100,000,000 per year for 20 years, or $2,000,000,000 for the total of 20 years, the life of a battleship.

I do not believe that an expenditure of that kind can be justified. With many million men out of employment, with farmers throughout the United States either broke or going broke, with business men, bankers, and other business interests either broke or going broke, I can not for the life of me see how the Senate or the Congress of the United States can justify a favorable vote upon Senate bill 51.

Mr. President, the condition of the American farmer has been going from bad to worse since 1920, when the deflation was brought on by the Federal Reserve Board, which may be termed a semi-Government organization or institution. The farmers were the first to be hit by the deflation. Both the values of their land and the prices of their farm products went down until they were deflated by billions of dollars. As I say, their condition has been going from bad to worse during all the years since 1920.

The purchasing power of the farmer has been lost. In fact, at the present time the average farmer of the United States has no purchasing power; he has no money with which to buy even the necessities of life.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Knowing that the Senator from North Dakota has been a constant advocate of the interests of the farmer, and is one looking to the protection of agriculture, I ask the Senator whether he will explain to me, or tell me where I can get the benefit of the information, in what way the Federal Reserve Board acted by which he feels it operated against the farmer, and what was the manner of its operation, that I really may learn it from him? I would like to know what it was they did, and how they operated against the farmer, to produce the effect the learned Senator seems to feel their action has had.

Mr. FRAZIER. Back in 1920 it seemed to be the general attitude of the business interests throughout the Nation that there was too large a circulation of money, that there was too much inflation, so called. Inasmuch as the Federal Reserve Board regulated the amount of currency and the credit of the United States, they were called upon, apparently, to reduce the inflation, and a secret meeting was held by the Federal Reserve Board, I think in May, 1920, and certain actions of the Federal Reserve Board were not made known to the public, among which was an agreement to start in on a deflation program, calling in the loans which had been made, and especially the farm loans.

Some of the big institutions of the country apparently got wind of this proposed deflation. I believe one of the great institutions of the city of Chicago, in the State which the Senator represents, was one to take advantage of that advance information, and floated bonds, as I recall, at 8 per cent for some of the packing companies, so that they might have a supply of money on hand sufficient to enable them to carry on their business, even though it cost them 8 per cent, in order to carry them over what was supposed to be coming, this deflation which was to be started soon after that by the action of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Federal Reserve Board did call in loans. In my State, which is almost purely an agricultural State, farm loans were called. It was impossible for farmers to pay their loans, at least to pay them in full. The bankers insisted that they must have the money, or that they would start foreclosure proceedings, because the little banker in North Dakota was pressed by the larger banker in Minneapolis, and St. Paul, and Chicago, and on farther east, and the members of the Federal reserve system were pressed by the Federal reserve banks with which they were connected. So the deflation started.

The result was that the prices of land went down, the prices of farm products went down, and from 1920 to this day the farmer has never known prosperity in the United States.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I may say to the Senator from Illinois that out of the crop of 1920, Senators will recall that the market for farm products broke in the fall of 1920 and in the year 1921. Information was given to the country that farm prices broke because of a lack of a market, because of overproduction, and because of a lack of exports. But if Senators will look into the report of the Department of Commerce on agricultural exports they will find that, of the 18 major agricultural products, we exported more out of that crop of 1920 than we had ever done in the history of the United States, even during the war. We never had such a market. The calling of loans forced dumping by farmers of agricultural products on the market, and broke the prices.

If anyone got any benefit out of that, it must have been the taxpayers of Europe, who were able to buy food cheaper than they would have been able to buy it if that action by the Federal Reserve Board and the member banks had not been taken. It has been suggested that that was done in order to give Europe food so cheap that after they had bought food they would have something left to pay the interest on loans which they owed here. Certainly the result of the action was to break the agricultural communities of the United States, a condition from which they never to this day have recovered. Even during the so-called period of paper prosperity, up until 1929, agriculture kept losing its income, until by 1929 it had lost 40 per cent of the income it had in 1920. That is the information given in the reports of the Agricultural Department and of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his remarks.

The deflation, which started in 1920, brought down the prices of farm products, and at the present time, in fact, during the past couple of years, the farmers have been selling their products, practically every product they produce, at prices below the cost of production. No business can succeed under such a system. It makes no difference whether it is agriculture, the International Harvester Co., or the banking business, or any other industry or business, it can not succeed when selling its products at prices below the cost of production.

That is one trouble with our Post Office Department. The discussion this afternoon brought out the fact that some twenty-five or thirty million dollars has been given to the shipping interests, practically amounting to subsidies, and charged to the deficit of the Post Office Department. Of course, the Post Office Department can not make a fair showing under a situation of that kind. If the United States Congress wants to give a subsidy to the shipping interests, all well and good; let them do it as a subsidy and not pass the buck to the Post Office Department.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. My understanding is that the Post Office Department keeps that account with reference to foreign mail contracts and subventions separate from the other expenditures of the department. I do not think that item enters into the question of the deficit, because they keep that separate from the ordinary expenditures of the department.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, does not the amount that is lost in these contracts enter into the deficit?

Mr. FLETCHER. It does not. That is kept entirely separate from the ordinary expenses of the department, I think. Of course, it shows on the books, but it is separate from the other expenditures.

Mr. FRAZIER. I can not see how they can possibly keep it from showing in the deficit of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it should not figure in the deficit charged against the Post Office receipts and expenditures as a Post Office Department. It is shown, it appears, but it does not enter into what they call their deficit, I think.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield so that we may have an executive session?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting a nomination in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service and an international protocol, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORT OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

TREATIES

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read Executive F (72d Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty of establishment and sojourn with Turkey.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], is absent for the moment, and I ask that the treaty may be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a few days ago when the treaty with Turkey was reached, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said he wanted to be present when that matter was acted upon, and the Senator from Idaho agreed that the matter might go over. In the absence of both those Senators, I ask that the Senate resume legislative session.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

INVESTMENTS IN FLORIDA REAL ESTATE

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in the issue of April 29 of the Herald, of South Jacksonville, Fla., appears a very interesting editorial by Judge John W. Dodge touching upon the stock-exchange manipulations and suggesting the wisdom of investing in Florida real estate. I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

THE HITOPADESA

By Judge John W. Dodge

FORTITUDE IN DISASTER

This striking sentence, most needed in our present condition of affairs, I recently read in the Hitopadesa of India, as one of the wisdom words of the book of good counsel:

"In disaster, dismay is a coward's quality; let us rather rely on fortitude, and devise some remedy."

What we need most of all at present is men of fortitude. There are facts which startle and dismay us. Rich we thought we were yesterday; poor we think we are to-day.

America bought listed Wall Street stocks in 1929 at fabulous prices. A recent circular of a reputable stock and bond house of New York recently said:

"The following companies which paid not less than $5 annual rate in 1929 (as indicated in each case) now pay nothing: American Car & Foundry ($6); American Locomotive ($8); Anaconda ($7); Baltimore & Ohio ($7); Bethlehem Steel ($6); J. I. Case ($6); Chicago & North Western ($5); Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific ($7); Chile Copper ($5); Illinois Central ($7); International Silver ($8); Kansas City Southern ($5); Kennecott Copper ($5); National Supply ($7); National Surety ($5); New York Central ($8); New York, Chicago & St. Louis ($6); New York, New Haven & Hartford ($6); Pere Marquette ($8); Porto Rican-American Tobacco "A" ($7); Prairie Pipe ($5); Real Silk Hosiery ($5); St. Louis & San Francisco ($8); Southern Pacific ($6); Southern Railway ($8); Standard Investing ($6); United States Industrial Alcohol ($6); United States Realty & Improvement ($5); Utah Copper ($15); Warren Bros. ($9); and Youngstown Sheet & Tube ($5)."

They further said: "If any moral is to be drawn from these data, it is the wisdom of investing 'close to the property.'"

Disaster has dismayed those who purchased such Wall Street stocks.

A smart man knows when to take a profit, but he is indeed a much smarter man who has the fortitude and bravery to take a loss, to forget it, and to profit by past experience.

The remedy to repair losses is to invest "close to the property"—to know what you are buying; to see the thing bought; to own it yourself. Relying upon others who have proven false in their opinions and judgments of value, who advised Wall Street manipulated stocks and bonds, is inviting further disaster.

Florida real-estate values are now low, sound, and have never declined as have Wall Street stocks and bonds. Put your money where you control it—not where others manipulate your investment. Exercise intelligent fortitude in disaster.

REPORT OF THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the fifteenth annual report of the Federal Farm Loan Board, covering operations during the calendar year 1931, which, with the accompanying report and data, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DEPRECIATION OF FOREIGN-CURRENCY VALUES (S. DOC. NO. 90)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting, in partial response to Senate Resolution 156, certain preliminary data for immediate use of the Senate in relation to depreciated currencies and international trade thereunder, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 3, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate May 2 (legislative day of April 29), 1932

SECRETARY IN THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE

Erle R. Dickover, of California, now a Foreign Service officer of class 3 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States of America.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 2 (legislative day of April 29), 1932

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY

To be captain

Robert A. White.

To be commanders

Carleton H. Wright.
Herman E. Fischer.
Thomas L. Gatch.

To be lieutenant commanders

Cyril T. Simard.
Henry A. Stuart.

To be lieutenants

Kenneth P. Hartman.
Murr E. Arnold.
Claude F. Sullivan.
Robert R. Buck.
David E. Roth.
William G. Pogue.

To be lieutenants (junior grade)

Robert W. Wood.
William D. Thomas.

To be paymaster

John N. Harriman.

To be passed assistant paymaster

Reed T. Roberts.

MARINE CORPS

To be majors

Leo D. Hermle.
Lemuel C. Shepherd, jr.

To be captains

Harry E. Leland.
William E. Quaster.

To be first lieutenants

Frank P. Pyzick.
Roy M. Gulick.
Charles G. Wadbrook.

POSTMASTERS

ARKANSAS

Ernest R. Wynn, Bald Knob.

UTAH

Boyd J. Barnard, Bingham Canyon.
Mattie S. Larsen, Castle Dale.
Harris B. Simonsen, Helper.
William S. Anderson, Moroni.
Hans P. Ipson, Panguitch.
John O. Anderson, Salina.

WASHINGTON

Roy E. Edwards, Ritzville.

WEST VIRGINIA

George E. Hurd, Richwood.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 2, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou hast always had witnesses among the children of men and Thou wilt be with them unto the end. We praise Thee that through all the long, weary centuries they have not been left alone. O come in fuller measure into the lives that Thou hast created and make us a greater reflection of Thy reason and wisdom. We need Thy guidance along the road in which Thou art the way, the truth, and the life. Our Father and our God, enable us to more thoroughly realize that the way problems are settled here is the way they will be debated on the stage of the whole world. Guard and direct us in our conclusions. Deliver us from serious misunderstandings and from every limitation that gropes and let us all make room for self-sacrifice and most earnest cooperation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 30, 1932, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9349. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4313. An act to prevent the successive disagreement of two juries, impaneled to try a criminal case in the Territory of Hawaii, from operating as an acquittal of the accused or from permitting the discharge of the accused from custody.

PART PLAYED BY THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES IN TREATY MAKING

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a speech I delivered before the American Society of International Law Saturday evening last on the part played by the House in treaty making.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech made by myself at the annual dinner of the American Society of International Law, Saturday, April 30, 1932:

Ladies and gentlemen of the American Society of International Law, in accepting your invitation to address you this evening on the subject of the share of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives in the treaty-making power of the Government of the United States, I find it necessary at once to go back to fundamental law as the basis for discussion.

You recall, of course, the constitutional[1] provision that the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur"; also[2] that the "Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

A cursory reading of the Constitution may seem to indicate that the House of Representatives has no share in the process of making treaties for the United States. The actual working of government, however, is but faintly foreshadowed by the letter of the Constitution, and the ramifications of treaties are many and intricate. The inseparable relation between treaties and constitutionally specified functions of the House of Representatives quickly become evident.

In actual practice, accordingly, the influence of the House of Representatives in the matter of maintaining international relations through treaties has always been one of real significance. It has also been one of increasing significance—doubtless due, in the first place, to the ever-increasing extent and complexity of that part of the law of our land which is comprised of treaties and perhaps, also, not unconnected with the fact that democracy has grown apace in this country and that the House of Representatives is the principal exponent of democracy in the governmental system of the United States.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs is, of course, merely the principal agency of the House of Representatives in dealing with treaty questions. A discussion of its influence upon treaty making is consequently not to be differentiated from a discussion of the influence of the House itself. I should not, however, overlook the fact that this influence of the House actually results in part from functions and activities that it exercises through other committees; though, of course, questions that obviously and patently pertain to treaties are referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

In undertaking to recount some of the more important of the functions of the House of Representatives which affect treaty making, there should be mentioned first the immense importance of absolute good faith on its part in order that the provisions of treaties may be given force and effect. It is common for treaties to provide for the payment of money. Under the practice of our Government,[3] the Secretary of the Treasury pays out money only when authorized to do so by statute law enacted by Congress. Accordingly, in order to give effect to this kind, as to certain other classes of treaties, the Congress, including the House of Representatives, passes acts or joint resolutions.

I am happy to say that, so far as I have ever heard, there has been no instance in which the House of Representatives has failed to take action when such action was necessary in order to fulfill the treaty obligations of the country.

In addition to the positive activity of the House thus exercised in order to give effect to certain treaties, it is essential that the [1] Art. II, sec. 2, second paragraph.

[2] Art. VI, second paragraph.
[3] In this connection, note Constitution Art. I, sec. 9, seventh paragraph, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

House refrain from the passage of legislation that may be in conflict with the obligations of treaties. The Constitution, in one of the passages quoted above, lays down the rule that statutes and treaties, duly enacted or entered into, are equally the supreme law of the land. Accordingly, the Supreme Court[4] has held that in the event of conflict the later in date, whether statute or treaty, shall prevail.

I am sorry to say that the record of the House of Representatives in this matter is less perfect than in the case of the passage of necessary legislation, for there have been occasional instances, the result usually, I dare say, of inadvertency, in which the House has joined the Senate in passing legislation which has forced the administrative officers of the Government to violate the solemn obligations, and consequently the honor, of their country.

In both cases the influence of the House of Representatives and its sense of national honor may and do have a very great influence upon the actual practice of making and maintaining the treaties of the United States.

In view of the constitutional provision[5] that revenue legislation shall originate in the House of Representatives, a curious, and I think erroneous, doctrine, but one that is the subject of persistent and tenacious belief on the part of its advocates, exists to the effect that any treaty which may deal with the revenue of the country shall not be operative until it has been confirmed by statute in the passage of which the House of Representatives shall join. Accordingly, when, in 1832, a treaty entered into force with France[6] containing provisions for reciprocal reductions in tariffs, the Congress took action,[7] somewhat belatedly, indeed, in order that statutory law should conform to the treaty provisions. Later reciprocity treaties of 1854 with Canada, of 1875 with Hawaii, and of 1902 with Cuba, specifically provided that they should not be binding until legislation had been enacted by Congress in confirmation of their provisions regulating tariff duties.[8]

Occasionally Congress has passed legislation specifically purporting to terminate treaties or portions of treaties. Thus the House of Representatives has taken part in what amounted, in a negative way, to treaty amendment, which amendment has not been the subject of the advice and consent of the Senate, two-thirds of those present concurring. For instance, in order to pave the way to reduce tariffs and eventually to the free entry of sugar into the United States, the tariff act of 1913 undertook to abrogate a portion of the reciprocity treaty with Cuba.[9]

A more important and interesting practice that has grown up, however, is that of authorizing the President by means of a statute, passed in the ordinary way by the two Houses of Congress, to enter into agreements with other countries, which agreements are not submitted to the Senate as are treaties. Nevertheless these Executive agreements, from the point of view of international law and international obligations, are precisely the same as treaties, though different in name and in the fact that they are usually, though not always, confined to matters of economic or technical relations.

In 1872[10] the Congress passed an act authorizing the Postmaster General, subject to ratification by the President, to enter into agreements for the purpose of maintaining the international postal service. Under this provision of law the United States has, without submission to the Senate, become party not only to numerous bipartite agreements with other countries, but to the successive revisions of the general convention of the Universal Postal Union, which is among the most important of the great multipartite treaties that have enriched international legislation during the last two or three generations. The Universal Postal Union, by the way, is one of the oldest of the numerous leagues of nations now existing in the world, to a dozen or more of which the United States belongs. We entered the postal league of nations by action of the President, authorized by ordinary majorities in Congress, not by a vote of two-thirds of the Senate.

An even more striking instance of international agreement authorized by Congress is the manner of handling the intergovernmental debts which grew out of the World War. The international agreements under which beginnings have been made toward the discharge of these debts have been entered into and confirmed under action by the two Houses of Congress, completely ignoring the rule of treaty making with the consent of two-thirds of the Senate.[11]

The tariff acts of 1890 and 1897 authorized the President to enter into agreements affecting tariff rates, and consequently the revenue. Numerous such agreements were entered into and were put into force without submission to the Senate. The bill[12] introduced into the House of Representatives this year by Representative Collier, which was the basis of the tariff bill eventually passed by the House of Representatives, authorized the President to enter into reciprocal agreements and made no mention of submission to the Senate.

In order to escape the possible question whether a treaty which amends on a large scale statutory enactments is, in constitutional law, self-executing, as well as to avoid the policy of amending statutes by treaty, the practice has developed for the President, if he proposes that the United States shall become party to multipartite or other conventions that are out of accord with existing statutes, to undertake to have the statute law made consistent prior to participation in the treaties.

An excellent case in point is the international convention for the protection of literary and artistic works. The President has transmitted this convention to the Senate, but only subsequent to the passage by the House of Representatives of a bill[13] designed to amend the copyright law so as to make it conform with the treaty. The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, acting under the advice of the Department of State, in favorably reporting the treaty, instructed its chairman not to bring it before the Senate until after the pending legislation had passed.

In these instances the influence and importance of the House of Representatives in treaty making becomes increasingly apparent.

Perhaps, however, the most notable instances of what, to all intents and purposes, was treaty making shared in by the House of Representatives have occurred in cases where results ordinarily accomplished by treaty were done by act or joint resolution in order deliberately to avoid the stipulation of the Constitution that the Senate shall proceed in such matters by a two-thirds vote.

Thus, in 1845, after the Senate had failed to give its assent to a treaty concluded with Texas for its annexation to the United States, Congress adopted joint resolutions declaring that it consented "that the territory properly included within, and rightfully belonging to, the Republic of Texas" might be erected into a new State, and admitting that State into the Union.[14] The Senate majority in favor of annexation was far less than two-thirds.

In 1911 a somewhat similar instance occurred when President Taft arranged with the Canadian authorities for the reciprocal reduction of tariff duties so soon as the legislatures of each country should have passed concurring legislation. The Congress of the United States passed such an act,[15] and what would to all intents and purposes have been a reciprocity treaty failed only because of the adverse attitude of the Canadian Parliament.

After the failure of the treaty of Versailles in the Senate, moreover, the Congress undertook to terminate the state of war between the United States and Germany and Austria by means of a joint resolution,[16] which resolution was afterwards recognized in the treaties of peace[17] entered into with those two countries.

The fact that Congress enacted this legislation suggests pertinently the belief of many that the provisions of the Constitution requiring two-thirds of the Senate to pass affirmatively on a treaty should be abrogated and a provision inserted that treaties may be enacted by a majority vote in the two Houses of Congress in the same way that statutes are enacted.

Moreover, in view of the fact that, regardless of legislation in conflict with treaties or failure to pass legislation necessary to fulfill the obligations of treaties, international law recognizes the treaties as unimpaired, which rule of international law was clearly stated by a former President and later Chief Justice of the United States in a recent arbitration case,[18] it would seem to be desirable to provide in the Constitution that legislation in conflict with the solemn obligations of the United States expressed in treaties should be null and void.

That the two-thirds rule is out of date is persuasively shown by the fact that with the multiplicity and variety of senatorial constituencies it is not only now possible for a very small minority, representing far fewer than one-third of the people of the country, to prevent the ratification of treaties desired by the majority, but also for a minority, representing two-thirds of the States, the smaller ones, to consent to treaties that are opposed by the representives of the majority of the people.

Dissatisfaction with minority rule in the matter of treaty making is, furthermore, doubtless in part the reason back of the growing practice of entering into international engagements by means of Executive agreements, quite regardless of legislative authorization.

In the early days the Executive was exceedingly chary of practices of this sort. President Monroe, indeed, after sanctioning the exchange of notes[19] between his Acting Secretary of State, Benjamin Rush, and Charles Bagot, Minister of Great Britain, by means of which the two countries entered into the famous agreement limiting naval armaments on the Great Lakes, became uncertain as to the propriety of what he had done and submitted the agree-

[4] Whitney v. Robertson (1888), 124 U. S. 190, 194.
[5] Art. 1, sec. 7.
[6] Art. VII of treaty signed July 4, 1831; operative, on exchange of ratifications, Feb. 2, 1832.
[7] Act of July 14, 1832, sec. 2, paragraph 23.
[8] Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed June 5, 1854, ratifications exchanged Sept. 9, 1854, Articles III, V; act of Aug. 5, 1854. Treaty between the United States and Hawaii, signed Jan. 30, 1895, ratifications exchanged June 3, 1875, especially Article V; act of Aug. 15, 1876. Treaty between the United States and Cuba, signed Dec. 11, 1902, ratifications exchanged Mar. 31, 1903, especially Article XI; act of Dec. 17, 1903.
[9] Act of Oct. 3, 1913, section 4, paragraph B, referring to proviso to Article VIII of treaty. The free-sugar provision of the act was, however, repealed before it became operative. Act of Apr. 27, 1916.
[10] Act of June 8, 1872, sec. 167, see U. S. v. Eighteen Packages (1914), 222 Fed. 121.
[11] Act of Feb. 9, 1922, and various joint resolutions confirmatory of individual agreements (act of Feb. 14, 1929).
[12] H. R. 6662, 72d Cong., 1st sess.
[13] H. R. 12549, Seventy-first Congress, third session.
[14] Moore, International Law Digest, V, 778–779. Resolutions of Mar. 1 and Dec. 29, 1845.
[15] Act of July 26, 1911.
[16] Resolution of July 2, 1921.
[17] Treaties of Aug. 25, 1921, and Aug. 24, 1921.
[18] Taft, sole arbiter between Great Britain and Costa Rica, 1923 (American Journal of International Law, January, 1924, p. 160).
[19] Signed April 28–29, 1817.

ment to the Senate[20] for confirmation in the same manner as treaties. Of late years, however, Presidents have, without ever consulting the Senate, entered into numerous arrangements, some of them of the highest political importance, by Executive action merely.

The constitutional status of the executive agreement has never been defined. As the constitutional authority for carrying on international relations, the President doubtless has the power to enter into international contractual arrangements other than those intended to be covered by the word "treaty," a power presumably not unforeseen by the makers of the Constitution. The practice as it exists, however, is a questionable one, and could hardly be justified were it possible for the Executive, acting with ordinary majorities of the two Houses of Congress, to enact international agreements with at least as much certainty and dispatch as in the case of statutes.

Probably no case on record has shown the evils of minority dominance in the matter of treaty making so glaringly as has the handling of the protocol of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

This protocol was first submitted to the Senate by President Harding and Secretary Hughes in 1923. In 1925 the House of Representatives passed a resolution favoring the participation of the United States in the court. In 1926 the Senate approved the protocol, with reservations. Since that time the entire issue has become more and more clouded, and at present it is probably impossible for anyone to understand or define the situation, so far as the United States is concerned, vis-à-vis a treaty which is at once among the most vital for the promotion of peace and least binding in positive obligations that has ever been added to the world's international law.

For many years, there has been every reason to believe that the majority of the people of the United States, who have any opinion in the matter, approve the ratification by this country of the protocol of the World Court. The protocol of 1920, and the two subsequent protocols now also before the Senate, have not been ratified. It is an interesting fact in connection with them, however, that the only affirmative requirement on the part of the United States, should these protocols be ratified, in order to carry out their obligations, would be the annual payment of a small sum of money, certainly less than $60,000.

Since this is the case, and since it is believed that a large majority of both Houses of Congress are in favor of the actual participation of the United States in the World Court, it is interesting to note that, as a practical matter, the United States can do so whenever these majorities are ready to go through the process of appropriating the amount of money involved.

While there appears to be agreement that the amount of the contribution of the United States may be determined by Congress, the appropriation actually made would certainly be not less than the largest contribution now made by a single country. The paralysis of senatorial procedure would seem to call for some action by Congress as a whole without waiting for the two-thirds senatorial majority. The court goes on with its work from year to year, and it has had throughout its life the collaboration of an eminent American as one of the judges. The American members of the Permanent Court of Arbitration now participate in the choice of judges of the World Court by nominating candidates for election. At the present time, without any action whatever by the United States, the court is open to the United States for the decision of any controversies that it may agree with other countries to refer to the court.

The United States has all the benefits of the court's existence, yet the entire expense of the court, even the salary of the American judge, is paid by the taxpayers of other lands. There is no reason whatever why we should not pay our share of the expense of an institution of which we have the benefit. Action to this end could and should be initiated by the House of Representatives. All that is required is that a small sum of money should be appropriated for the expenses of the court each year. We should, by paying it, be doing everything that we should be obliged to do if the protocols were ratified. Many precedents for such action exist in the frequent appropriations by Congress for the American share of the expenses of international institutions and of international conferences held in recent years at Geneva and elsewhere.

The President has undoubted authority, furthermore, to enter into negotiations to the end that, when judges of the court are being chosen, representatives of the United States may be present and vote, thus enabling the United States to exercise the privilege of taking part in the elections.

The final result is that by action of the Congress, apart from agreement by two-thirds of the Senate, the United States may practically—and this is a practical world—give its support just as effectively to the World Court, and, indeed, be essentially as much a part of the court as though the deadlock in the Senate had been broken and advice and consent to the ratification of the protocols without further reservation or amendment, had been granted.

Compared with precedents, this would be a fairly mild adventure in leadership by the House of Representatives in the field of international relations. I am convinced that the matter is one that ought to be considered by the American Society of International Law, just as I hope that it may soon be considered in Congress.

[20] Consent given April 16, 1818.

Constitutional forms and conventions are never fixed and immutable. There has been a progressive development under the Constitution in the handling of interntional affairs by the two Houses of Congress, and the democratic trend in international affairs in the period since the World War makes it inevitable that this development shall continue in the future.

[Applause.]

POSTAGE RATES ON CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

The SPEAKER. This is consent day and the Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

The first bill on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6688) to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to inquire of any member of the Post Office Committee what kind of publications this bill would cover?

Mr. FOSS. Free-distribution publications having 25 per cent of reading matter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I call the attention of the House to the fact that these publications are under free distribution, and yet this provides for 75 per cent of advertising matter.

Mr. FOSS. It is practically all advertising.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How could it be free distribution?

Mr. FOSS. It is free distribution by the publisher. There are no subscriptions; they are advertising matter; but it calls for 25 per cent of reading matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, this bill will bring a revenue of about $100,000 a month. It simply provides for the extension of the 1-cent per 2-ounce rate beyond the 8 ounces to 1 pound. That is all there is in this bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And if the periodical would take the lower rate on the fourth class, it can go fourth class?

Mr. FOSS. It can go fourth class now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman inform the House what the rate is on catalogues?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know anything about that. This does not apply to catalogues.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know it does not. Through the courtesy of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I was handed the manuscript copy of the hearings before the Post Office Committee on this bill, which I have examined. I notice one member of the committee has a rather pressing objection to it because it establishes a different rate for these advertising publications as distinguished from catalogues. I am not in sympathy with the amendment of the committee which proposes to prescribe the lower fourth-class rates where applicable. That is a suggestion of the committee. I have serious doubt as to the general policy of allowing these advertising publications to be sent all over the country at noncompensatory rates. I grant that they are compensatory if they are sent within the first few zones; but when you send these advertising sheets into the seventh and eighth zones, the rate is not compensatory. I shall withdraw my objection provided the gentleman withdraws the amendment of the committee, which has not the entire support of the department.

Mr. FOSS. The committee was unanimous in reporting the bill. I ask the chairman of the subcommittee if he has any objection to withdrawing the committee amendment?

Mr. HAINES. No; I have not.

Mr. FOSS. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That publications weighing in excess of 8 ounces issued at regular intervals of twelve or more times a year, 25 per cent or more of whose pages are devoted to text or reading matter and not more than 75 per cent to advertising matter, which are circulated free or mainly free, may, upon authorization by the Post Office Department, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, be accepted for mailing at the postage rate of 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction thereof, provided the copies of such publications are presented for mailing made up according to States, cities, and routes as directed by the Postmaster General.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "thereof," insert "except when the postage at the rates prescribed for fourth-class matter is lower, in which case the latter rates shall apply."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

AMENDING ACT RELATING TO STATES OF NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, AND WASHINGTON

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, S. 2396, to amend section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), relating to the admission into the Union of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have examined this bill rather carefully since it was on the calendar two weeks ago. I have no objection to section 1, but I have serious doubts as to the advisability of section 2. I note even the Secretary of the Interior questions the advisability of section 2 as reported by the committee. That is a committee amendment. If the gentleman wishes to have the bill passed as it passed the Senate, without section 2, I shall have no objection.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I will concede the withdrawal of section 2.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That all lands granted by this act shall be disposed of only at public sale after advertising—tillable lands capable of producing agricultural crops for not less than $10 per acre and lands principally valuable for grazing purposes for not less than $5 per acre. Any of the said lands may be exchanged for other lands of equal value and as near as may be of equal area in order to consolidate the holdings of the State.

"The said lands may be leased under such regulations as the legislature may prescribe; but leases for grazing and agricultural purposes shall not be for a term longer than 5 years; mineral leases, including leases for exploration for oil and gas and the extraction thereof, for a term not longer than 20 years; and leases for development for hydroelectric power for a term not longer than 50 years.

"The State may also, upon such terms as it may prescribe, grant such easements or rights in any of the lands granted by this act as may be acquired in privately owned lands through proceedings in eminent domain: Provided, however, That none of such lands, nor any estate or interest therein, shall ever be disposed of except in pursuance of general laws providing for such disposition, nor unless the full market value of the estate or interest disposed of, to be ascertained in such manner as may be provided by law, has been paid or safely secured to the State.

"With the exception of the lands granted for public buildings, the proceeds from the sale and other permanent disposition of any of the said lands and from every part thereof shall constitute permanent funds for the support and maintenance of the public schools and the various State institutions for which the lands have been granted. Rentals on leased lands, interest on deferred payments on land sold, interest on funds arising from these lands, and all other actual income shall be available for the maintenance and support of such schools and institutions. Any State may, however, in its discretion, add a portion of the annual income to the permanent funds.

"The lands hereby granted shall not be subject to preemption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for the purposes for which they have been granted."

SEC. 2. Anything in the said act approved February 22, 1889, inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out "lands of equal value and as near as may be of equal area in order to consolidate the holdings of the State" and insert "lands, public or private, of equal value and as near as may be of equal area in order to consolidate the holdings of the State; but if any of the said lands are exchanged with the United States, such exchange shall be limited to surveyed, nonmineral, unreserved public lands of the United States within the State."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition in opposition to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. I failed to call the attention of the gentleman having the bill in charge, that in the committee amendment now under consideration the clause on page 2, lines 7 and 8, "in order to consolidate the holdings of the State" might make it rather embarrassing in the actual operation of this amendment. I think that clause should be eliminated. We should not state the purpose of the exchange in this law. We should give the State authority to exchange school lands for public or private lands, but not say "in order to consolidate the holdings of the State."

It might require, in every instance, having that condition impressed upon the exchange. I think it is sufficient if we grant them authority without saying it is for the purpose of consolidating the holdings of the State. If, however, the chairman does not think it will work any hardship in the administration of the law, I do not object.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I do not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to have that qualifying clause stricken out. Accordingly, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD to the committee amendment: In lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "in order to consolidate the holdings of the State."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

A further committee amendment: Page 3, line 21, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to be issued to sections 16 and 36, granted by this act or by the act of January 25, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1026), that have been surveyed, and to which title has vested in the grantee States, and which have not been reconveyed to the United States or exchanged with the United States for other lands. Such patents shall show the date when title vested in the State and the extent to which the lands are subject to prior conditions, limitations, easements, or rights, if any. In all inquiries as to the character of the land for which patent is sought the fact shall be determined as of the date of the approval by the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the survey of the same or the date of the admission of the State into the Union, if the survey was approved prior thereto."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

A further committee amendment: Page 4, line 11, strike out the figure "2" and insert the figure "3."

The committee amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO AMEND THE ACT AUTHORIZING CONSTRUCTION AND PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT AND AIRCRAFT EQUIPMENT IN NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6599, to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith," approved June 24, 1926, with reference to the number of enlisted pilots in the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over. I am not quite prepared on it yet.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

TO AMEND ACT TO PROMOTE THE MINING OF POTASH ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10981, to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would suggest in section 7, line 7, page 1, an amendment limiting this to permits issued to individuals, so that it would read: "No prospecting permit issued to an individual under this act may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior," and so forth.

Mr. COLTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Suppose it were issued to a partnership or a number of individuals?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would be an individual.

Mr. COLTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment, because it is expensive work to drill and prospect for potash. This industry is in its infancy, and sometimes it is absolutely necessary for men to form associations or corporations, otherwise there could be no development.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of fact, most of these permits have been issued to corporations, have they not?

Mr. COLTON. No; I think that is not true. I think most of them have been issued to individuals or associations of individuals.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The attention of members of the Committee on Military Affairs has been brought to the fact, in connection with a study of fertilizer in connection with Muscle Shoals, that in New Mexico there are large deposits of mineral potash that are undergoing development. As the gentleman knows, we are getting a large supply of potash from Germany, and we should encourage in every way possible the development of potash deposits in this country.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall not press the amendment, but we have been hearing about this for the last 14 years. I hope something good will come from it at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that S. 3953 be substituted for the House bill. It is an identical bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain," is hereby amended by adding thereto a section, to be No. 7, reading as follows:

"SEC. 7. Any prospecting permit issued under this act may be extended by the Secretary of the Interior for a period not exceeding two years, upon a showing of satisfactory cause."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

UNIVERSITY OF ARIZONA

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2428, to provide for the confirmation of a selection of certain lands by the State of Arizona for the benefit of the University of Arizona.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the selection by the State of Arizona under the grant for university purposes made by the act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. 557), filed in the Phoenix (Ariz.) United States land office July 7, 1930 (Phoenix serial No. 068540), for the south half of the northeast quarter, the north half of the southeast quarter, and the west half of section 9, township 14 south, range 16 east of the Gila and Salt River meridian, Arizona, be ratified and confirmed, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to approve such selection.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO AMEND SECTION 99 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 9306, to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 180), as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 99 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 180), be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 99. The State of North Dakota shall constitute one judicial district to be known as the district of North Dakota. The territory embraced on the 1st day of January, 1932, in the counties of Adams, Billings, Bowman, Burleigh, Dunn, Emmons, Golden Valley, Grant, Hettinger, Kidder, Logan, McIntosh, McLean, Mercer, Morton, Oliver, Sioux, Slope, and Stark shall constitute the southwestern division of said district; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Barnes, Cass, Ransom, Richland, Sargent, and Steele shall constitute the southeastern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benson, Bottineau, Cavalier, Grand Forks, McHenry, Nelson, Pembina, Ramsey, Rolette, Traill, Walsh, Towner, and Pierce shall constitute the northeastern division; and the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Burke, Divide, McKenzie, Mountrail, Renville, Ward, and Williams shall constitute the northwestern division; and that the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Dickey, Eddy, Foster, Griggs, La Moure, Sheridan, Stutsman, and Wells shall constitute the central division. The several Indian reservations and parts thereof within said State shall constitute a part of the several divisions within which they are respectively situated. Terms of the district court for the southwestern division shall be held at Bismarck on the second Tuesday in March; for the southeastern division, at Fargo on the second Tuesday in December; for the northeastern division, at Devils Lake on the first Tuesday in May, and at Grand Forks on the second Tuesday in November; and for the northwestern division, at Minot on the second Tuesday in April; and for the central division at Jamestown on the second Tuesday in October. The clerk of the court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place at which court is held in his district."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 23, strike out the word "first" and insert in lieu thereof the word "second."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if there are going to be any suspensions this afternoon, and at what time the Chair intends to recognize such motions?

The SPEAKER. It is the present purpose of the Chair, although the Chair does not want to be foreclosed, to recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to call up what is known as the Goldsborough bill about 2 o'clock, since there is some suggestion of a little more debate than the 40 minutes. When that is concluded the Chair expects to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to call up what is known as the widows and orphans' pension bill, H. R. 8578, for the purpose of moving its passage with an amendment striking out what is known as section (d).

At the moment these are the only recognitions that the Chair has in contemplation.

Mr. SNELL. The Chair has not made up his mind with regard to what is familiarly referred to as the "grasshopper bill"?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman to pass the bill, if he thinks he can get enough votes.

Mr. SNELL. The only way I know of finding out is to try it.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A TERM OF THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA AT ORLANDO, FLA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4709, providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Orlando, Fla.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida shall be held annually at Orlando, Fla., on the first Monday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Orlando are furnished without expense to the United States.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether it is plain and clear in the hearing had upon this bill that there will be no additional cost whatever to the Government in having this term of court held at Orlando?

Mr. DOMINICK. It is; and the bill so provides.

Mr. DYER. Will it necessitate a deputy clerk and a deputy marshal, other than the force now upon the pay roll?

Mr. DOMINICK. It will not. We are advised that notwithstanding the fact that in a great many districts there are provided a deputy clerk and a deputy marshal, in Florida no such provision is actually put into effect, and there will be no deputy clerk or deputy marshal at this place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If there is to be no clerk established there permanently and if the judge may hold court anywhere he pleases, why is it necessary to enact a law providing that he shall hold court at Orlando?

Mr. DOMINICK. The reason for it is the distances involved in that district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does this make it mandatory upon the judge to hold court there for, say, one day a year?

Mr. DOMINICK. It provides for a term of court to be held at Orlando for the convenience of the people in that district.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman is positive there will be no extra cost for a deputy clerk or deputy marshal?

Mr. DOMINICK. None at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think there is no need of a law to provide that the court shall hold a term of court at Orlando, because under existing law I believe the court could be held there now.

Mr. DOMINICK. I disagree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, the gentleman has superior knowledge.

Mr. DOMINICK. Terms of court can only be held at places designated by the statute.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL JUSTICE OF THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11336, providing for an additional justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING], if the gentleman from New York will permit, make a brief statement as to the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am sure we are always glad to hear from the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] asks unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL TO THEODORE ROOSEVELT IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 290, to establish a memorial to Theodore Roosevelt in the National Capital.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I direct the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] to the requirement as found in the proviso in section 1:

That no general plan for the development of the island be adopted without the approval of the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

If we are to take over this island under the provisions of the national park act, why should we grant to any private association any control as to its development?

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. How much of an appropriation is carried?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing stated in the report as to what appropriation is required.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us what appropriation will be required?

Mr. LUCE. None whatever. This is a gift on the part of the Roosevelt Association.

Mr. FULLER. It costs the Government nothing?

Mr. LUCE. Nothing.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be considerable cost to the Government in the development of this island. I am in sympathy with the development of this island, but its improvement will be entirely upon the National Government. There is no question about that.

Mr. LUCE. The care of the island and its landscaping will no doubt cost something, because it will become a part of the park system of the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. Its revetment and other improvements may run into a considerable sum of money.

Mr. LUCE. It becomes a part of the park system of the District.

Mr. FULLER. Where is this island?

Mr. STAFFORD. Analostan Island is immediately southeast of the Key Bridge, opposite Georgetown.

There is a large island there that has been undeveloped for years, and this plan is now proposed by the Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Mr. FULLER. Is it proposed to put up a monument to his memory on this island?

Mr. LUCE. No; not a monument, as I understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. They want to develop it with landscaping in keeping with the surroundings.

Mr. FULLER. Is it to be simply named for him?

Mr. LUCE. I shall explain if the gentleman will permit.

The Roosevelt Association at first contemplated a very large monumental structure on the shores of, and taking part of the surface of, the Tidal Basin, which would put it on an axis with the White House. This plan was abandoned and in place the association decided to buy this island, and so did at an expense of several hundred thousand dollars. As I remember the newspaper report, it was $400,000. They offer it to the Government. They desire to have it kept in its wild state as far as possible. The structures upon it, as far as yet decided, are to be simply those for the caretaker, the gardeners, and so forth, and such simple conveniences for the public as may be necessary. No monumental structure is intended, as far as I am informed.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield to me to make a brief additional statement?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. The National Park and Planning Commission had already submitted to the Budget a request that this island be purchased at a price of more than $300,000, approaching $400,000, as necessary for the park system of the District, when the Roosevelt Association came along and gave it to us. So it was contemplated to make it a part of the park system of the Capital, anyhow.

Mr. STAFFORD. My inquiry, however, when I rose was directed to the conscripting provision in the proviso of section 1. If the Government is going to take over this property and have jurisdiction under the planning system of the Government, why should we restrict any development of the island by having to receive the approval of the memorial association? Why should there be any strings attached to the plans for the development of this island as to its beautification by having it first visaed by the memorial association, a private association? If they want to give it, let them give it without any strings attached.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is well aware that from time to time opinon varies in the District and in Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am reserving the right to object. I have been trying for some time to have the gentleman note my inquiry. The gentleman has just reached that pivotal point.

Mr. LUCE. From time to time opinion varies as to the use to which these public spaces should be put, and I imagine the association is of the belief that it should give thought to some situation which, perhaps, does not now exist and that it would be well that it should be able to control the use of the land for the purposes for which it is given.

Mr. STAFFORD. And they want the National Government to accept the gift and bear the expense of maintenance, but they are to have the right to say that no improvement shall be made unless it is approved by this private association.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he does not think that just now, in this hour of extreme depression, it would be well to rest on our oars and not take on this proposition?

Mr. LUCE. I imagine the Committee on Appropriations, controlling the appropriations asked for by the National Park and Planning Commission, may be trusted to prevent any expenditure at present if they do not think it wise.

Mr. BLANTON. And I may say to the gentleman, in making this observation, I think I was one of the very first in the United States to make a cash contribution to the Roosevelt memorial fund. So I am a friend to the memorial, but does not the gentleman think this can wait a while rather than to start in on a new enterprise upon which ultimately we would perhaps spend a large sum of money?

Mr. LUCE. This does not require the immediate expenditure of a dollar, and possibly nothing will be spent there for several years.

Mr. BLANTON. I also agree with our friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in his comment that whenever the United States Government takes over a proposition it ought to take it over. It ought to have control of it absolutely. There ought not to be any strings tied to it. The Government should not be compelled to go to some commission to get authority to do this or to do that, and until all strings are removed I shall be forced to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

AMENDMENT TO H. R. 11597

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. In the consideration of the Economy Committee bill, there have been adopted 14 amendments and through the courtesy of the reading clerks I have them listed under the names of the gentlemen who introduced them, the page of the bill upon which they occur, and the page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon which they may be found in connection with the discussion on these amendments. I think this would be of interest in connection with further study of the bill; and, especially in view of early record votes to be demanded on several amendments, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting this statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to follows:

Amendments to H. R. 11597—Economy program

No.		Bill page	Record page
	TITLE I
1	Britten amendment	2	9090
2	McCormack amendment	4	9095
3	Woodrum amendment	7	9176
	TITLE II
4	Dickstein amendment	12	9183
	TITLE III
5	Vinson amendment	14	9257
6	Cannon amendment	15	9234
7	Stevenson amendment	17	9248
8	Buchanan amendment	17	9261
9	Barbour amendment	19	9248
	TITLE IV
10	Williamson amendment	31	9262
11	do	33	9263
	TITLE V
12	McDuffie amendment	35	9269
13	Cochran amendment	35	9310
	TITLE VI
14	Martin (Oregon) amendment	43	9319
	TITLE VIII
15	Williamson amendment	53	9349

JUSTICE CHARLES H. ROBB

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to Justice Charles H. Robb.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 11336, a bill to provide for an additional justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, is pending on the Consent Calendar. This legislation is requested by the Department of Justice because of the physical incapacity of Justice Charles H. Robb. Justice Robb's impairment of health is due, no doubt, to overwork in the performance of exacting duties during years of faithful service.

Justice Robb came to Washington after years of practice at the Vermont bar, which has furnished a great number of able and learned judges to the State and the Nation. I know of none in the long list, however, who has shown greater learning, diligence, or ability.

I have known Justice Robb since he first came to the bar. I have watched his advance from a hard-working country lawyer to an exalted position on the bench. He holds the respect, the confidence, and the love of every one who has had occasion to appear before the court of appeals or who has come into contact with him in his daily life.

I would be negligent of my duty if I did not bring before the Members of Congress some of the facts of an outstanding judicial career.

Justice Robb was born November 14, 1867, at Guilford, Vt.; was admitted to the Vermont bar in 1892, and practiced law at Bellows Falls in that State until 1901, during which time he served as State's attorney for two years. In 1901 he was appointed inheritance tax solicitor of the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department, which position he held until 1902, when he was appointed a special assistant in the Department of Justice. In 1903 he was appointed assistant attorney general for the Post Office Department. In this capacity he successfully conducted the investigations and prosecutions in the notorious post-office fraud cases of that period. On the completion of this work in 1904 he was appointed Assistant Attorney General of the United States.

While Assistant Attorney General he was assigned at the special direction of President Roosevelt to conduct the second trial of Joseph R. Burton, of Kansas, a high official of the Government, before the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri. Burton had been indicted for accepting compensation, while a Government official, for services before the Post Office Department in relation to matters in which the United States was interested. The first trial had been set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States in January, 1905. At the second trial Burton was convicted and on one count sentenced to serve six months in jail and fined $2,000 and on another count sentenced to serve six months in jail and fined $500. The case again reached the Supreme Court in April, 1906, being presented on behalf of the Government by Mr. Robb. On May 21, 1906, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the trial court.

To fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Associate Justice Charles H. Duell from the Court of Appeals of the District, President Roosevelt on October 5, 1906, during the recess of the Senate, appointed Mr. Robb, then 38 years of age, as associate justice. He took the oath of office on October 8, 1906; later his nomination was confirmed by the Senate and he was recommissioned as associate justice on December 11, 1906, taking the oath of office on December 14, 1906.

The Court of Appeals of the District was created in 1893. Its jurisdiction is greater than that of any appellate court in the country, with the exception of the Supreme Court of the United States. As stated by Mr. Chief Justice Taft in Public Utilities Com. v. Potomac Electric Power Co. (261 U. S. 442), the court of appeals "possesses the jurisdiction and power of Federal courts of the several States, with such added jurisdiction as a State may confer on her courts." It has jurisdiction to review decisions of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court of appeals of the United States over the decisions of the United States Board of Tax Appeals; exclusive jurisdiction of appeals from the Federal Radio Commission, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States; and until 1929 had jurisdiction of appeals from the United States Patent Office. By writ of error it has jurisdiction to review the judgments of the police court, the municipal court, and the juvenile court of the District. The District of Columbia being the seat of government, probably more mandamus and injunction cases are heard in the court of appeals than in all of the other Federal appellate courts of the country combined.

The first opinion of Justice Robb was rendered on October 19, 1906, 11 days after taking office under his original appointment (No. 1720, District of Columbia v. Mattingly, 28 App. D. C. 176). During the period of 26 years since then he has written more than 1,350 opinions, an average of over 51 each year. At the time of his appointment to the bench in 1906, the court (composed of three justices) had written a total of 288 opinions in appeals from the Patent Office. Since that time the court while similarly constituted has written 1,476 opinions in patent appeals, of which Justice Robb has written 544, or nearly 37 per cent. During his tenure on the bench he has in addition considered and acted upon hundreds of petitions for writs of error and motions relating to cases before the court.

The first opinion by Justice Robb to receive review by the Supreme Court of the United States was in the case of Hutchins v. Munn (No. 1680, 28 App. D. C. 271), 209 U. S. 246, involving the function of an auditor, and the Supreme Court in affirming the decision observed that the auditor's function "was correctly appreciated by the court below." Since then 116 opinions written by Justice Robb have reached the Supreme Court. Of these cases only 15 have been reversed.

Perhaps one of the most novel constitutional questions raised in recent years was decided by the court of appeals in an opinion by Justice Robb (Blackmer v. United States, 49 F. (2d) 523). The court affirmed a contempt decree of the Supreme Court of the District against Harry M. Blackmer, a citizen of the United States, for failure to respond to subpœnas issued out of that court and served on him in France by a United States consul. These subpœnas commanded Blackmer to appear as a witness at the criminal trial of Albert B. Fall and Harry F. Sinclair. The Supreme Court, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes (284 U. S. 421), has during the present term approved in every particular the opinion of the court of appeals on the questions considered on certiorari.

This is an outstanding record.

Justice Robb, after 26 years of service, has not arrived at the age of retirement. The court has an overcrowded docket, and the judges are compelled to work under pressure. It is only fair and just that one who has spent a quarter of a century in the exacting toil necessary, with a bench composed until recently of only three members, should receive consideration. I sincerely hope that this measure will not meet with any objection.

METHOD OF SELLING REAL ESTATE

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 6678, amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L. 751), providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT RANDOLPH, MO.

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8072, a bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BLANTON objected.

The SPEAKER. This requires three objections. If there is no other objection, the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute Senate 2967 in lieu of the House bill.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2967

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., authorized to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1929, May 14, 1930, and February 6, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from May 24, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend line 4 of the Senate bill, before the word "bridge," strike out the word "the" and insert "a railroad."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 4 of the Senate bill, before the word "bridge," strike out the word "the" and insert "a railroad."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this amendment is not acceptable to the gentleman from Missouri. I offered it to him and he declined to accept it. If the House sees fit to consider it, all right. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill was first introduced for a railroad bridge and then it was a combined bridge. They have been trying to finance it for several years but have been unable to do so. The Bureau of Roads strongly recommends against it. The Department of Agriculture, in its report, says:

It is the view of the department that a private highway toll bridge should not be constructed at this point. It therefore recommends against enactment of the pending bill unless the authorization is revised to eliminate the portions thereof relating to the construction of a highway bridge or a combined highway and railroad bridge.

I am simply trying to carry out the advice of the road bureau in the Department of Agriculture. This bureau is doing excellent work in the Federal-aid highway system and should have our support. They are doing everything in their power to prevent private enterprise getting control of Federal-aid highways by getting the consent of Congress to build and operate toll bridges on such roads.

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York is mistaken. This bill was introduced for a combination vehicular and railroad bridge. The reason the railroad desires this is that the vehicular part of the bridge is necessary in order that the employees of the railroad may cross the river at that point instead of going down the river 12 or 14 miles or up the river 7 or 8 miles.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who is going to finance it?

Mr. MILLIGAN. The railroad company is going to finance it. The only reason that the bridge has not been built is because of some disagreement between the different railroad lines that are interested in this particular bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. My objection was that which has been made by the gentleman from New York. In view of the explanation of the gentleman from Missouri I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill was laid on the table.

CARE OF INJURED IN NATIONAL GUARD, ETC.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1690) to make provision for the care and treatment of members of the National Guard, Organized Reserves, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and citizens' military training camps who are injured or contract disease while engaged in military training, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

PALO VERDE, CALIF.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11183) for emergency relief of Palo Verde Valley, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill if passed would authorize $70,000 to be appropriated out of the Treasury for the relief of Palo Verde Valley, Calif. At this particular time, when 7,000,000 heads of families are without jobs and can not find work to do and their wives and children are starving, it behooves us here to stop all spending that is not absolutely necessary. We can not retrench, and will never balance the Budget, as long as we appropriate $70,000 for this purpose and $7,000,000 for that enterprise. We must stop unnecessary expenditures, both small and large, if we save our Government from bankruptcy. It is true that this is only $70,000; but that sum with many others like it aggregates during the fiscal year a tremendous amount. And we must watch these small items as well as the large ones. While I am a friend of the author of this bill, and hate to oppose its passage, I feel constrained to object. For the reasons above, Mr. Speaker, I object.

STATUES OF GEORGE WASHINGTON AND ROBERT E. LEE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was House Concurrent Resolution 24, relative to the statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of this Congress be presented to the governor and through him to the people of the State of Virginia for the statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of our country; that these works of art are accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned to places in the old Hall of Representatives already set aside by Congress for the statues of eminent citizens; and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the Governor of Virginia.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN WOMEN BORN IN HAWAII

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10829) relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is there any report from the department on this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; but there was favorable testimony, with a representative of the department present, who helped to perfect the bill as originally introduced. There can not be any possible objection, because this applies to not to exceed a dozen old women who are native-born Hawaiians, born before annexation, and who since the passage of the Cable Act of 1922 have no status for naturalization, to which they were originally entitled at the time of annexation.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Is the department in favor of this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The bill was drafted by the legislative drafting section after consultation with a representative of the department and after hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I assume that these 12 old Hawaiian women can obtain naturalization under the regular laws of the United States?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. No; they can not, because they are neither white nor African.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where are these women living?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. They are all living in Hawaii at the present time.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman is certain that this applies to only 12 women?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. These are the only ones whose cases have been brought to my attention.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The law was rewritten so that it does not apply to any person outside of the islands.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that they would be privileged under existing naturalization laws to be naturalized. I can not see any reason why we should pass a special act granting a special privilege to these people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does not do that. They were left out at the time of the organic act passed by the Congress two or three years after annexation. These women are now found, under the Cable Act, never to have had naturalization status. It has not been the policy of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to recognize bills to give individual naturalizations.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the purpose also that their husbands may seek to have special privileges granted to them if this act is passed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. The scope is limited.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been wondering whether or not steps will be taken to file impeachment proceedings against the Federal judge in the gentleman's city, Honolulu, who coerced a grand jury and forced it to file bills of indictment against people, when the jury after carefully considering the cases had refused to do so? If ever, in my judgment, there were grounds for impeachment of a judge, that should be just grounds. No judge ought ever to coerce a grand jury into finding bills of indictment against anyone.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I am not a lawyer and I can not undertake to answer a question of that kind.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman from Texas should withhold remarks of that kind at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. They are remarks that ought just now to be made by somebody, and the gentleman from Texas usually makes them when such remarks are necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That question has nothing to do with this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection, and the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of subdivision (b) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women," approved September 22, 1922, as amended, a woman born in Hawaii prior to June 14, 1900, shall, if residing in the United States on the date of enactment of this act, be considered to have been a citizen of the United States at birth.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

NAVAL ORDNANCE PLANT, SOUTH CHARLESTON, W. VA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4657) to authorize the disposition of the naval ordnance plant, South Charleston, W. Va., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objections?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, for one.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will not the reservation of objection hold the original status of objection?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from New York, and myself are going to object, why go on?

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

The SPEAKER. A reservation of objection is in order as long as the regular order is not called for.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BACHMANN. Here is a bill seeking to dispose of a plant that is costing the Government $80,000 a year to maintain, and year after year it is deteriorating into junk.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Of all times, this is not the time to sell any property, Government or private. It would not bring anything. This property has cost millions of dollars.

Mr. BACHMANN. And it will bring several millions of dollars.

Mr. BLANTON. You could not sell gold just now for anything like its value.

Mr. BACHMANN. If it remains as it is much longer, it will not be worth anything.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not in favor of selling anything in this hour of depression.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is not economy. The bill seeks to take this money and place it in a special fund so that it could be spent more readily.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And in addition to that, here is a fully equipped plant, and it was put up there as a safeguard——

Mr. BLANTON. Let us be economical and not waste any more time on this bill. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

USE OF UNITED STATES MAILS FOR TRANSMISSION OF MATTER ADVERTISING PUZZLE CONTESTS, ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10462, to prohibit the use of the United States mails for the transmission of any matter advertising puzzle contests, naming contests, prize offers, or any other form of competition for a prize wherein such offers are made to induce persons to compete in another contest which involves either the purchase or sale of goods as a requisite of winning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I object.

Mr. DYER. I object.

Mr. BROWNING. I object.

Mr. BALDRIGE. I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

Mr. BACHMANN. I object.

EXCHANGE FEDERAL BUILDING SITE IN DOVER, N. J.

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 11337, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the Federal building site in Dover, N. J., for another site.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask one question. Would there be any unexpended balance if the original building was built on the former site?

Mr. LANHAM. This relates merely to the transfer of sites and not to the construction of the building.

Mr. BALDRIGE. But does this mean any more money?

Mr. LANHAM. Not a particle. It is merely an exchange of sites, and certain work is to be done upon this new site by the city of Dover, and also the city will give free rent during the construction of the Federal building. It adds to the attractiveness of the city as well.

Mr. BALDRIGE. If the building was built as formerly planned on the site where formerly planned, would there be any unexpended balance?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no. The building would cost the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire the reason why the committee called upon the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General for his opinion rather than upon the Treasury Department as to the advisability of the exchange of these respective tracts.

Mr. LANHAM. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General went to Dover and made a personal inspection of these sites. Mr. Heath, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was also present at the hearing and concurred in the statement made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reading the report I gained the impression that the site that has been bought by the Government for the post office was more valuable than the site suggested by the city of Dover, which they wished to accord in exchange.

Mr. LANHAM. It would have been but for the fact that the city will build a retaining wall, which will make the new site equally advantageous and, with the expense involved, of equal value. We made inquiry of these Government officials as to whether or not there was any loss in value in an exchange of this kind, and they said, in view of the work that the city would do, there would be no loss in value whatever, and that the new site is quite as acceptable for post-office purposes as the present site, and it would add very much to the program of city building that Dover has in mind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this an instance of rivalry in the locality as to the merits of respective sites for a post-office building?

Mr. LANHAM. I think not, from the testimony before the committee. The mayor of the city, for instance, made a trip here, as well as the city engineer, in order to testify at these hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the size of the Dickerson Street site which the Government now owns, and when did it acquire title, and what is the size of the proposed site which the city of Dover wishes to transfer in exchange?

Mr. LANHAM. They are relatively of the same size, and the testimony before us is that each is absolutely adequate for the building which the Government intends to erect.

Mr. STAFFORD. How large is the proposed site?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not recall the figures exactly, but we had a map and a plat of the city before us, and the tracts are approximately of the same size.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, it is the purpose of the city to wall up the site at their expense so as to make it serviceable for the purposes of a post office?

Mr. LANHAM. It is; and the mayor of the city said to us that they already had that authority and were prepared to go ahead and do the work. The exchange will not be made until it is done.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that explanation I will withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange by the usual quitclaim deed, without expense to the United States (when title becomes vested in the Government) the Federal building site located on the northwest corner of Dickerson and Warren Streets at Dover, N. J., now under contract to be purchased by the United States, for a site offered by the city of Dover, located on Sussex Street and Morris Street extended: Provided, That the exchange herein set forth shall be subject to such conditions as to the improvements on the Sussex Street site to be made by the city of Dover as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, and free rental to the Government of the present post-office quarters located on the Dickerson Street site until the new post-office building is completed and occupied. These conditions to be assented to by the city of Dover in order to equalize the price of the Sussex Street site. In the event that the exchange as herein set forth is consummated it is further provided that the unexpended balance of the appropriation authorized in the act of Congress approved March 4, 1931, for a site and building at Dover, N. J., is hereby made available for the construction of the new building on said Sussex Street site.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO REGULATE THE MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF STAMPED ENVELOPES

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 8576, to regulate the manufacture and sale of stamped envelopes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am not ready for this, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I think it should go over.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BALDRIGE. The gentleman did not object to the consideration of the bill, did he?

Mr. HARLAN. I object to the consideration of the bill, but I will reserve that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I asked to have it go over for two weeks.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I think it had better go over.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that the bill go over for two weeks?

There was no objection.

CONVEYANCE OF PORTION OF THE LISTON RANGE REAR LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION FOR HIGHWAY PURPOSES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 79, to provide for conveyance of a portion of the Liston Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation, New Castle County, State of Delaware, for highway purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to transfer and convey to the State of Delaware the following-described parcel of land situate in New Castle County and being a part of the Liston Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation:

Beginning at a point on the westerly side of the Liston Range Rear Light Station Reservation, Del., which point is the southwesterly corner of the lighthouse reservation as described in deed dated March 18, 1904, and from which the Liston Range Rear Light Station tower bears north 40 degrees 19 minutes 10 seconds east 331.73 feet, running thence from a point of beginning 74 degrees 9 minutes true 918 feet along the center line of the concrete roadway pavement (which is also the present southerly boundary line of the reservation) to the southeast corner of the lighthouse reservation, thence 288 degrees 24 minutes true 53.05 feet to a stone monument, thence 254 degrees 9 minutes true 678.32 feet along the present fence line approximately parallel to the center line of the concrete roadway pavement to a point, thence along a curved line with radius of approximately 1,116 feet approximately parallel to the center line of the concrete roadway pavement about 168 feet to a stone monument on the westerly lighthouse reservation line, thence 198 degrees 24 minutes true 51.38 feet along the westerly boundary of the lighthouse reservation to the point of beginning, containing sixty-two hundredths acre, more or less, the same to be held and made available permanently by said State as a public highway under such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for use thereof by the public.

SEC. 2. The Lighthouse Service shall have an unrestricted right at all times to use the said highway for the purpose of access to and egress from the said lighthouse reservation: Provided, That should the State of Delaware fail to keep and hold the said strip of land for roadway purposes or devote it to any use inconsistent with said purposes then title to said land shall revert to and be reinvested in the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, line 13, after the word "States," insert the following: "and the deed or instrument of conveyance shall recite said reversionary rights herein reserved."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment is to reserve the reversionary rights, if the instrument of conveyance does not include such a reference. I think it should, so that if the State ceases to use it and some one else acquires it, endless litigation as to the title will be avoided. My attention was diverted when the bill was called up or I would have objected by reason of that. It may not seem important, but it will certainly serve to give notice, as a matter of record, of the reservation of such rights.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, it is customary in these bills where the Government conveys property to have it done by quitclaim deed; and I would suggest an amendment on page 1, line 4, after the word "Delaware," inserting the words "quitclaim deed."

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I will say, for information, that it is the practice in my State for the State to convey a fee simple title to roads. This road has already been built. The land was under lease by the Government as a part of the State highway system.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Government does not in any instance warrant the title and it should not warrant the title. It should be sufficient to give to the State of Delaware all the title that the Government has, and that is done by quitclaim deed.

Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware. That is all the title they could convey in any case.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment and offer a formal amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, after the word "convey," insert "by quitclaim deed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF A CERTAIN TRACT OF LAND TO THE BOROUGH OF STONINGTON, CONN.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10683, to provide for the conveyance by the United States of a certain tract of land to the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there ought to be an amendment on this bill as suggested by the department.

Mr. LONERGAN. What is it?

Mr. BLANTON. They ask that certain changes be made in the bill. Will the gentleman agree to those changes?

Mr. LONERGAN. What are they?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this property involves less than an acre in extent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this bill be temporarily passed until we can agree on an amendment. The department wants some reservations placed in the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest this for the consideration of the gentleman from Texas. I would suggest as section 3 the following: "The conveyance shall be made on completion of said improvements by said borough of Stonington, and said deed shall recite all the conditions contained in this act."

In other words, instead of conveying the property now subject to the borough making the improvement, why not authorize the conveyance of the property when the improvement is made?

Mr. BLANTON. That will be all right.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey by quitclaim deed unto the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut, all of its right, claim, or title to or the possession of that tract of land, less than one acre, known as Stonington Point, situated in the borough of Stonington, county of New London, in the State of Connecticut, for improvement and maintenance as a plaza in commemoration of those valiant men who so nobly defended it during the 3-day bombardment by the British fleet under Commodore Hardy, on August 9, 10, and 11, 1814.

SEC. 2. The Lighthouse Service reserves the right to maintain such lights on the property to be conveyed as the needs of navigation may require, and the right to enter upon the reservation by the most convenient route for the purpose of maintenance of such lights and reserve an easement for beams of light from such lights, and the right to trim any trees that now exist or may hereafter exist that interfere with or obstruct the beams of such lights.

SEC. 3. The conveyance shall be made on condition that the said borough of Stonington shall begin the improvement within one year from the date of this act and that upon failure so to do, or upon failure thereafter to maintain this tract of land for the purpose named in this act, it shall revert to the United States upon due notice from the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 13, strike out all of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 3. The conveyance shall be made on completion of said improvement by the said borough of Stonington and said deed shall recite all the conditions contained in this act."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether the amendment he suggests carries the provision that upon the failure thereafter to maintain this tract of land for the purposes set out it shall revert to the United States?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I provide that the deed shall contain all of the reservations set out in this act, so that the deed will have to recite them.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LAND ON FENWICK ISLAND, SUSSEX COUNTY, DEL., FOR ROADWAY PURPOSES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 283, to provide for conveyance of a certain strip of land on Fenwick Island, Sussex County, State of Delaware, for roadway purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to transfer and convey to the Levy Court of Sussex County, State of Delaware, the following-described parcel of land situate in Sussex County and being a part of the Fenwick Island Lighthouse Reservation: A strip of land 60 feet wide and 660 feet long, extending from the west boundary line of the Fenwick Island Lighthouse Reservation to the east boundary line of the lighthouse reservation with the center line running parallel to and 330 feet northerly from the east and west boundary line between the States of Delaware and Maryland, which boundary line is the southerly boundary of the Fenwick Island Lighthouse Reservation; the same to be held and made available permanently by said Levy Court of Sussex County, State of Delaware, as a roadway under such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the use thereof by the public, and that the Lighthouse Service shall have an unrestricted right at all times to use the said roadway for the purposes of access to and egress from the lighthouse reservation: Provided, That should the Levy Court of Sussex County, State of Delaware, fail to keep and hold the said strip of land for roadway purposes or devote it to any use inconsistent with said purposes, then title to said land shall revert to and be reinvested in the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 2, line 17, after the word "States," insert the following: "and the deed or instrument of conveyance shall recite the reversionary rights herein reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: On page 1, line 4, after the word "convey," insert the words "by quitclaim deed."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 1, line 4, after the word "convey," insert the words "by quitclaim deed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF THE UNITED STATES CODE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11152, to amend section 293, title 39, of the United States Code, Supplement V, to promote Parcel Post Service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me if this going to be an experiment we should start with the 5-cent fee, as suggested by the Post Office Department. The 3-cent fee is an experiment, and it seems to me we should go back to the 5-cent charge originally suggested. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would agree to that, I would like to see the experiment tried out.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I believe that 3 cents will fully cover the cost and yield a profit; but there can be no real objection to changing the figure from 3 cents to 5 cents, because the provision is that the rate shall not exceed the fee specified, so that any rate below that fee which is deemed best may be used.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say that, as far as congested traffic conditions in New York City are concerned, we certainly could not do it for 3 cents.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a question whether in any of the great metropolitan centers you can do it even for 5 cents, with the pay we are according to the letter carriers and to delivery drivers of automobiles.

I can not conceive how at the rates we pay they can even do it for 5 cents, but the department has said, "Let us experiment with it at this 5-cent rate."

I could not conceive the mathematics of the brilliant minds that compose the Committee on the Post Office and see how they could arrive at the conclusion of a 3-cent rate being compensatory.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that a preliminary test in Los Angeles showed that it cost less than 3 cents and there was a considerable profit in 3 cents. However, 5 cents will be satisfactory.

Mr. BALDRIGE. If the gentleman will permit, may I ask whether this would be in competition with the express companies?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; that is the purpose of it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This is not in competition with the express companies, because this is simply picking up parcel-post packages that would be taken to the post office in any case.

Mr. BALDRIGE. What effect would this have with respect to putting the Government in business in competition with such companies?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This only deals with parcel-post packages that would go into the post office anyhow. At the present time they must be carried to the post office. The service has trucks and men employed now who can well be engaged in picking up these packages.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Is it not true that this class of business now goes through the express companies because of the fact that the Parcel Post Service does not pick up? If we now have the parcel post pick up these packages, will this not injure our express companies and put the Government in competition with private business?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I think my friend is mistaken, because the large concern has its own trucks and will send these packages to the post office without using this new service. The small concern that has a few parcel-post packages a day will have the post-office truck stop for these packages, and will pay a proper fee. There will not be direct competition with private industry.

Mr. BLANTON. Carrying out the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], which is a good one, the words "not more than" ought to be stricken out when you put in 5 cents instead of 3 cents. Will the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not press that suggestion.

Mr. BLANTON. That ought to be done, because we are not going to enact any new laws here by unanimous consent that may cause an extra deficit in the Treasury.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This will mean a gain rather than a deficit.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not know that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; that is the statement of the department.

Mr. BLANTON. It is an experiment; and, if the gentleman will knock out the words "not more than" and insert "five" instead of "three," we will go along with him; and that would also carry out the recommendation of the department.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That will be all right.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman means to object otherwise, I am at his mercy, of course.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I want to carry out the recommendation of the department. With that understanding, I shall not object.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I shall not object to that, if the gentleman insists upon the point.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire further. Do I understand by this bill you are now putting the United States in the business of going to a person's place of business and getting the packages which he has heretofore carried himself to the post office?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is it exactly.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. And you think by charging 5 cents for that service, the United States will make a profit?

Mr. STAFFORD. They claim they can make a profit at 3 cents.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, we are endeavoring to carry out the Parcel Post Service. There is nothing frightening about this.

We are simply going to use the trucks and the workers that we now have to carry these packages from the business place to the post office. It is logical and should have been in force from the beginning.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I may say that neither the gentleman nor any man who has figured on this has ever been in the parcel-post business. I object, and I hope there will be others to object when the bill comes up for further consideration.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Who carries these packages now to the post office?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They are carried by the mailer himself.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I withhold my objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Our rural carriers and our urban carriers are every day picking up first-class mail. If they pick up first-class mail, why can they not pick up other kinds of mail?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Because there is just as much difference between first-class mail and packages as between a sheet of paper and a 5 or 10 pound package. The business is entirely different.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not see any difference. A private company could make money by carrying letters, but we prefer for the United States Government to handle the mails exclusively.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BANKHEAD). Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object, Mr. Speaker.

POSTAL ACT OF MAY 29, 1928

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 621, to repeal section 7 of the postal act approved May 29, 1928.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what objection can there be to the Post Office Department, the administrative head of the Government, having the right to determine whether the parcel-post charges are reasonable or not? We have had manifestation time and time again that the distinguished members of the Post Office Committee believe their judgment as to administrative costs better than that of the department. Are we to establish the policy here that the Post Office Committee knows more about administrative charges for carrying parcel post than the experts of the department?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to know why the change.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I am seeking to get information about.

Mr. BUCKBEE. I will say to my delightful colleague from Milwaukee——

Mr. STAFFORD. I thank the gentleman for that compliment.

Mr. BUCKBEE. This is merely a question between the Post Office Committee, that has handled rate measures for upward of 100 years in an impartial, efficient manner, and the Interstate Commerce Commission. If you are going to let one class of mail be handled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, why would not my delightful friend from Milwaukee be in favor of letting first-class, second-class, and third-class mail be handled in the same manner?

Mr. STAFFORD. I most assuredly would let the Interstate Commerce Commission determine the rates of second-class mail matter, because I know that whenever post-office officials have recommended an increased rate they are marked for slaughter. When Postmaster General Hitchcock recommended increase in second-class mail matter, what was the result? Every progressive magazine in the country opposed it, and when President Taft took up the cause of the Postmaster General he was assaulted by all the uplift magazines in the country. I would certainly approve of the Interstate Commerce Commission fixing the rate, especially parcel post, which refers largely to the cost of transportation on the railroads and other conveyances. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING SECTION 129 OF THE CRIMINAL CODE

The Clerk read the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 11057, to amend section 129 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the purpose of the proposed legislation, but I rise merely to ascertain the purpose of the gentleman, whether he seeks to prohibit the sale of matter rightfully taken or information.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The purpose is to prohibit both.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for five minutes to explain the bill. It is a good bill and, if explained, will pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain the bill to the satisfaction of Members in one minute. The bill provides, and the language is clear, against the sale of documents and their contents of which possession is acquired by employees of the departments of the United States. We have had one or two scandals by employees working in the departments making sale of information, contents of documents, and so forth. This particular bill is suggested by the Department of the Interior. They would like to have this bill passed in order that their documents and information may not be peddled out to persons who want to get special privilege or special advantage over the rest of the people.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, there is one instance where the department employee made a sale of Government information for $12,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Texas will, of course, insist on the committee amendments?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes. I presume it is understood that we are insisting on the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 129 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 235) be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 129. Whoever, by virtue of his employment by the United States, having custody of, or access to, any record, proceeding, map, book, document, paper, or other thing specified in the preceding section, shall willfully and unlawfully conceal, remove, mutilate, obliterate, falsify, destroy, sell, publish, or furnish, or sell, publish, or furnish information contained in, any such record, proceeding, map, book, document, paper, or thing, or a copy or copies thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both, and moreover shall forfeit his office and be forever afterward disqualified from holding any office under the Government of the United States."

The committee amendments are as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "destroy," followed by a comma, insert the word "or."

Page 1, line 10, after the first word, "sell," strike out the balance of the line, and in line 11, strike out down to and including the word "in."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "thing," followed by a comma, insert the words "or any information contained therein," followed by a comma.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDUCATION AND MEDICAL ATTENTION OF DISTRESSED INDIANS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3110) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with States for the education, medical attention, and relief of distress of Indians, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I recognize this as a measure that has been before the Congress for some time. In fact, I introduced a measure like it several years ago, which was intended to establish a more just method of dealing with the Indians generally. I notice the bill is changed from its original form and now applies only to the State of California. Just why was the agreement reached to eliminate this method as to other States and to permit California alone to carry it out?

Mr. LEAVITT. The gentleman will recall that I also introduced a bill of a general character several years ago, but, as is common with legislation, as it developed, it came to light that there are some States in which there is no sentiment for this sort of legislation. The movement originated in California and has been carried forward, and there is a strong sentiment there to try it out. It followed, in view of the position of the Representatives from some States who might by their opposition prevent any trial of legislation of this kind, that the proper step to take was to confine it to the State that desires it now, to try it out, and thus prove whether or not it is for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman thinks that the successful operation in California will lead to the adoption of a similar method in other States?

Mr. LEAVITT. I think in some States it will come along State by State, but in some other States it will be quite some time before the conditions will bring it into effect.

Mr. BALDRIGE. What was the amount appropriated the other day for the Indians on the Indian Committee day?

Mr. LEAVITT. Nothing was appropriated on the Indian Committee day. There were authorizations that had to do with different tribes of Indians.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the gentleman means the amount appropriated in the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Yes.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not recall those figures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Whatever it was, it was considerably cut.

Mr. LEAVITT. It was not any too much.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This seems to me to establish an intervening and additional barrier to the progress of the Indian. I remember from my old childhood days in Arizona the shameful way in which the Indians were treated at that time. Of course, I am talking about 40 years ago, and now we are trying to improve the condition of our wards. I do not know that you will improve them by removing them one step farther away from the Government control. Where is the responsibility going to rest?

Mr. LEAVITT. In many of the States, as I said, conditions are not such that this could or should be done at this time. In California, where this movement originated, it grew out of a condition quite different from that which exists in many States, in that the Indians are not there on large reservations, where the Government can have hospitals and school facilities and give them the proper supervision.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Who is going to be responsible for their care?

Mr. LEAVITT. The Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But the Government will delegate it to a State?

Mr. LEAVITT. It is intended to deal in that way in trying this out in California. These Indians are scattered in small bands and throughout the communities, and do not now have access to the same hospital facilities that the Indians in other States have or on reservations and that the white people have in California. The Government will enter into a contract with the State whereby the Indians will secure the use of existing State facilities of help and education. Of course, the gentleman knows that we now educate most of the Indian children in the public schools. This also includes the care of indigent Indians. It is intended to bring these instruments of help closer to the Indians, but the Government does not intend in this bill to let go of any of its own responsibility, but merely seeks to try, without added expense, to determine if it will work to the benefit of the Indian to give him a chance to utilize these local facilities.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let us be perfectly frank with each other for a moment. As the Indian is progressing now, he is commingling and is dispersed along with the general population, so that if he requires hospital care or education the State gives it to him. This seems to me to be an attempt on the part of the State of California to turn around and charge the Federal Government for something that California after all is morally and otherwise obligated to give to her citizens.

Mr. LEAVITT. But which is not given to them and which the Federal Government, with its responsibilty for these Indians, believes the Indians should receive.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think that I am ready to pass on this to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the amendment that the Committee on Indian Affairs has recommended is retrogressive. There is nothing obligatory in the bill as presented to us from the Senate that makes it mandatory on the Secretary of the Interior to enter into these contracts with any State. It is entirely in his discretion.

The gentleman is now circumscribing it so that he will not permit the State authorities of Wisconsin to enter into contracts with the Indian authorities there for their hospitalization or for their education and the like. He is so circumscribing this bill that it amounts to nothing. The test to be made, I believe, is whether we shall have a general law that will uplift the Indians and take the charge of the Indians away from the bureaucratic government which they have been subjected to all of these years and, where conditions are favorable, allow them to enter into contracts with the State authorities for their education, or whether we will allot it to dear old go-getting California.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object unless the gentleman will agree to the bill as it came from the Senate.

Mr. LEAVITT. I can not agree to that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE GARDEN (INC.)

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 10302, to provide for the transfer of certain school lands in North Dakota to the International Peace Garden (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why should this 640 acres of Government land be transferred to a private corporation?

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. It is for a public purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. What kind of public purpose?

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. The planting of flower gardens, botanical gardens, to be used by the public of the United States and Canada.

Mr. BLANTON. Are we to furnish flower gardens for everybody in the Nation?

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. We have not furnished any for New York or Texas.

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. No; but this is for the public. It is a public international garden on the boundary to commemorate the peaceful relations existing between the two nations.

Mr. BLANTON. But belonging to a private corporation.

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. Only so long as it is used for that purpose. When it is not so used, the land reverts to the State.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe in flowers. I like to send flowers to the living and not to the dead, and I believe in beautifying the country, and I believe in beautifying this State of North Dakota, but not at Government expense.

Mr. HALL of North Dakota. It is not a commercial enterprise, and a committee representing the people of Manitoba and North Dakota has been appointed whose business it will be to arrange that the area adjacent to the garden will not be available for commercial purposes.

Mr. BLANTON. If we could give 640 acres of land for a flower garden to every district in the United States, I would vote for it in a minute.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. BURTNESS. The gentleman suggests that the Federal Government is giving 640 acres of land to a private corporation. The Government is not giving anything which it owns at this time under the terms of this bill. It simply gives consent to the Legislature of the State of North Dakota to determine whether it is willing to turn over 640 acres of so-called school land to this very fine idealistic proposal in which many splendid people of the two Nations affected are interested. All that this bill does is to wipe out certain limitations with reference to the transfer by the State of this one section, a portion of our lands held in trust for the benefit of our schools.

Mr. BLANTON. This Government, for the benefit of the school children, had this land set aside to take care of their school training for the next hundred years. If this bill is passed, it would permit the legislature of the gentleman's State to take 640 acres of land which the Government set aside for the school children of that State and turn it over to this private corporation that is called a flower-garden association.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is correct; but I think the people of North Dakota can be trusted, through their legislature, to safeguard the interests of their school children. These lands will not be wasted. Their use will in this way be for the permanent benefit of coming generations of the children of the whole country, and if the gentleman will simply investigate the splendid work already done by the Peace Garden Association, I believe that he himself will go out among the school children of his own district and in his own State and get them interested in this International Peace Garden, which is to stand there as a living monument for peace and to commemorate the friendly relations that have existed between the United States and the Dominion of Canada for more than a century. This association is not a profit-making association or anything like that. It is not a money-making scheme. It is proposed to raise an endowment fund of four or five million dollars largely by small 5 and 10 cent contributions made by the school children of the countries of the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America, coupled with contributions by people greatly interested.

It will be something unique in the history of the North American Continent, and I know the gentleman, if he will simply look into it, will be tremendously interested in helping this very idealistic and, I think, practical proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object just in order to ask a question or two. Does the gentleman think he is going to bring about international peace by establishing a 640-acre flower garden in North Dakota?

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, the question is almost ridiculous.

Mr. BLANTON. What do the warring nations of the world care about a flower garden in North Dakota? That does not deter them from warlike preparations.

Mr. BURTNESS. Of course, the gentleman knows that his question is more or less a simple one. To begin with, this garden is not going to be 640 acres. It will be several times that large, consisting of lands on both sides of the border. It is along the right idea, in any event, to make nations think in terms of peace. Our example may well contribute in a small way to the peace of the world.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DEPARTURE OF CERTAIN ALIENS FROM THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 7793, to secure the departure of certain aliens from the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether the character of this legislation has been submitted to the State Department to ascertain whether the Secretary of State would think it would result in any friction in our diplomatic relations, requiring a bond to be given for the return of a consul or any member of his family when the exequatur would be terminated?

Mr. CABLE. The bond does not apply to any member of the diplomatic corps entering the country.

Mr. STAFFORD. It applies to a person who may be named consul.

Mr. CABLE. No. The bond applies only in certain cases of students coming to this country.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is a twofold purpose.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman not let us have a little time for discussion?

Mr. PARKS. Not unless I can hear what the gentleman is saying. This occurs to me to be a very important matter and I can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CABLE. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLANTON. The main thing that this bill does is to require students who come to the United States to give bond requiring that they will go out when the time comes. Is not that so?

Mr. CABLE. That is a minor part of the bill. The important part of the bill is that it undertakes to plug up certain holes in our immigration dike. Under our present procedure foreign ambassadors or diplomats coming to the United States bring their own servants and employees. In the last seven years they have brought in 14,000 such servants and employees.

Mr. BLANTON. And how many have they ever taken out?

Mr. CABLE. We have no record of that. These servants and employees coming to this country in this way do not pay a head tax and are not subject to examination to see if they are physically or mentally fit. They do not pass any of our immigration tests, and under present law they can quit their jobs the day after they get here and take jobs of Americans.

Mr. BLANTON. And this bill will make them go back when they cease employment?

Mr. CABLE. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a good bill and ought to pass.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why is there no report from the department on this bill?

Mr. CABLE. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. The Department of State requested that a bill be introduced to take care of the assistants and employees of ambassadors and diplomats, and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], did introduce such a measure; but my bill also included the requiring of bond for students in certain cases, and the committee reported out the bill that I introduced in preference to the bill of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the department in favor of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; the department is in favor of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor; but I have not had an opportunity to get in one word.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman originally stated that this applied only to a certain class of people, and I was certain that it did not, because I have read the report.

Now, my objection is to the student feature. I do not want any law to be passed that will put a penalty upon persons from foreign countries seeking the educational advantages of our country. The report does not show that students who have come over here for an education have abused that privilege. However, the report does show that those connected with the diplomatic service as employees have abused the privilege by continuing to reside here without lawful permission.

I wish to ask the gentleman as to the character of bond that would be required and what would be the premium exacted of these persons seeking the advantages of our educational institutions, who come to imbibe the spirit of our institutions, if we impose this character of legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only had one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may proceed until the regular order is demanded.

Mr. CABLE. I would like to answer the gentleman's question. In the first place, as I have said before, the main feature of the bill is that which applies to servants and employees coming here in the diplomatic service and remaining here illegally after termination of their status as diplomatic servants or employees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Answer my question, please.

Mr. CABLE. I will. The second provision of the bill applies to certain students. The Department of Labor has discretion to require a bond to be given in certain cases. It is not mandatory. In a large number of cases it would not be required, but if a certain student could not qualify under the present law this would make it mandatory that the Department of Labor admit such student upon the giving of a bond.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the gentleman's amendment, it is mandatory upon the department to require every student who comes to this country to give a bond. What will be the cost of the bond?

Should we exclude a student who wishes to come to this country to seek the educational advantages of this country?

Mr. BALDRIGE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, illegal entry of aliens into the United States is not the only means of breaking down our restrictive-immigration policy. The more legal restrictions we place upon the inward flow of population, the greater becomes the pressure to enter. Our immigration laws contain exceptions whereby thousands have been lawfully admitted under diplomatic immunity. They quickly terminate their services with foreign diplomats, throw off the cloak of immunity, and because of a loophole in the law, remain in the United States.

I call attention to the fact that a large number of aliens are admitted each year as attendants, servants, and employees of foreign-government officials. For the seven fiscal years that the present quota law has been in effect, 14,047 aliens have been admitted under the last proviso of section 3 of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, which reads as follows:

> That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign governments, nor to their suites, families, or guests.

The annual admission of these attendants, servants, and employees during the last five fiscal years has been as follows: 1927, 2,454; 1928, 2,608; 1929, 2,873; 1930, 2,671; and 1931, 1,733. These people are admitted without regard to any of the provisions of our restrictive immigration laws. They do not have to pay a head tax; they are not affected by the quota, nor do they even comply with the physical or mental requirements of the immigration act of 1917.

The bill I have introduced, H. R. 7793, and which has been reported favorably, would require that all such attendants, servants, and employees depart from the United States upon the termination or change of their privileged nonimmigrant status; if they fail to depart voluntarily, they would be subject to deportation. To effect such departure or deportation, it is necessary to amend section 15 of the immigration act of 1924, and my bill contains the necessary amendment. It is the opinion of both Department of State and Department of Labor officials that many of these aliens now remain here, compete for positions with Americans and aliens lawfully in the United States, and that such legislation as is provided by this bill should be enacted.

My bill also provides an amendment of section 15 of the 1924 immigration act relative to the status of alien students admitted to the United States for a definite study period. The present law is inadequate to deal with alien students. In his Annual Report for 1931 the Commissioner General of Immigration states, on page 45:

> When either persuasion or instructions have failed, it infrequently becomes necessary to resort to arrest procedure against these students to compel departure, and 410 warrants contemplating deportation have been issued in the past seven years. The bureau is most patient and liberal with these young people and overlooks many departures from the strict interpretation of the laws and regulations, as it wishes to afford the aliens every opportunity to complete their education, providing a reasonable amount of good faith is shown. However, it would be to the distinct advantage of the service if the law could be amended, as has been before recommended, so as to permit in doubtful cases the exaction of bonds guaranteeing maintenance of the student status and departure at the completion of studies. This would be an added protection and would justify the conditional admission of many applicants who have been excluded at ports in the past years because of grave doubts of the bona fides of their declared intentions and standing as students.

In other words, the absence of authority for the Bureau of Immigration to take or require bonds of foreign students applying for admission to the United States, is a distinct handicap to many such students and to the Government as well. It is a handicap to the Government because it makes extremely difficult the work of keeping track of these students and compelling their departure after the student status is terminated. It is a handicap to foreign students because in many cases they are unable to prove their bona fide status. Whenever there is a doubt along this line under the present law, that doubt must necessarily be resolved in favor of the Government, and student applicants in these cases are excluded. If the bureau were authorized to require bonds in doubtful cases, any such doubt could be resolved in favor of the applicant.

If H. R. 7793 should become law, it would benefit American labor. It would compel nonimmigrant diplomatic attendants, servants, and employees from remaining in the United States unlawfully after termination of their privileged status. It would enable the Bureau of Immigration to require departure bonds of foreign students. Aliens in either of these classes then could be deported, if they do not depart voluntarily. No longer would they be able to remain here to compete with American workmen by taking their jobs.

Vigilance is ever necessary to maintain our policy of restrictive immigration.

RETIRED WARRANT OFFICERS

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 460, to give war-time commissioned rank to retired warrant officers and enlisted men.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. I understand that this bill has been so amended that it will cost the United States Government nothing.

Mr. KVALE. Not one cent, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman will see to it that when this bill goes to the President that part which has been put in here which protects the Treasury will not be disturbed before it becomes law?

Mr. KVALE. It has already passed the Senate in the form recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKS. Where it requires three objections to defeat the passage of a bill or delay it, can one Member, by reserving an objection, hold up the matter indefinitely?

The SPEAKER. He certainly can, if no Member demands the regular order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all warrant officers and enlisted men who served in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard of the United States during the World War or the Spanish-American War, and whose service during such war was creditable, and who have been or hereafter may be retired according to law, shall on the date of approval of this act or upon retirement in the case of those now on the active lists of the services named herein, be advanced in rank on the retired list to the highest commissioned, warrant, or enlisted grade held by them during such war: Provided, That nothing in this act shall entitle any of the personnel described herein, while on active duty, to any other rank than that in which they were serving at the time of retirement: And provided further, That no increase in active or retired pay or allowances shall result from the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIQUIDATING INDEBTEDNESS OF FARMERS' IRRIGATION DISTRICT, NEBRASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10748, for liquidating bonded and other outstanding indebtedness of the farmers' irrigation district, Nebraska.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE RADIO ACT OF 1927

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 11155, to amend the radio act of February 23, 1927, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 47, sec. 85), and for other purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that under existing law licenses to operators of stations can only be granted to citizens of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. That is true. The present law specifically provides that licenses for radio stations shall only be granted to citizens of the United States. There is not such a requirement with respect to licenses granted to radio operators.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit at that point, I know in my home city any number of aliens, admitted to this country lawfully, who would like to be American citizens but who can not qualify for citizenship because of the strict educational requirements. This bill shows there are 67 aliens—and I assume they are qualified to become citizens of this country—who are operating on vessels. Why should you deprive those men of a livelihood—men whose hearts are in sympathy with the purposes of this Government—because they can not meet the strict requirements of citizenship?

Mr. DAVIS. On the other hand, there are thousands of American citizens who have radio licenses and who are out of employment. There are 37,000 radio licenses, and there are thousands held by American citizens who are out of employment. We insist their rights are superior to those of aliens.

Mr. STAFFORD. But suppose a man is in this country properly but has not the educational qualifications to meet the acid requirements of the naturalization laws? Why should he be barred from the privilege of having a radio license and deprived of making a living just because he can not meet those strict educational requirements?

Mr. DAVIS. I want to state that if he has not the qualifications necessary to qualify for citizenship in the United States, he can not be an efficient radio operator.

Mr. STAFFORD. He qualifies for admission to the United States, but he can not qualify for citizenship. The qualifications for radio operation are technical, but those for citizenship partake of strict educational requirements.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is: Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

AMENDMENT OF NAVIGATION RULES FOR THE GREAT LAKES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 3908, to amend title 33, chapter 4, section 252, paragraph a, of the navigation rules for the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am somewhat acquainted with the purpose of this bill and I assume it seeks to lift the present restrictions against the Englewood and Chester, which were built by the Ford Motor Co., for operation on the New York barge canal. Because I am acquainted with the construction of that character of barge, I am wondering whether the requirements of 20 feet above the hull could be met in going under bridges along that canal.

Mr. DAVIS. I think so. This legislation is recommended by the Bureau of Navigation and it has the approval of the Lake Carriers' Association. The occasion for it is that there are certain bridges so low that the lights must be lowered or they will be operating in violation of the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I had not actual acquaintance with the two vessels referred to, I would not controvert the gentleman's position, but I do not believe the 20-foot requirement is adequate to meet the navigation requirements of those two vessels.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sure the Bureau of Navigation thinks so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That title 33, chapter 4, section 252, paragraph (a), of the Navigation Rules for the Great Lakes and Their Connecting and Tributary Waters, approved February 8, 1895, be, and it is hereby, amended as follows:

"SEC. 252. Lights of steam vessels under way:

"Rule 3. Except in the cases hereinafter expressly provided for, a steam vessel when under way shall carry:

"(a) On or in front of the foremast, or if a vessel without a foremast, then in the fore part of the vessel, at a height above the hull of not less than 20 feet, and if the beam of the vessel exceeds 20 feet, then at a height above the hull not less than such beam, so, however, that such height need not exceed 40 feet, a bright white light so constructed as to show an unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of 20 points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light 10 points on each side of the vessel, namely, from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side, and of such character as to be visible at a distance of at least five miles: Provided, however, That such vessels built to navigate the New York State Barge Canal or other similar canals where the bridges prevent them from carrying the headlight at the height prescribed herein, shall carry such headlight not less than 20 feet above the hull."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect April 15, 1932.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, line 1 on page 2, and insert:

"That the first two paragraphs of rule 3 under the heading 'Lights' in the first section of the act entitled 'An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters,' approved February 8, 1895 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 252), are amended to read as follows: "

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

REMOVAL OF LIMITATION UPON FILLING OF VACANCY OF DISTRICT JUDGE FOR NEW JERSEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5342, to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PAYMENT OF $100 TO EACH ENROLLED CHIPPEWA INDIAN OF THE RED LAKE BAND OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 8393, providing for payment of $100 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I want to inquire if the committee would be willing to accept an amendment of $25 in line 7, page 1, as well as in the title of the bill, instead of $35. It seems that the report of the commissioner recommended $25 instead of $35.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is their own money, is it not?

Mr. GOSS. Yes; but the fund is being exhausted, and I understand from the report that there is very little more, if anything, to go into the fund. I shall not object if my amendment is accepted.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. I do not see other members of the Indian Affairs Committee here, and I am not authorized to act for the committee. What I would prefer to have the gentleman do would be not to object, but to offer the amendment, and I can assure the gentleman I shall not interpose any objection. I do not like to take the responsibility of the committee accepting it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, with the understanding the committee will not object to the $35 being reduced to $25, I shall offer such an amendment and withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury so much as may be necessary of the principal timber fund on deposit to the credit of the Red Lake Band of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota and to make therefrom payment of $100 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota, under such regulations as such Secretary shall prescribe. No payment shall be made under this act until the Chippewa Indians of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota shall, in such manner as such Secretary shall prescribe, have accepted such payments and ratified the provisions of this act. The money paid to the Indians under this act shall not be subject to any lien or claim of whatever nature against any of said Indians.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "$100" and insert "$35."

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, striking out $35 and making it $25.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: Page 1, line 7, strike out the committee amendment of "$35" and insert "$25."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

ALTERNATE JURORS IN CERTAIN CRIMINAL CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 10587, to provide for alternate jurors in certain criminal cases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a rather important bill. I gave it some consideration and the thought occurred to me during my consideration of the matter, whether it would be a feasible proposal to provide that before the trial the judge might submit for waiver to the counsel for the defense that in case any of the jurors should become invalided or incapacitated during the trial of the case that the trial would go ahead with the remaining number of jurors, not less than 10, rather than to provide for the surplusage of two jurors always being present to meet such a contingency. My thought is to have a double-barreled provision—first, to submit to the attorneys the question whether they will agree that in case any two jurors become incapacitated they will waive their right; and, second, if they will not, then the provision that the gentleman suggests to become operative.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have just been advised by my colleague from Massachusetts that in some of the States they have arrangements under which, if a juror becomes incapacitated to proceed, they permit the remaining jurors to return a verdict. We did not consider in the committee the matter suggested, but speaking for myself do not believe the House would agree to a provision for a verdict by a jury of less than 12 men.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, my suggestion was that if it were approved by the counsel. In Wisconsin we permit in civil actions a verdict of 10 men out of a jury of 12, and my suggestion involved the idea that counsel for the accused and counsel for the prosecution shall agree that if this condition developes then the verdict of the remaining capacitated jurors will be accepted as the verdict of the full jury.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Personally, I would not object, but the matter was not considered by the committee and I would not assume responsibility of speaking for the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sympathetically inclined to the bill. Would the gentleman have any objection to passing it over for two weeks?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That would be all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 11499) for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. It is an important matter that is coming up now, and we ought to have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 31. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency."

SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

SEC. 3. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. STEAGALL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended 20 minutes so as to make the whole time one hour, one-half to be controlled by myself and one-half by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I being opposed to the bill, and the gentleman from Alabama in favor, how will the time be divided? Shall I yield on this side to gentlemen in favor of the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not apprehend that there will be any difficulty about that, unless the gentleman should desire to use all the time in his own right. I hope the gentleman will be able to accommodate those in favor of the bill on this side.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have requests from three Members, which will take about 20 minutes. I think we can take care of that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Alabama expect to yield time on this side to those opposed to the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have not figured out the details in the allotment of time yet.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that inasmuch as general debate on the bill is going to be confined to 1 hour that we ought to have a real discussion of it, and 30 minutes of the time ought to be yielded to those opposed to the legislation.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the request.

Mr. MAPES. But the gentleman said that he did not think there would be anyone on his side in opposition to the bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. The demands I have on this side are mainly those in favor of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. If that is true, if the gentleman will take care of the opposition on his side, I will help him take care of the other.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, this bill represents years of careful study and mature deliberation, and it is reported as the unanimous judgment of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. Extended hearings have been held on this legislation during two former sessions of Congress. Extended and thorough hearings were conducted during the present session by a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, consisting of five of the ablest and most painstaking members of that committee. Then, after having been carefully gone over from day to day, it was finally written as the deliberate conclusion of the entire membership of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House. No legislation since I have served on that committee was ever more fully discussed or more seriously and thoroughly considered.

The proposal is not radical. It is not extreme; it is not dangerous. It is conservative and constructive. It comes before you with a unanimous report of the committee, after hearing discussions by many of the ablest economists of the country, by members of the Federal Reserve Board, and persons in other positions of high authority. It is backed by nation-wide sentiment among farmers and business interests throughout the country.

The original Federal reserve law as reported by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House in 1913, contained a provision in substance the same as that which is now before the House. But, due to the extreme caution and conservatism that characterized the deliberations of Congress in connection with the passage of the Federal reserve law, it was stricken from the bill. The law represented a progressive step of far-reaching import. It encountered severe opposition and, as is always the case, compromises were effected, and in that way the provision was eliminated.

But experience has demonstrated the correctness of the views and the judgment of those who at that time favored the incorporation of such a proposal in the original reserve law.

Mr. Speaker, we are no longer operating our financial machinery under the old system of silver and gold as a basic measure of value in the United States. So long as that was done, the mining of our basic money metals was carried on in a way that maintained a steady supply, keeping pace with our growth and development. Gold and silver circulated freely, and natural laws played a big part in the supply.

But with the Federal reserve system we have departed from that, and we now have in this country, whether we desire it or not, what is called a controlled credit and currency measure of value. We have had that whether we knew it or not, ever since the enactment of the Federal reserve act. All we attempt in this bill is to recognize that power of the Federal Reserve Board to declare the policy of Congress in the use of that power, and to follow up that provision of the law by a direction to the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury to employ that power to promote a normal price level by fixing the value of money as provided by the Constitution and to maintain stability of values in the United States, to establish and promote a stable measure of values, and, so far as in their power lies, to prevent the recurring periods of price falling, with resulting depression and panic, such as have come upon the country on different occasions during the past decade.

We saw this power demonstrated in 1920 and 1921. I am not here to abuse anybody or to recite history, but, Mr. Speaker, we saw credit contraction and currency restriction in the United States during that period in the amount substantially of $2,000,000,000, and prices were cut in half as if by one stroke of a pen and the country plunged into panic. Farmers were thrown into bankruptcy, merchants and bankers had their loans called, and commodity values were crushed. Confusion and distress spread throughout the land as a result of that policy. Later the mistake was discovered, the policy was reversed, and expansion and liberal credit substituted for the practices that had obtained, and prices revived, and under the changed order prices were more or less stable and we had a revival of normal activity and prosperity in the United States for a number of years.

I am not here to fix blame nor to criticize, but in 1929 again there was a horrible contraction of currency and of credit in the United States and a decline in commodity prices that brought depression and panic and a wave of bank failures and bankruptcy to farmers, merchants, and all classes throughout the United States, largely as the result of that policy.

What we attempt to do in this bill is to direct the Federal Reserve Board to use their powers, their rediscount regulations, their open-market operations, by purchasing securities in the open market, so as to release currency and expand credit and thereby ease the strain on the banks, the farmers and merchants, and other business interests in the United States. The record shows that they have the power to do it; the law confers the power; members of the Federal Reserve Board, themselves, acknowledge they have the power. The Secretary of the Treasury stated in an address in New York a night or two ago substantially what I have said to you as to the power which the Federal Reserve Board now possesses through its managed currency, to restore price levels.

I refer to an address delivered by the Secretary of the Treasury at the annual luncheon of the Associated Press in New York on April 25, 1932, in which he said:

> This leads us to the latest feature of the program of financial reconstruction. It must not be forgotten that the events which have taken place have greatly curtailed those funds which constitute reserves and therefore form the basis for credit expansion. We have lost since September approximately $640,000,000 in gold, and in addition currency still hoarded must be well in excess of $1,000,000,000. The Federal reserve program of buying governments, which has been in progress now for some weeks, would thus be fully justified on the grounds of replacing exported gold and hoarded currency.
>
> But I believe that there is more to be said in favor of such a policy. With the collapse of our banking system definitely halted and with our commercial and industrial organization still in a state of extreme strain, what would appear to be required now is the stimulus of credit expansion, supported by a liberal policy of the Federal reserve system, such as it is pursuing at present, and regulated in its development by that system. With a gradual restoration of confidence at home, with greater stability abroad, with a new banking law increasing the amount of disposable gold, the situation is auspicious for carrying through an easy-money policy as long as it remains under control, and does not develop into uncontrolled inflation. The means of control lie in our official banking organization, and the machinery of that organization provides a method of solving such difficulties and dangers as may arise. Controlled credit expansion is only possible through the operation of that system. I emphasize this to bring out the contrast between controlled expansion of this kind and pure inflation, such as is involved in proposals now before the Congress for printing fiat currency, or such as would result ultimately from a long succession of unbalanced budgets.

Why not have Congress indorse and direct a continuance of this policy? Any other course means the continuance of the present downward trend in prices. It means bankruptcy; it means to close out and a start over for the masses of the people throughout the United States. A reasonable amount of expansion of credit and of currency will ease the banks and release the assets of the banks which are now frozen. The Federal Reserve Board can substitute currency for securities now in the banks. When the banks receive such currency, they will buy more securities or make loans and again exchange their securities for currency and get more money from the Federal reserve banks. This will be repeated and carried on until at home and even abroad these transactions will be felt until credit is eased. This will revive trade and business at home, and finally it will be felt by those who purchase in America, and all along the line the prices will be lifted at least toward the level that obtained during the period from 1921 to 1929. Our people can not pay debts in dollars that are worth twice what they were when those debts were contracted. It is not fair to expect it. The creditor class filled the press and the mails with protests at what they termed dishonest dollars in 1926, dollars which they said meant partial repudiation. If it was dishonest to pay debts with cheaper money than contracted for, it is equally dishonest to require payment of debts in an appreciated currency.

If this plan fails as predicted, no harm can result. The power upon which we rely will be in safe and prudent hands. We can not afford to drift on as we are doing now. It is unpardonable that people must lose their homes, their life savings, and be turned out of employment in the midst of abundant harvests and enormous production of our factories. The cry of overproduction is unsound. It is worse, it is ridiculous. Bountiful harvests, industrious labor, fruitful soil, abundant production of the things useful for mankind are not curses. These things should mean more comforts, more happiness, and prosperity. The trouble is in our method of distribution, and this results in part, at least, from an unstable currency. Let us face the problem and solve it as becomes statesmen.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I regret very much that I must decline. I would like very much to yield, but there are several members of the committee who have given much thought to this legislation and I desire to save some of the time for them. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman not include as a part of his remarks the speech of the Secretary of the Treasury delivered in New York, to which he referred?

Mr. STEAGALL. I thank my friend, and I shall be glad to follow his suggestion. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, do you gentlemen know what this bill is? Let me read it to you; it is only three or four lines:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency.

This is the Congress of the United States, and the Congress is hereby declaring that the policy is that the average purchasing power of the dollar shall be restored and maintained. Do you gentlemen honestly believe that the Congress of the United States can maintain the average or any other purchasing power? Why, we have laws that absolutely prohibit that very thing. Every law in relation to monopoly is based on the fundamental right of a man to do business in his own way, and the antimonopoly law prohibits the establishing of a monopolistic purchasing power. It reminds one very much of the nine tailors of Tooley Street who started out a petition, "We, the people of England." That is what is sought to be accomplished here.

In the second paragraph we find the bill provides:

> The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

What are you doing with the statutory law concerning our coins that requires the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of our paper money, our silver money, our copper money to and with gold, so that we have full 100 cents in the dollar value? This bill does not question whether there shall be 23.22 grains of pure gold in the dollar.

This does not touch the gold dollar or the question of silver. This is just a lot of words which say only that "the policy of the United States shall be that the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury shall maintain the average purchasing power of the dollar."

The whole question of money and credit is involved in this one sentence. Our money is not made by the ipse dixit of 8 or 10 words. What about the words which say that the Secretary of the Treasury shall keep and maintain the parity of all our money together? That is what we want. We want our money held as sound money. I have talked about silver at different times. I have suggested that we put some more silver into the money base in this country, so that there will be more solid metal in the money base for all money and all values. The question is being discussed before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I have attended the meetings of that committee. I have attended the meetings of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I have talked with economists and bankers and scientists to get the truth of the situation. The remedy is not what this bill proposes or anything which the United States Government is going to control by this kind of bill. If we have some law that will make the banks use the money that is in the banks, then something might be done in connection with purchasing power and credit; but this bill does not authorize the use of money, continue the use of money, make paper money or silver money, or do anything except to order the Secretary of the Treasury to control and make the average purchasing power of the dollar.

The last sentence of the bill is section 3, and reads:

Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

What does that mean? How far does it go? I submit that it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to set aside the statute which requires our money to be maintained on a parity—gold, silver, and paper always at par. Look at it. Read it over.

If the Federal Reserve Board, charged with making effective the average purchasing power of the dollar, decided to stop gold payment to control the volume of credit and currency by this general repeal, the full power is vested. Never in the history of this country has so drastic and despotic power been vested in any Cabinet officer or bureau of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, from the time I was in college until to-day I have always opposed inflationary movements that sought to debase our currency. There is a fundamental principle that I learned years ago that if any government seeks to introduce debased currency, it drives out sound currency. That was the vice of the silver movement of 1890, and the fears of the financiers at that time was that if people went on buying silver ad infinitum when there was no demand for it, it would ultimately drive out the gold dollar and place the country on a silver basis.

This is the worst bill that can be precipitated at this time, when countries abroad and everywhere are looking to the United States to see whether they will maintain the gold standard. Millions and millions of dollars of the earmarked gold of foreign countries are being withdrawn weekly, because foreign governments are fearful that the United States will not maintain the gold standard. What does this mean? Nothing more than instead of having gold back of the currency we will issue a mandate to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Board to issue fiat money, the consequence of which will only be one, and that to create an additional scare in the financial and banking world to that which already exists.

The administration has been doing everything within its power to try to restore confidence. A few months ago millions upon millions were being withdrawn from banks by skeptical depositors and put into Government bonds and into safe places because they feared the banks would not be able ultimately to meet their obligations. Now we are seeking to establish an artificial basis for prices by having the Government use its printing presses to turn out paper money. For what purpose? To establish prices on a certain inflated basis.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield at this time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I want to know where the printing-press provision is.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is its very purpose. By this bill you are seeking to drive the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury to issue billions of currency which the country can not absorb and for which there is no commercial demand.

By the bye, for the last two weeks, ever since Governor Meyer and Governor Harrison testified before the Committee on Banking and Currency, I have been daily seeking to get copies of their hearings and they are not available. The hearings containing the testimony of Mr. Meyer and Mr. Harrison are not available, but the statements of the inflationists who believe, by artificial means, by increasing the amount of currency, they can raise prices, are available.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield.

This is a law that seeks to interfere with the natural order and to establish an artificial order, trying to inflate, while everyone concedes that in 1929 there was undue inflation, by reason of brokers' loans and of other rife gambling conditions. The only sound condition to follow after that gambling debauch was to squeeze out the water of prices, and get prices down to represent real and not stimulated inflated prices. Now we are seeking, by artificial means, to stimulate, to inflate, to blow up the financial balloon, and then go to the cotton farmer and the wheat farmer and say, "We passed a law that will bring relief," when they know better that it can not bring relief. That their commodity prices are determined by the world market through the inexorable operation of the law of supply and demand. This is a panacea for our economic ills as ill advised as most of the financial heresies that come out of Kansas and Iowa during periods of economic depression.

Pass this bill and watch the financial barometer become murky with the call for increased withdrawal of gold by foreign governments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended an additional 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the general debate be extended 30 minutes, one half to be consumed by himself and the other by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I have an arrangement with the gentleman from Pennsylvania whereby I will consume 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consume 10 minutes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has an agreement with the gentleman from Pennsylvania different from the one the Chair announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCORMACK). The Chair has submitted the request, and the Chair understands that the additional 30 minutes is to be divided between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Alabama to utilize the additional 15 minutes in favor of the pending bill and the gentleman from Pennsylvania to utilize his 15 minutes in opposition to the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees that I am to have 20 minutes of the additional 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair, of course, is not a party to any private agreement; but the Chair will bear in mind the fact that there is such an agreement and will try to conform with the private agreement of the two gentlemen.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the time is under the control of the gentleman over here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the additional unanimous-consent request with reference to the 30 minutes unanimously agreed upon, that 20 minutes of the 30 minutes be utilized by the gentleman from Alabama. Is there objection?

Mr. McFADDEN. I recognize the understanding that the chairman of the committee has entered into with me, and I understand that he is to yield to those in favor of the bill, while, so far as I am able, I am to take care of those in opposition, and to serve that purpose the gentleman from Alabama is to have 20 minutes of the time and I am to have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman from Wisconsin, when he extends his remarks, to tell us what inflationary money this bill provides for and what fiat money this provides for. The gentleman talked himself hoarse saying that that was the proposition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I decline to yield for the gentleman to inject another buncombe speech like that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not intend to extend my remarks.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill merely declares a policy—the policy that the price level of commodities should be raised to the average index level furnished by the Department of Labor for the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive. If you will look at that level in the hearings you will see that that is the level which normally the authorities of this country all recognize as being sound and affording commercial prosperity.

Now, the proposition is that the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury be charged with carrying out that policy. That is all there is in this bill. Is that a feasible thing?

A week ago to-day the Secretary of the Treasury made a speech in New York. He is reported as follows:

> The Treasury Chief, addressing the annual luncheon of the Associated Press at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel, said that the wave of fear and the tide of deflation had to be turned back. "The only way that I know to bring adequate relief to the people of the United States is to set in motion forces that will make economic recovery possible." As one of these forces, Mr. Mills outlined controlled credit expansion, amply safeguarded by the Federal reserve system. "Controlled credit expansion," he said, "is only possible through the operation of that system," that is, the Federal reserve system.

I emphasize this to bring out the contrast between controlled expansion of this kind and pure inflation such as is involved in proposals now before Congress for printing fiat money, or such as would result ultimately from a series of unbalanced Budgets.

The language of the bill is:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency.

It further provides that it shall be the duty of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out this policy. That is what Mr. Mills himself said was necessary and proper only a week ago to-day.

Therefore I say that we are not at loggerheads with the Treasury, or with the Federal Reserve Board, or with the Federal reserve banks, but the Federal reserve banks are to-day buying a hundred million dollars worth of securities a week in an endeavor to do the very thing which we are declaring is to be the policy of this Congress, and directing them to carry out this policy, and giving them our indorsement in so doing. If you call that inflationary, if you call that fiat money, it is being done to-day by the very authorities who are invoked here against this proposition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman who just took his seat undertook to quote the Secretary of the Treasury. I want to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has informed me personally that he was never heard upon this bill, that his views were never requested upon this bill, and that he is opposed to its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the Secretary of the Treasury deny he made the speech from which I have quoted?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not yield to the gentleman. I am telling the gentleman and the House what the Secretary of the Treasury told me, that he has never been heard upon this bill, that his views have never been requested, and that he is opposed to its passage. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, such warrant as I have for addressing myself to this subject dates back far behind my membership on the Committee on Banking and Currency. Twenty-two years ago I was the chairman of a commission on the cost of living in my State, created because prices were said to be too high. To-day the complaint is that prices are too low. I came out of that study convinced that the fluctuations in the general price level are the greatest single menace to the prosperity and happiness of the world. [Applause.] In four minutes I can not tell you why. I will confine myself to one phase of this situation.

American testimony has been produced. I want to lay before you the opinion of a commission that reported to Parliament last June, consisting of the chairman, the Right Hon. H. P. MacMillan; the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, who is the chairman of what I understand to be the largest bank in England, the Midland Bank; Sir Walter Raine, president of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce; Mr. Lennox B. Lee, president of the Federation of British Industries; Mr. J. M. Keynes, secretary of the Royal Economic Society and editor of the Economic Journal; Prof. T. E. Gregory, professor of banking in the University of London; Mr. Cecil Lubbock, a director of the Bank of England; and seven other men prominent in the financial or economic life of Great Britain. Thirteen of these fourteen experts in finance and economics signed what is known as the MacMillan Report, a document of 322 pages treating exhaustively the subject of finance. Therein they discussed the question by reason of which I asked 13 years ago to be put on the Committee on Banking and Currency, the question I think to be the greatest question before the world to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman four additional minutes, making his time eight minutes.

Mr. LUCE. I appreciate the additional time allotted to me, but in even eight minutes I can not skim the surface of this subject.

Let me give you the judgments of this commission of eminent British financiers and economists. I dislike very much to read anything to the House on any occasion, but two or three of the statements in their report are so pertinent to the present issue that I crave your attention, even though I do read. First:

> We may well have reached the stage when an era of conscious and deliberate management must succeed the era of undirected natural evolution.

Thus that commission found with almost complete unanimity for the principle of managed currency. This is a principle we have been following without knowing it ever since the Federal Reserve Board has been in existence. Mark you, the board has admitted it is doing this thing which we now want to put in black and white. At the present moment it is buying $100,000,000 worth of securities a week to do the very thing your committee advises. The members of the board have always objected on the ground that it would be unwise to put in black and white a mandate to do the thing they are doing. It may be that the lack of having authority and direction put in black and white has been at times and in some measure responsible for irresolute and tardy action of the board in the exercise of its power. [Applause.]

Now, mind you, this bill is simply a declaration of policy. It says that we believe for the welfare of the country the board ought to be ordered so distinctly to pursue a certain course that it can not evade, so that its members can not quibble, can no longer quarrel among themselves, and no longer leave the country in the dark as to their policy. We provide that they shall be open and frank in the exercise of the powers that they have inferred already to exist with respect to this very thing. Therefore, the question of the moment is this: Shall we say explicitly that we are for what this British commission says is necessary to the prosperity of the British Empire and which a large number of our own economists say is necessary for the prosperity of the United States? I believe the time has come when we should frankly tell the world that we, too, will determine that our currency shall be so managed by the purchase and sale of acceptances and Government securities, and by the raising and lowering of the discount rates that we shall be in some degree relieved from the cloud always hanging over us by reason of the fluctuations in our price levels [Applause.]

Gentlemen often jump at the conclusion that we have in mind raising or lowering particular prices. This is not a question of a single price. It is a question of the purchasing power of gold. In the last three years we have had a terrible increase in the purchasing power of gold. It is the cause of the greater part of our suffering to-day. The hardships under which so many millions of our people are laboring are chiefly due to the fact that prices have so terribly dropped, and I use the term deliberately, because I know something of the troubles and sorrows and disasters that are being brought about by the great fall in the general price level in the last three years.

We can not achieve by this bill the impossible. We can not permanently regulate with exactness the level of prices. We can say that our Government shall go on doing just what it is doing now, trying to raise the level of prices by increasing the volume of available credit.

There is one other reason why, at last, my mind has crystallized after these years of uncertainty in the committee room. We have had days and days and days of hearings and of study of this problem. I was not sure what was best, but now I am satisfied that the only prudent, safe course is to do this thing in order that it may, perchance, and it may, we hope, put some barrier against the rising tide of demand for fiat money. There comes over our desks every day an ever-increasing volume of propaganda—letters, pamphlets, newspaper articles—urging us to set the printing press agoing to grind out paper money or bonds. In my judgment this is going to be the greatest issue in the coming campaign or, if not, in the next campaign—the issue of the 1896 controversy—with money uppermost in the public mind. Money, the love of it, is at the root of all evil, and the love of it and the desire for it are the chief source of our political strifes. If you do not want to take some precaution against the renewal of this agitation, perchance the rise of a new political party, at any rate an attempt to change the principles of the old parties with a revival of the theory that the way to salvation is through the medium of the printing press, why, then, vote against this resolution, a resolution which attempts to raise a barrier, if possible, against this tide of inflationary sentiment.

We ask here for no more increase of the currency than the Federal Reserve Board is producing from day to day or trying to produce. We ask for no inflation beyond the legitimate needs of commerce and industry. We ask that the agencies of Government shall be put at work to return prices to a certain level. Note the judgment of the MacMillan commission in this matter:

> We are emphatically of the opinion that, even if a further fall of wholesale prices be avoided, their stabilization at approximately the present level would be a serious disaster for all countries of the world alike; and that the avoidance of such an event should be a prime object of international statesmanship.
>
> The losses which are now being incurred by nearly all categories of producers of average efficiency in nearly all countries of the world are an overwhelming proof that the fall of commodity prices has gone far beyond the substantial reduction which might be justified in the case of many important commodities by the increases in productive efficiency which have been achieved in recent years. Consequently even the continuance of the present price level—quite apart from a further fall—must prolong business losses and the unemployment which the attempt to avoid these losses temporarily brings with it until a substantial downward readjustment of money costs has been somehow brought about. * * * Governments and central banks will, justly or unjustly, be blamed for the misfortune. Social unrest will tend to make moderate and rational remedies more difficult the longer they are delayed. * * *
>
> We think it much more likely that attempt may be made to stop the revival prematurely than to allow it to proceed too far. We believe that this would be a great mistake. It is often argued, and it may well be true, that the power of the banking system to hold a business expansion in check is greater than its power to revive business when depression has set in. If, however, we are overprone to check every expansion, yet hesitant in the face of every depression, the net result will be a steady lowering of the price level with all the attendant evils of such a prospect. As soon as business begins to lift its head again, we may be sure that austere voices will be raised declaring that there is an incipient inflation of credit present which must be scotched, when, in fact, the existing deflation of prices will not yet have been redressed. After so severe a depression as the present one, when we have to travel such a long way to reach the most expedient position of equilibrium, it will be most important, in our judgment, to be slow to accept such advice. * * * Our objective should be, so far as it lies within the power of this country to influence the international price level, first of all to raise prices a long way above the present level, and then to maintain them at the level thus reached with as much stability as can be managed.

You ask why we say from 1921 to 1929. Certainly, there must be a goal toward which the Federal Reserve Board shall progress. There must be some point at which they shall stop. The price level from 1921 to 1929 was remarkably steady. To return to it would be fair to both creditor and debtor. It would be a just and reasonable standard. Its maintenance would content agriculture, industry, and commerce. Therein lies prosperity.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW].

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to differ from my friend and very distinguished colleague who has just spoken, but I think this should be said. The gentleman quoted from the testimony of three British bankers that their country should have a managed currency. He did not call attention to the fact that these bankers are in a country which has already passed off of the gold standard and in a country that is forced to have a managed currency.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Excuse me, I can not yield when I have but one minute.

The gentleman did not quote as in favor of this measure any American bankers or any of the authorities of the agencies which are supposed to administer the provisions of this bill. As I understand, there is no member of the Federal Reserve Board, no official of the Federal reserve banks, or the Secretary of the Treasury who himself is supposed to accomplish the results which are advocated by this measure, who believes it is possible to do so.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, as I contemplate this measure I can not forebear to exclaim, "Shades of Gen. J. B. Weaver and the Greenback Party."

In its fundamental aspect, it is, indeed, the most important measure that has come or will come before the House during the present session. Yet we find it taken up under a motion to suspend the rules, without any fair opportunity for debate, without notice to the Members, without anyone's having read the hearings or made any preparation or any study of the measure. To pass a measure of this importance under these circumstances is nothing short of a parliamentary atrocity. [Applause.]

There is no lack of money in circulation. We have above $1,000,000,000 in circulation more than we had at the peak in 1929. The trouble with the present situation is not so much the lack of money in circulation as the failure of money to circulate. It is the lack of "velocity" in circulation—the money does not move. This is due to the lack of confidence. Even if we had five times as much money in circulation, if we had no confidence we would still have the depression with the downward march of commodity prices.

Our trouble is not so much deflation in prices as it is the inequality of the deflation which has taken place. Prices of agricultural products now stand at an index of 45 while the price of manufactured commodities stands at 66. The sufferings of the farmer are due not so much to the low prices for his products as to the fact that the prices of his supplies, the things he must buy, are not equally low. Prices for farm products are fixed in the open markets of the world, while prices for manufactures are affected by the protective system, by monopolies, and various other factors which have helped to resist deflation.

Let me say to the "friends of the farmer," to those who champion his cause, that the inevitable consequence of a measure such as this will be to still further increase the disparity between the farmer's index and the manufacturer's index.

This is a measure of inflation to increase money in circulation; its advocates admit it; they boast of it. How are you to affect the prices of one set of commodities without affecting the price of other commodities. If you pump a greater amount of money into circulation, how can you do it without still further increasing the index of manufactured commodities, the price of which can be controlled, yet lowering the index of farm products, which can not be controlled?

There is not reasonable time in which to debate this measure. It is an affront to every Member that it should be presented in such fashion. If we submit to it and accept the measure, knowing nothing about it, having thought nothing about it, we will ourselves confess what the country has lately said of us—that we are lacking in the capacity to legislate.

This measure commands that something be done which can not be done. It commands that something be done which ought not to be done. Yet there is no time given even to catalogue the sound objections that should be entertained by every thoughtful man against it.

This measure is aimed direct at the heart of public confidence in our financial system, confidence without which there can be no recovery. It repeals every economic law, including the law of supply and demand. It confers powers on the Federal Reserve Board which no eastern despot ever dared to exercise. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I have long looked forward to the time when I would have an opportunity to vote for a measure of this kind. For a number of years I introduced a bill in the Congress of the United States looking toward this same general object.

There is no question whatever but what the fluctuation in the purchasing power of our currency has been the cause of more misery, hardship, and suffering than anything else that has ever occurred in the history of the United States. [Applause.]

Something has been said about trying to do the impossible. We are simply declaring as a policy that the Congress is in favor of the stabilization of the American dollar. We are directing the responsible financial officials of the Government to exercise the powers which they already possess to this end. This is a step in the right direction, and I trust that the bill will be passed by an overwhelming vote. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STOKES].

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, I have just called up on the long-distance telephone two of the governors of the Federal reserve system and asked their opinion on this bill. Both of them are strongly opposed to it. They say it is an uneconomic and unwise measure, and will not meet with any success.

These men understand what they are talking about. One has given me a copy of a letter he wrote to me, and gives a statement of the Merchants' Association of New York City. Let me read it to you:

> The Merchants' Association of New York shares the view universally held that the interest of the country is best served by the greatest possible stability of price levels, and believes that in fashioning their discount in open-market investment policy the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks should ever be mindful of this aim. It would be dangerous however, to permit this salacious impression to assert itself in the minds of the people, that the Federal reserve system, no matter how much the officers might bend their efforts in the direction of obtaining price stability, could be held responsible for failure in attaining this ideal, which, as already stated, could only be reached by the cooperation under a common plan of forces entirely outside the Federal reserve system control, not only in the United States but all the world over.

Mr. BRAND of Georgia. Will the gentleman give us the name of those governors?

Mr. STOKES. The Labor Department has told us that there are over 200 commodity values in this country, 200 different kinds of commodities in this country. These commodities are controlled in world markets, not in the United States. If we started to put up the price of wheat, as we tried to do with the Farm Board some years ago, Russia would start dumping in this country, Argentina would start dumping in this country, and so on all the way through, and instead of having as we have now too many commodities, we would have far more than we have at the present time, a great overproduction, and the whole situation would be far more serious than it is now. I seriously beg of you not to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the complacency with which some gentlemen in this House, who have nothing whatever to offer as a remedy for our very deplorable condition, oppose this legislation. It does nothing more than two things: First, it fixes as the policy of the United States the levels to which the purchasing power of money should be carried, which is the average during the period of 1921 to 1929, inclusive. In other words, we express what we believe to be desirable. The next thing is a direction to the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury to use the present legal powers now upon the statute books to carry out that policy. The opponents of this bill talk about "inflation." They talk about all of these other imaginary things which are calculated to prejudice the Members against this bill. There is nothing like that involved in this bill, and such assertions are rather an indictment of the understanding of the one who makes them than they are an explanation of the measure before the Congress.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I call the gentleman's attention to the wording of the language in section 2 of the bill:

> The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the purpose of section 3, if this is simply a declaration of policy?

Mr. BUSBY. It has very little purpose, and it is more form than anything else. When we passed the Glass-Steagall bill, we did it in order to supply an added supply of eligible paper on which currency could be issued, but the Federal Reserve Board is in disagreement among themselves as to a proper policy, and they have refused to put into effect the Glass-Steagall bill. This measure before you now is for the purpose of declaring a policy and directing the governmental servants named to put into effect the provisions of the Glass-Steagall bill.

Conditions in this country are anything but desirable, and I fear that gentlemen who are most strongly opposed to the bill are opposed to it for some other reason than to help the people. One of the witnesses who appeared before our subcommittee suggested that if we should receive manna from heaven somebody would object to its coming that way because it would interfere with the bakers. Gentlemen should not believe that we are ever going to get a measure here upon which all are agreed. I do not question the motive of anyone who opposes, but I can not see, with the distressing conditions among the people, how anybody can oppose trying to use the laws on the statute books at the present time to bring relief to these people.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I am for the bill and want to support it. Can the gentleman tell me what the effect of this will be on foreign trade and upon the value of our dollar abroad?

Mr. BUSBY. It will not have any more effect on foreign trade than Germany's money fiasco in 1921 to 1923 had on the American money market. We are connected with foreign trade and with foreign money through the weight of gold and the weight of gold only, and when one brings all the foreign trade and all the foreign currencies into question, it just indicates that he has not studied the proposition, and as Germany's money fiasco of 1921, 1922, and 1923 did not affect our country, so what we do will not affect the trade in other countries or the money in other countries.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The whole value of this depends to some extent upon the reliability of the statistics of the Department of Labor. Will the gentleman tell us something about that?

Mr. BUSBY. The hearings disclose on page 267 and 358 and 359 that the Bureau of Labor Statistics is absolutely dependable, and it is vouched for by the Standard Statistics Co. and by Mr. Sloan and by Doctor Fisher, whom you all know.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, primarily I am bitterly opposed to bringing a matter of such importance as this before the House under suspension of the rules, without any notice whatever. It seems to me this is one of the most important measures that has been before the House during this entire session. This changes the entire policy of the Government in certain ways. Just how we are going to raise commodity prices in this country without changing the commodity prices of the entire world I am at a loss to understand at the present time.

Here is a proposition directing the Secretary of the Treasury to do what every man knows it is impossible for him to do. Neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor any representative of his department, as I understand, was ever called before this committee to be consulted in regard to the task.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I think the gentleman should be corrected.

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The chairman of the Federal Reserve Board was before the committee, and the invitation was open to anybody to come there who was opposed to this.

Mr. SNELL. The Secretary of the Treasury told me that he never was invited to come before the committee, and that he was very bitterly opposed to this measure.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, I do not know how he talked to the gentleman from New York, but from his talk with me, the word "bitterly" is overemphasized.

Mr. SNELL. Well, eliminating the word "bitterly," he is opposed to it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman knows that the farm organizations and the whole population are in favor of it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me how this is to be done?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, I could not do it in a minute.

Mr. SNELL. No; I do not think so. I would like to have some one tell me what acts will be repealed. Section 3 allows you to repeal the entire Federal reserve act.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Oh, no. That is one of those blanket provisions, provided there might be something in there that should be repealed.

Mr. SNELL. It reads "Parts of the act inconsistent with this act are repealed."

Mr. RAMSEYER. And that is a provision that is carried in nearly every bill.

Mr. SNELL. Anything connected with the Federal reserve act can be repealed under the language of this bill. The amount of reserve that is required under this law can be changed and the act repealed entirely.

Mr. RAMSEYER. No.

Mr. SNELL. I think it can. I do not know how it is expected to accomplish anything. As a matter of fact, it is just a gesture, and everybody knows it. It is attempted to change the whole policy and you do not know what you are going to do. We should have time enough so that the gentleman could explain it to the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have made two reports on this, and if the gentleman would read those he would understand it.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to hear the gentleman explain it to the House. It has not been explained, and very few Members understand what you are trying to do, and that is one reason why I am opposing it.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If the gentleman will get us some time, we will explain it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the suggestion of my colleague from New York that the great authorities on money and banking have not been consulted, I simply have to say that they have had all of their say up to date and the country could not be in a worse condition than it is right now. [Applause.] So we have not lost anything. They have not contributed a single suggestion.

This bill is a heroic attempt to increase commodity price. It is a drastic remedy for a sick and critical condition. I only have one word of warning. That is, if commodity prices are to be increased, then the wages and salaries of the working people must be correspondingly increased. [Applause.] If wages are increased when currency is inflated and commodity price raised, then that velocity of circulation, suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, is created immediately and maintained. With this bill passing to-day, there will be no necessity of passing the wage reduction bill to-morrow. So when the wage reduction bill comes up to-morrow the thing to do is to vote against it. I am sure that labor will be on guard to protect itself. And I serve notice now that we will demand compensatory increases for skilled and unskilled labor as well as the white-collar class to meet these increased commodity prices.

If wages do not increase with increased commodity prices this bill and any inflation that may be created will be of no use to the farmers and the working producers. If wages are not increased it will mean that the working people and wage earners will be compelled to pay the entire cost of the depression. That, I know, is not the intention of the sponsors of this bill. Such a condition would defeat the very purpose of the bill. [Applause.]

A number of references by economists and statisticians and may I say also Members of this House have been made as to the relation between employment and wholesale prices. Real economists—and of course by that I exclude the high-pressure propagandists who are working for selfish interests—have assumed this relationship a priori. In addition to that it may be of interest for the House to know that the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, under the very able management and direction of Mr. Ethelbert Stewart, United States Commissioner of Labor Statistics, has had the wholesale price index and the volume of employment in manufacturing index charted side by side for years from 1923 to 1931 and by months from 1929 to March, 1932.

These charts demonstrate absolutely that employment, at least in manufacturing industries, follows, and follows practically immediately, the changes in the wholesale-price index. It follows, therefore, that anyone who admits the quantitative theory of money and that the volume of money in active circulation will and does determine the trend of wholesale prices must admit that any increase in money circulation that lifts the level of wholesale prices will be reflected at once in the volume of employment and pay roll. Another thing that makes this money more valuable than money shot shrough other channels is the fact that money has two sources of power—one, volume and the other, velocity. The power that money gets from rapid turnover, which is simply another name for velocity of circulation, is greater in the hands of workers than from any other source or direction. This is true not only because of the larger number of workers but from the fact that the worker does spend practically all of his money on necessaries of life for the support of himself and his family, as soon as he gets it. The result is that a dollar in the hands of a workman is worth more socially, I mean to the public as a whole, than is a dollar anywhere else in the world. This, of course, is also true of and applicable, with equal force, to those of our community who have become known as the white-collar class. It changes hands more rapidly and is in the final count really more dollars than the dollar issued to any other group of people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama which I agreed to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has already been taken out of the gentleman's time. The gentleman from Alabama has 16 minutes remaining, which includes the 10 minutes agreed upon between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, we do not understand that we have used or that we have been allotted the 10 minutes which the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to yield to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the original agreement was for debate for the period of one hour, to be divided equally. Later that was extended by unanimous consent an additional half hour. Later by unanimous consent that additional half hour was divided between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the gentleman from Alabama having 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania 10 minutes. That gave the gentleman from Alabama 50 minutes. It gave the gentleman from Pennsylvania 40 minutes. Of the 50 minutes under the control of the gentleman from Alabama the gentleman has already consumed 34 minutes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am sure the Chair is right.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOPER].

Mr. HOOPER. I intend to vote for this bill, but without either the enthusiasm or optimism of its advocates. I will vote for it as an experiment earnestly urged, and which may be of benefit under existing conditions. If I could see any threatened harm, I would vote against it; but to my mind, if it does not accomplish good, it will at least do no active harm. The subject is too broad to have been passed on a suspension of the rules. There is a wide diversity of opinion as to whether any financial agency can elevate or lower price levels in the way intended by the bill.

The bill seems to me to be merely a declaration of national policy coupled with a mandate, without sanction or penalty, to a board which already claims that it is exercising its power to accomplish the purpose aimed at by the bill. I question its efficacy, but will vote for it in the hope that my doubts may be groundless.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that a measure of this importance is being crowded through here in this manner. The first notice I had that this bill was to come up came to me about 1 o'clock this afternoon.

This is a matter which has been pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency for six to eight years. It has had very grave consideration. I must say in the few minutes I have to discuss this measure that I am unalterably opposed to its passage. [Applause.] It is clearly an attempt through financial juggling to raise price levels artificially. It affects international price levels, regardless of what has been said; and in proof of that, while I shall not attempt to give an exact quotation, the late Benjamin Strong, head of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, in discussing this matter, always made the reservation that if anything was done it should be done in the direction of stabilization of international price levels, that anything that was done here would affect international price levels.

You are attempting to do here that which the Federal Reserve Board is opposed to, and the Congress is assuming the responsibility of the burden of directing a technical, financial, and economic operation. No one knows to what extent this order will be carried out. Section 2 of the bill has been referred to. It provides:

> The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield there for a brief question?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman see any similarity between the mandate placed upon the Federal Reserve Board in the section which he has just read and the mandate which was placed upon the Federal Farm Board to stabilize agricultural prices?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not recall just what that was; but here is a direct mandate to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. MAPES. Some question has been raised as to the wisdom of that action of Congress as far as the Federal Farm Board is concerned.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Here is a direct authority to the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out this proposal, under existing conditions, to raise prices by inflation of money and credit.

The third section provides:

> Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Now, that means everything that is in contravention of the Federal reserve act can at the option of the Federal Reserve Board be repealed.

Let me call your attention to one item in this report, where, speaking of the Federal reserve system, it states on page 2:

> The Federal reserve system has been accumulating gold at the average rate of $200,000,000 a year for about six years, and is now in a much stronger position than it was at the time of the open-market operations just referred to.

Gentlemen, need I call your attention to anything further than the recent acts of Congress which have been passed—the Glass-Steagall bill and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill—where we were attempting to protect our gold against shipment abroad? We were recently told that there was danger of withdrawal of $1,800,000,000 of gold from this country.

The next paragraph in this report says:

> It is in a position to put into the market $4,000,000,000 in Federal reserve notes and still maintain its 40 per cent reserve requirements. By utilizing its power to lower reserve requirements of the Federal reserve banks the system could put into the market nearly $9,000,000,000 of Federal reserve notes.

Where is there authority in the Federal reserve act for the Federal Reserve Board to lower the legal-reserve requirements of 40 and 35 per cent on Federal reserve notes and deposits unless it is embodied in the third paragraph of this bill? Which, of course, gives the board this authority to use at their option.

Gentlemen, you are giving power here that was never intended to be given and never should be given to any board. Congress should retain this authority.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I yield.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman, the gentleman is taking the position that this Congress has no power to give orders to the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. McFADDEN. Oh, no; I am not taking that position. I am simply saying what you are now doing.

Mr. HOWARD. My own judgment is that it is about time to give some orders to America's master criminals.

Mr. MANLOVE. Mr. Speaker, aside from the opinions of other people, I believe this House would like to hear the very worthwhile remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania continued without interruption.

Mr. McFADDEN. Just suppose this law is passed and price levels are below the average, as we know they are at the present time, what agency are they going to put to work? There is indicated in what I have just read that they will increase if they see fit the circulating medium in this country from $4,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000, to say nothing about possible increase of credits. Now, Federal reserve notes are redeemable in gold. We do not know how many Federal reserve notes are outside of this country to-day. We do not know how soon they may be presented, and when and if they are presented they may drain all of the gold that we now have.

We have recently passed a law here which permits the substitution of United States bonds in lieu of gold as 40 per cent reserve of Federal reserve notes for the purpose of protecting our gold. Now you are going to create the greatest scheme of inflation ever proposed in any country. They admit in this report that $4,000,000,000 or $9,000,000,000 worth of circulating medium may be brought out in this country in order to bring the price levels up. They do not say anything about how much they are going to increase credit in addition to this, if it is necessary. These are all items to which some consideration should be given in the passage of this bill.

I do not think we should increase the power of the Federal Reserve Board. We have suffered because of the fact that they have already too much power, the fact that there has been maladministration, but despite that fact you are now going to give them a vehicle here by which they will be given unlimited power.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Mississippi made the statement that this was to carry out the mandates of the Glass-Steagall bill. In that case, why was it not necessary for us to make some legislation in order to do that? Why does not the Federal Reserve Board carry out the provisions of that bill?

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not speak for the Federal Reserve Board. I do not understand that they have been carrying out the terms of the Steagall-Glass bill.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. Of course, the gentleman understands very thoroughly that they have not put into operation the power to use bonds instead of eligible paper but have been waiting for a further deflation in real estate, which, I think, has gone far enough.

Mr. McFADDEN. I ask the gentleman what will happen when they start, under this direction, to carry out this plan?

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman will yield further, I would like to say that we give no direction except to use the law. We do not even tell them to use the law unduly in regard to the law we are proposing in this bill.

Mr. McFADDEN. But we are giving very definite instructions in this bill. There has been some reference here to what England has decided. Reference was made to the fact that the MacMillan report recommended certain things. It is true the MacMillan report was made prior to England going off the gold basis, but the men who signed that report knew the situation that existed. However, I want to say to you that the United States is still on the gold basis. We are supposed to be running an American banking system without regard to the systems they have in Europe. One of the greatest troubles we have had in the Federal reserve operations has been that we have listened altogether too much, as regards the dictation of foreigners, in the management of our banking system, which is largely responsible for the situation we are in at the present time. It is time that we adopted an American policy without regard to the foreigners. This kind of legislation is playing into the hands of the internationalists for the stabilization of price levels. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG]. [Applause.]

THE NEED AND THE PLAN TO STABILIZE THE PURCHASING POWER OF THE AMERICAN DOLLAR

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the stabilization of the purchasing power of money is favored by those who use it as a measure of value, and opposed by those who use the fluctuating purchasing power of money for profit.

When a Government establishes a monetary system its first duty should be to stabilize the monetary unit of value of that system.

The fathers who established our Government attempted to do this when they provided in the Constitution that "Congress shall coin money—and regulate the value thereof."

Congress provided for the coinage of money, and as our Government grew and our financial system developed it sought to regulate the value of our money by declaring that 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, should constitute a dollar, or unit of value, accepting the universal theory that the stability of the price of gold would stabilize the dollar's value. But the price of gold has not remained stable, and consequently the purchasing power of our money fluctuated.

In what is termed "good times" commodity prices rise as money becomes plentiful and cheap. Speculation follows and we have inflated prices, always to be followed by deflation, or falling prices, and we have "hard times," as the purchasing power of the dollar rises.

These periods of inflation or deflation, meaning rising commodity prices when money is plentiful and cheap, or deflation when money becomes scarce and costly, result in great financial losses to the people of the Nation.

The Black Friday of 1873 was the high mark of a disastrous inflation when banks crashed, business men failed, manufacturing plants closed, millions of men were thrown out of work, and farmers had no market for their products. My own father, with thousands of others, lost his all during this crisis and went West to establish a new home, and I became a citizen of Kansas. Coming to Congress in 1919, I became a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and watched the inflation of prices as the result of an abundance of cheap money until the peak was reached in May, 1920. Then followed the deflation of the prices of commodities. The purchasing power of the dollar rose and commodity prices fell until the low point was reached in 1921.

Dr. Wilford King, professor of economics of New York University and a recognized authority on the wealth of the Nation and national incomes, estimated that this inflation and deflation brought about a confiscation of wealth from its rightful owners amounting to $40,000,000,000, or an amount equal to that expended by the Nation during the World War.

The present deflation of commodity prices, as the purchasing power of the dollar again rose, reached its lowest point this year, and it has been estimated that the confiscation of wealth has resulted in the loss of over $100,000,000,000.

But the loss of wealth is not all. The suicides, the wreckage of homes, the destruction of happiness, and the general discontent and unrest created disaster to the Nation that can not be estimated.

Between these two latter deflations we had a fairly stable value of money and commodities between 1921 and 1929, which did not come about by accident. There was a master mind in the Federal reserve system. The late Benjamin Strong, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York City, had influenced the use of the powers of the Federal reserve system for stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar, or the commodity price level, which are one and the same. He realized that when the Federal reserve system was created Congress gave to it the powers to regulate the volume of money of the Nation and to greatly influence the cost of the same.

What are these powers? Under the Federal reserve act of 1913 that established our Federal reserve system, 12 great Federal reserve banks were established, and all of the national banks of the Nation, and the State banks that might become members of the Federal reserve system, were required to create a great reservoir of credit by depositing with these Federal reserve banks 3 per cent of all their time deposits and 7 per cent of their commercial or open-account deposits, amounting to over three thousand millions of dollars; and under the law these funds could be invested in Government securities which the banks had the right to buy and sell. The Federal reserve system was also given the right to regulate the rate of discount that should be charged the member banks for discounting their eligible paper. Thus when they took the money from their vaults to purchase Government securities they increased the volume of money that could be used as a basis for credit, and when they sold Government securities, which returned the money to their vaults, they decreased the volume of money that could be so used.

When the Federal reserve act first passed the Senate it contained the clause that the discount rate should be used to stabilize the price level. But this clause was stricken out in conference.

Gov. Benjamin Strong successfully used these powers for stabilization. When the commodity price level started to fall and the dollar to rise he, as chairman of the board for the purchase and sale of Government securities, purchased bonds and influenced the reduction of the discount rate, thus increasing the volume of money and reducing its cost. When prices started to rise and the purchasing power of the dollar to fall he sold bonds and influenced the increasing of the discount rate, thus reducing the volume of money and increasing its cost—a simple process of regulating the supply and demand and cost of money, to the end that the value of money, as measured by what money will buy, would be stable in its purchasing value.

Governor Strong was so engaged in trying to develop and improve the Federal reserve system, to which he sacrificed his life, and realizing the jealousies among the principal officers of the Federal reserve system, that while he used its power for stabilization he made practically no announcement of such policy.

During the sessions of Congress of 1922 to 1926 Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, the author of the Money Illusion and many other valuable books on the money question, advocated the stabilization of the purchasing power of money through regulating the quantity of gold that should represent the dollar. This is called the quality theory of money stabilization. Congressman T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH introduced a bill in Congress in 1922 having this theory as a basis and hearings were held upon the same by the Banking Currency Committee.

In 1926 George H. Shibley, an economist of Washington, D. C., learning that I was studying a remedy for the disaster of inflation and deflation, directed my attention to the fact that in the original draft of the Federal reserve act the powers of the Federal reserve system were directed to be used for promoting stability in the price level and urged me to introduce a bill for this purpose. While I was unable to agree with him as to the form of the bill, I did introduce H. R. 7895 in the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, a bill in which I used the words "all the powers of the Federal reserve system shall be used for promoting stability in the price level." Hearings were held upon this bill by the Banking and Currency Committee at which some of the most prominent economists in the United States appeared and discussed the question.

Finding that groups who profit by the fluctuating price of money were opposing the same by the use of the untrue statement that I was seeking to regulate prices, I changed the form of the bill in the next Congress to a direction that all the powers of the Federal reserve system should be used for stabilizing the purchasing power of money.

Among the witnesses appearing before our committee was Gov. Benjamin Strong, who admitted that he had been using the powers of the Federal reserve system with success in stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar, but took the position that Congress ought not by law to so direct the Federal reserve system, because he feared that if in administering the law the officers of the Federal reserve system should fail to secure all that the people might require and demand, that it would bring complaint, criticism, and injury to the Federal reserve system. I made it plain to him that I was a firm believer in and friend of the Federal reserve system, but was convinced that Congress, which had given these great powers to the Federal reserve system, should direct their use in the stabilization of the purchasing power of the dollar, and urged him to lend his great ability to the preparation of such a bill.

Dr. J. R. Commons, professor of economics in the University of Wisconsin, whose great interest in the stabilization of the purchasing power of money had led him to generously employ his leave of absence to visit Washington and assist me in the study of this question, was also a witness in these hearings. Finally Governor Strong agreed that while because of his position as governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York he did not want to be known as taking an active part in the preparation of such a bill, yet in the interest of having such a bill drawn that would not injure the Federal reserve system, that he was willing to lend such assistance. Dr. J. R. Commons and I then visited New York and had an all-day conference with Governor Strong, with the result that it was agreed a temporary draft of a bill might be prepared by W. R. Burgess, then assistant Federal reserve agent of the New York bank, and Doctor Commons, to be then submitted to Governor Strong and myself for agreement.

This resulted in my introduction on March 6, 1928, of House bill 11806, which after directing that "the Federal reserve system shall use all the powers and authority now or hereafter possessed by it to maintain a stable gold standard; to promote the stability of commerce, industry, agriculture and employment; and a more stable purchasing power of the dollar, so far as such purposes may be accomplished by monetary and credit policy," directed that the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve banks were authorized and directed to make and to continue investigation and study for the guidance of the system's policies with regard to the purposes of the bill. Extensive hearings were also held upon this bill in March, April, and May, 1928.

I set forth these facts that it may be known that while Gov. Benjamin Strong refrained for the reasons I have stated in openly taking any part in having Congress direct the Federal reserve system in the use of the powers it gave to the same, he felt and nevertheless believed in the use of such powers for the stabilization of the purchasing power of the dollar, and even went so far as to arrange a meeting between the Federal Reserve Board and myself, at which he was present on March 17, 1928, in the hope that they might be induced to take a more sympathetic attitude toward such a policy.

Those who have not studied this subject may raise the question as to what measure of value shall be used in determining when the purchasing power of money increases or lessens with regard to the prices of commodities. The statistical bureau of the Department of Labor issues weekly what is called an Index Number of Commodity Prices, obtained by taking the average wholesale prices of over 700 commodities. When this average of commodities for which money is exchanged sinks week after week, the purchasing power of money rises, and when this index of commodities prices rises the purchasing power of money sinks. So by using the Index of Commodity Prices, as published by the Department of Labor of our Government, the purchasing power of the dollar may be adequately measured.

Realizing that the failure of the use of the powers to regulate the supply and demand of money and the regulation of the discount rate for the stabilization of the purchasing power of our dollar had so depressed prices, at the opening of this session of Congress I introduced House bill 49, carrying in addition to provisions of my former bills the direction that the wholesale commodity price level of 1926 should be regained and maintained.

The present bill, recently reported out of the Banking and Currency Committee by Congressman GOLDSBOROUGH, who was chairman of the subcommittee that prepared the same, contains the same principles of my original bill and those that I have introduced since. It simply directs that the powers of the Federal reserve system, which the Government has given to it, shall be used to stabilize the purchasing power of money. When the commodity prices steadily decrease in value, as they have from July, 1929, to the present time, as shown by the price-index level issued by the Department of Labor, the officers of the Federal reserve system and the Secretary of the Treasury are directed to purchase Government securities and reduce the rate of discount, thus increasing the volume of money and reducing the cost of the same and vice versa.

Because the greater part of the present indebtedness of the people of this Government was created from 1921 to 1929, we directed that this policy of increasing the volume of money and reducing the discount rate shall be followed until the purchasing power of money shall be restored to the average of such purchasing power as existed from 1921 to 1929, which will be that of 1926, and to be there maintained.

This is the only hope that the Nation has of restoring prices of commodities to where they may be exchanged for money at the average level of prices that existed when the greater amount of debts of the people were created. It is the only hope for a return to the prosperity that existed from 1921 to 1929. It is not inflation; it is reflation or deflation of the present high value of money. The principal officers of the Federal reserve system have stated before our committee that they are using the powers of the Federal reserve system to this purpose now. The bill our committee is asking you to pass simply directs that they shall so continue until the purchasing power of the dollar shall be established at its purchasing power from 1921 to 1929. Had the bills that I introduced in 1926, 1927, and 1928 been passed, the present depression would not exist. The officers of the Federal reserve system then said, "We are pursuing the policy you urge, but should not be directed by Congress to do so." Then the dollar was on speaking terms with all of us and could be secured at a fair price in exchange for our labor, the fruits of our labor, and the property we own. And as the need for the passage of this bill did not then seem so great, the people could not be aroused to demand its passage. Now that the value of the dollar has reached so high a price that it takes long hours and more days to earn the same dollar and two or three times the amount of the products produced in the factory and on the farm to secure the same, people are aroused and are demanding that the purchasing power of the dollar be reduced, which can only happen by advancing the prices of labor and commodities and property that the dollar will buy, and this can only result from increasing the supply of money and reducing its cost, which the powers we have given to the Federal reserve system make possible.

It is just a question of whether we are big enough to say to the board that we have created, "You shall use these powers we have given you for the benefit of all the people of the United States and not for those who deal and profit in the fluctuating purchasing power of our dollar." [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding me a few minutes of the time he controls in opposition to this bill.

I am for this bill. [Applause.] There is absolutely nothing to the scare that the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] tried to throw into this House. This bill has been thoroughly considered. It has received more public discussion in the last year than any other bill that has been before this House. I have been on two different committees studying this problem, one with the Iowa Bar Association and the other with the American Farm Bureau Federation. Two reports which I helped to prepare have been filed, and they have been circulated among the Members of the House.

The first speech I made on the policy and purpose of the pending bill was last September, and at the time the newspapers in the Middle West treated it as a sensation. Lately the press in the East has taken the position, without referring to the bill, that what this bill seeks to accomplish is the only way out of the distressful economic situation.

Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN] gets alarmed that there might be an upward trend in commodity prices and that there might be some inflation. We have to restore the average of commodity prices to where they were a few years ago in order to save this country. If you keep on this way for another six months, the whole financial structure will collapse and everything will go to pieces.

To show you that the eastern press has come to its senses, even though some Members of Congress have not, I call your attention to the May number of the Review of Reviews, a conservative periodical. On page 10, Mr. Albert Shaw, in discussing what we have already done in the way of extending credit, says:

> This, of course, is good as far as it goes. The local banks do not desire to be loaded up with unsalable farms; while, in turn, the farmers' families shudder at the thought of losing their homes and their familiar possessions. They all work desperately to pay the mortgage interest, but all the "farm relief" that we are reading about does not emancipate the farmer from any part of his burden of indebtedness. It does not reduce his obligations, in proportion to his ability to pay. Nothing can relieve him except higher prices for what he has to sell.

[Applause.]

Gentlemen opposed to this bill have quoted a few officers of Federal reserve banks as disapproving the passage of this bill. In answer to the attitude of those bank officials opposing this bill, I am going to quote you from as high an authority as we have in this country on financial matters, to wit, Mr. Owen D. Young, who said:

> The proper handling of price stability is one of the most important matters facing the capitalistic system. In it will be found the roots of those maladjustments which result in unequal and unfair distribution of wealth, in unemployment, and other serious problems.

This bill points the way. In fact, it is the first step to avoid the evils that Mr. Young points out. We must first have an elevation in the general level of commodity prices and thereafter stability in commodity prices. This bill, if enacted into law, will direct the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury by their control over the volume of credit and currency to restore the average commodity price level to the same level that existed when the farmers and other producers contracted their debts. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I believe at least four-fifths of the time consumed by the present Congress has been in connection with issues that have arisen out of the fact that we have had during the past three years constantly declining commodity price levels, or, putting it another way, that we have not had a dollar stable in buying power.

If it had not been for this decline, we would not have had to spend weeks here in connection with legislation such as the Glass-Steagall bill, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, additional appropriations for the land-bank system, unemployment relief, and would not have had the difficult problems that have arisen in connection with every annual department appropriation bill or the controversial and delicate problems that we have tried to solve here within the last few days with respect to what should be done as to wages of Federal employees and balancing the Budget. All are directly connected with fluctuating price levels and the declining level of the past three years.

So, certainly every person ought to agree, as has been emphasized here, that one of the main issues before the country under present conditions is how we can elevate the commodity price level to the stage on which existing indebtedness was contracted, as nearly as possible, and then arrange to stabilize that price level hereafter on such a stage. If that can be accomplished, we will fast recover from the effects of the present depression and will probably prevent recurring depressions in the future.

This bill, unfortunately, from my viewpoint, does not provide the weapon or the complete remedy that I think should be given to the country. It does not proceed in the scientific way that I had hoped the committee would recommend, and, as proposed by the bills I have sponsored, but nevertheless I do feel that it is not only a step in the right direction but that it has some substantial relief in it, and for the life of me I can not see any valid objection to it when you do not change one word of the present law, when you do not change one power of or one limitation upon the reserve board, but simply give it the mandate embodied in this measure intended for the public good. [Applause.]

By way of extension I will simply say that my views were given in detail in my speech on April 14, when I addressed the House with the use of charts prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

In brief, I adhere pretty much to the qualitative theory of money and therefore believe it essential in order to bring about true stabilization that power be given to change the amount of gold in the dollar from time to time so as to conform with the changing value of the metal itself. This bill, in my judgment, too much assumes that the value of the dollar depends solely upon the amount of currency in circulation or the amount of credit available.

In my opinion, price levels can be changed through expansion and contraction of currency; but only temporarily. So long as our monetary unit is anchored to a specific amount of gold the purchasing power of each unit will eventually be drawn back to the exchange value of the amount of gold in which such dollar is redeemable. There should be a synchronization between currency or credit and the price of gold—amount thereof in the dollar—as provided in my bills, H. R. 20 and H. R. 21.

I am anxious that this bill be enacted. It gives a specific mandate to the reserve board. If those who believe that our price level can be stabilized solely through currency and credit control are right, then this bill will do the business, assuming, of course, that it is honestly and efficiently administered. If this happens, no one will be happier than I.

On the other hand, for the protection of my position and my earnest views resulting from several years of study, I must indicate my firm conviction that it will not accomplish everything that its sponsors expect. The job will be too big for the reserve board under present legal authority. I prophesy that it will be unable to increase the price level to the stage suggested in this bill and unable to give us a stable buying power of the dollar thereafter.

If this prophecy proves correct, those of us in this House and throughout the country who believe in a modified gold standard, varying the amount of gold in which the dollar is redeemable, if need be, to obtain absolute stability in its purchasing power, will have a stronger case than ever before, and we will be back asking for such legislation. I know that there are several members on the Banking and Currency Committee who believe that ultimate solution rests in that sort of a remedy.

I have been greatly pleased with the many favorable comments made on my speech of some days ago, not only by thinking Members of this House, but also by professional men, business men, economists, and other students who have written me from many States. The following extract from a letter from Mr. W. A. Overholser, attorney at law, Libertyville, Ill., is rather flattering but typical:

> I have read with a great deal of interest and admiration the very able and scholarly address delivered by you in the House of Representatives on Thursday, April 14, 1932. I believe that it contains one of the sanest suggestions that has been made yet as a solution for relieving us of our present horrible economic disaster and preventing similar occurrences in the future. It is a relief during the existence of the present economy hysteria to find some one who has an intelligent plan to offer which would appear to go to the root of the trouble and to know that we have some men in Congress who are working on the problem coolly and intelligently.

I thoroughly believe our bills go to "the root of the trouble." The pending legislation is a start, but we must finish the job later. I hope I may be here when Congress assumes its constitutional duty and enacts legislation which will automatically and effectually "regulate the value of money."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the bill which the House is discussing to-day (H. R. 11499), a bill for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar, is very short, and is as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:
>
> "SEC. 3. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar, as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency."
>
> "SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.
>
> "SEC. 3. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed."

You will notice that the bill has two purposes: First, the general purpose of raising the wholesale commodity price level to its predeflation point and, second, of maintaining that price level and avoiding periods of inflation and deflation.

All authorities agree that unless the price level is raised there is no way for the debts of the country to be paid, because the values of the things which when sold are used to pay debts have fallen on an average of more than 50 per cent below their prices when the debts were contracted, whereas the debts do not fluctuate as prices fluctuate but remain fixed. Therefore we find that for the first time in history both the creditor class and the debtor class are anxious for price levels to be raised to a point which will be fair as between debtor and creditor. The debtor wants the price level raised so that he can pay his debts with money which is no higher, or at least not much higher, than it was at the time he contracted his debt, and the creditor wants the price level raised in order that the one who owes him may not be forced into bankruptcy, which would prevent the creditor from collecting his obligation.

To illustrate: The case of a farmer who paid $5,000 for his farm at price levels which preceded this depression, and who gave a mortgage of $3,000 on his farm, paying in cash $2,000. Now, since the depression, the products with which the farmer can pay his debts and fixed obligations have fallen more than one-half, and the selling price of his farm has fallen to around $2,000. At present price levels the farmer can not pay the interest on his mortgage, the taxes on his farm, the insurance on his buildings, his fertilizer bills, and other fixed charges. If the mortgagee was to sell the farm in order to have his mortgage debt paid, he would only receive $2,000, less the expenses of sale, or around $1,800, and would lose $1,200; insurance premiums and fertilizer bills would not be paid at all and the payment of the farmer's taxes would be delayed, so that a rise in the price of farm commodities not only protects the farmer who is the debtor but protects the mortgagee, the fertilizer company, the insurance company, and the treasury of the State and county, who are all creditors.

This bill is not intended to help one class any more than another class. It is intended simply and solely to restore justice as between producer and consumer, debtor, and creditor, as only by and in so far as you can achieve justice between all classes of the people can you have a productive people, a contented people, a happy people, and a people who do not feel that they are being unjustly treated.

The other day I was asked how this bill would help a man to get a job. In other words, how it would help the unemployment situation. I answered that the unemployment situation was the condition that the bill was designed to cure more than any other condition. I said that I would be perfectly content for the bill, instead of providing for the price level of 1921 to 1929, to provide that the price level should be raised until unemployment was reduced to what may be called its irreducible minimum. In other words, to a point when practically everyone who wanted employment could obtain employment. I was asked to explain further my statement. I said that the Subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, of which I was chairman, had made a very careful study as to the price level which would be fair to producer and consumer, debtor and creditor, and would thus cause the least possible economic disturbance, and that we found the general price level existing between 1921 and 1929, inclusive, to be substantially fair to all classes; fair treatment for each class would mean, in general, employment for those who desired employment; so that if the law provided for a rise in prices until the unemployment problem was solved, it would mean practically a rise in the price level existing from 1921 to 1929, inclusive. Probably the first thing which will occur to you will be, how can the price level be raised; and, second, how can it reasonably be maintained after it is raised? These are both fair questions, and I am going to answer them as well as I can within the few minutes I have to speak.

The Federal reserve system is now in a position to put into the market $4,000,000,000 in Federal reserve notes, and still maintain its 40 per cent gold-reserve requirements. By utilizing its power to lower the reserve requirements of the Federal reserve banks, the system could put into the market nearly $9,000,000,000 of Federal reserve notes. Either sum, if the country knew that because of a congressional mandate the Federal reserve system was to raise the price level to the point indicated, would be much more than sufficient to raise it, because as soon as the country understood that the policy of the Federal reserve system was directed by law to a given point, confidence among banks and business men would be restored, bank loans would expand, the retailer would buy from the wholesaler, the wholesaler would buy from the manufacturer, the manufacturer from the producer of raw materials, and the masses of the people would find employment, so that through buying of securities by the Federal reserve banks and through the restoration of confidence as above indicated, the normal business activity of the country would very speedily be reestablished. You will then say, "Well, we see by the papers that the Federal reserve system is now buying about $100,000,000 a week of securities, so why pass a law to carry out and compel them to do exactly what they are now doing."

The answer is this: The Federal reserve system for more than a year before they went into the market for Government securities were, to my knowledge, entreated to do that very thing. The Federal Reserve Board was told that with the immense amount of gold we had here in this country and with about $17,000,000,000 of Government securities in the market they could safely buy Government bonds to an almost unlimited degree, and thus place money into circulation, raise the price level, and restore confidence. To my knowledge, the Federal Reserve Board was told that unless they did that very thing we would have the business depression, the collapse, and the unemployment that we now have. If this legislation is passed and becomes a law, and is administered enthusiastically and sympathetically by the Federal Reserve Board, it can by its open-market operations and its control of the rediscount rates speedily raise the price level to the indicated point. Should this bill become a law, they may have to take very little affirmative action, because the knowledge that they are directed to do it will so reassure the people that business expansion, which means credit expansion and rising price levels, will take place very quickly.

The next question you will probably ask will be: "How can the general commodity price level be maintained by the operation of the Federal reserve system?" In the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington is what is known as an index number, which index number contains 784 commodities and indicates whether the general price level is rising or falling. In other words, it indicates whether the relation of money and credit to business is remaining reasonably stable or is getting out of its proper relationship. The standard index figure, 100, is about the average of the 1921 to 1929 price level. If the price level rises much above that point, we know that the producing and debtor classes are being favored, and that the creditor class and all those with a fixed income, such as salaried people and wage earners, are being discriminated against. On the other hand, if the price level falls much below that point we know that the creditor class is being favored and that the debtor and producing classes are being discriminated against. We also know that if the decline in prices continues, unemployment will ensue, because it is the producing classes which employ labor; and as production is not profitable in a falling market, as prices decline the wheels of industry run slower and slower and more and more people are turned out of employment, which is exactly the condition we have now.

Now, speaking roughly, it would be the duty of the Federal reserve system under this bill to watch the index number of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. When the index number began to fall the Federal reserve system should put money into circulation by buying Government securities and by this means raise the price level approximately to the indicated point; and then, if the price level moves above the indicated point, the Federal reserve system would withdraw money from circulation by selling Government securities and thus send the price level down approximately to the given point as indicated above. The Federal reserve system would also use its power to raise and lower rediscount rates.

The whole thing is very simple. It has absolutely no purpose except justice for everybody. The Congress knows perfectly well that the Federal reserve system would not be able to attain absolute perfection in carrying out the law, but beyond any doubt the system could carry out the purposes of the law in a practical way and thus avoid periods of undue business expansion, price inflation, and speculation, which invariably lead to collapse such as society is now in, and which has resulted in untold hardship and despair.

You hear a great deal in this country about overproduction, a word that in its broad sense should never be used, because, if the people have the buying power they will consume the normal production of the country. With our labor-saving devices and our mass production we can produce enough in the country for every man, woman, and child to live in comfort and reasonable luxury. The problem of production in this country has been solved and the problem of statesmanship now is to solve the problem of distribution. This problem must be solved in a manner which is right and fair to everybody, and has no object but justice. I am one of those who have been studying the principle involved in this bill for many years. The principle involved in this bill has been discussed and analyzed in congressional hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee for the last 11 years. In my judgment, the bill, if sympathetically administered, will be a profound factor in the solution of this great problem of distribution which I have just mentioned.

In order to illustrate just how the Federal reserve system can control the price level, I will offer one or two illustrations.

In the winter of 1920 the system decided to deflate price levels and to begin on May 20. The method pursued at that time was to raise rediscount rates in a very drastic manner, especially among country banks. This fact is now well known, is not disputed, and, as you will remember, not only caused the failure of a great many country banks but absolutely destroyed agriculture as a profitable occupation throughout the country. Later, under the sympathetic leadership of Benjamin Strong, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, an open-market committee was formed, which for several years and until Mr. Strong's death, stabilized the purchasing power of the dollar with great success. I ascertained this definitely from Mr. Strong in 1926, but sensed it earlier, and said in the course of a speech I made before the Maryland State Bankers' Association at Atlantic City in April, 1924:

Not so generally understood is the fact that the open-market operations of the Federal reserve banks in the first half of 1923 tended to curb the involuntary movement and in the second half of the year tended to sustain business on its new level. Early in January the Federal reserve banks held open-market acceptances and United States securities to the value of $734,000,000. These they reduced steadily throughout the period of incipient business boom.

By July the total holdings were less than $300,000,000. Between October 17 and the end of the year, however, the holdings increased from about three hundred million to four hundred and seventy-three million dollars. Thus the open-market operations took money out of general circulation at a time when, according to our indices, money in circulation was increasing faster than the volume of trade, and later in the year when these same guides began to point in the other direction the open-market operations put more money into circulation. We were cautious in 1923 because we had had a recent lesson. We will be less cautious as time goes by, and in a very short time, when credit begins to be demanded all over the country for developments of all sorts, the Federal Reserve Board, without express legislative authority, will not be able to restrain a period of inflation greater, probably, than any we have ever known.

If a law such as is provided for by this bill had been in operation at the time I made the speech of 1924, the period of frenzied speculation of 1927, 1928, and 1929 would not have taken place, nor would the country now be in its present condition of extreme economic depression. In the various discussions of this measure and of the principle involved in it which have taken place in the Committee on Banking and Currency in the last 11 years, no reason has ever been advanced by anyone as to why such legislation was not sound.

It is true that officials of the Federal reserve system did advance arguments against the bill, such as you will see from day to day in a certain part of the metropolitan press, but in every instance when pressed by informed cross-examination, they agreed that their objections are mere vague possibilities and not substantial probabilities.

No one has ever attacked the bill on the ground that its purposes were not to achieve justice, and as nearly as the subcommittee could sift what little objection there was advanced to the proposed bill, it was the objection which is always raised to anything with which one is not entirely familiar.

In order to indicate definitely and clearly that the principle embodied in this bill has been thoroughly considered for many years in the American Congress, may I here insert a letter received by me from the Hon. Thomas R. Marshall, ex-Vice President of the United States, dated August 9, 1922:

FRANKFORT, IND., August 9, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GOLDSBOROUGH: I am so glad that you have introduced a bill to stabilize the purchasing power of money. I wish I could be present at the hearing, but it will be impossible for me to do so. Don't let this matter drop or stop with a perfunctory hearing, because this is a thing that is going to come to pass, and you will be a very proud man to know that you had the honor of taking the initial step in the House of Representatives.

Cordially yours,

THOS. R. MARSHALL.

We have a wondrous country, with actual producing power beyond the dreams of Midas. We have a magnificent citizenship, which is capable of absorbing to advantage every contribution which can be made to their comfort and welfare. We have a remarkably patient people who are wondering just why it is there is poverty in the midst of plenty; want, when there is more than enough to go around for all of us. Sometimes I have thought that our economic system, which so poorly distributes the great production of the Republic, has grown up through the natural human selfishness of a tremendously energetic people, but we can not philosophize when 8,000,000 of our people are in need of the necessities of life, nor can we expect them to philosophize. They have already been tremendously patient. For how much longer we can expect them to be patient, no one can say; but if, while there is yet time, we turn to justice and obey her, if we trust liberty and follow her, the dangers that now threaten will disappear, the forces that now menace will turn to agencies of elevation. Think of the powers now wasted, of the infinite fields of knowledge yet to be explored, of the possibilities of which the wondrous inventions of this century give us but a hint. With want destroyed, with greed changed to noble passions, with the fraternity born of equality taking the place of the envy and fear that now array men against each other, with mental powers loosed by conditions that give to the humblest comfort and leisure, and who can measure the heights to which our civilization may soar? Words fail the thought. It is the golden age of which poets have sung and high-raised seers have told in metaphor. It is the glorious vision that has always haunted men with gleams of fitful splendor. It is what he saw, whose eyes at Patmos were closed in a trance. It is the culmination of Christianity. It is the city of God on earth, with its walls of jasper and its gates of pearl. It is the reign of the Prince of Peace.

For the information of the Congress and the country as to the length of time during which the principle involved in this bill has been considered by the American Congress, I am including at the end of this speech, as an extension of my remarks, a speech made by me in the House of Representatives on Tuesday, May 23, 1922, entitled "Stabilizing the Purchasing Power of Money"; a speech made by me on August 16, 1922; a speech made by me in the House of Representatives on February 17, 1923, entitled "Fortifying the Federal Reserve System Against Inflation and Deflation"; and a speech made by me before the Maryland State Banking Association, entitled "Stabilization of Money," and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the request of Hon. Eugene Black, of Texas, on Monday, June 22, 1924.

STABILIZING THE PURCHASING POWER OF MONEY

[Speech of Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, in the House of Representatives, Tuesday, May 23, 1922]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am taking advantage of the opportunity presented by the general debate on this bill to talk for a few minutes very briefly and very generally about a matter upon which long consideration induced me to introduce a bill in this House this morning. For a great many years, in fact ever since I have been old enough to think very much, I have wondered about the gradual expansion and contraction of general price levels through long periods of years, but never until I became a Member of Congress did it seem that I had time enough to even attempt any sort of a real analysis. Last summer on the occasion of a dinner, at which former Vice President Marshall and I were guests, I brought up the subject and found that he had given the matter a great deal of consideration, and he made several luminous suggestions based upon his study and supported by his splendid common sense. I am profoundly convinced that the problem of stabilizing the purchasing power of money is soluble. I believe it is the second problem of economic importance confronting the people of the world at this time, and I believe this to be the psychological time to bring the matter up for serious consideration.

For the purpose of this discussion I have not in mind stabilization outside of this country. World-wide stabilization will come only when the Allies realize that Germany can pay her war indemnity only in goods directly or indirectly, and when we come to recognize that the allied debt to us can be paid only in the goods of the Allies and the goods of Germany which will indirectly pay it. With an indemnity due by Germany of around $33,000,000,000 and only about $9,000,000,000 of gold coinage in the world, all the gold coin in the world, if it were held by Germany, would pay but one-fourth of the reparations, and if perchance through some inconceivable and baleful natural force or artificial process Germany should acquire the gold with which to pay her indemnity and should pay it, the human mind can not conceive of the world-wide hell of inflation, worse than that of Austria or of Russia, which would come about, resulting in riot, revolution, and destruction of values until the sanity left in the world should have an opportunity to reassert itself and establish a new monetary basis. World-wide stabilization can never come about, and the German indemnity and the allied debt can never be paid while the tariff walls are being raised higher and higher and our markets cut off from the commerce of the world. [Applause.]

My friends, our people are staggering under a burden of a war debt of about $25,000,000,000. That means that the backs of our people are to be burdened with a load of taxation such as has never been known before in the history of this country. A large part of that burden must ultimately be borne by the consumer, which term has come to mean that part of our people who from necessity live from hand to mouth and to whom the price of commodities means so much. When we speak of the consumer we have in mind the long, long line of men and women and little children for whom the beautiful things of life, the things which so largely make up the sum of human happiness in this world of ours, are obscured by gaunt necessity. Half of this burden can be lifted if we make it possible for the allied debt to be paid. If the present tariff bill becomes a law, it can never be paid. I am forced to think that its framers know it can never be paid. Already the same influences which culminated in this tariff bill have been feeling out the American people on the question of canceling the allied debt. This seemed the thinly veiled theme of several of the addresses made at the meetings of the United States Chamber of Commerce held last week in this city, the Capital of the Nation. We will find out in the next congressional election whether the American people will permit this monstrous thing to be done. If this country had gone into the League of Nations in 1920, world-wide economic conditions would be largely stabilized now. Thousands of little children who have perished on the steppes of Russia from starvation and exposure would have been saved. Four million men and women would not now be walking the streets of this country begging for means with which to earn their daily bread, and the allied debt would now be in process of liquidation and payment.

I am in no sense a pessimist. I have an abiding faith in the good sense and clear vision of the American people; and I prophesy here and now, without the slightest hesitation, that within 10 years we will have a league of nations composed of the nations of the world and based substantially on the treaty which we failed to ratify; and I prophesy that as a reaction from that league of nations will come world-wide economic stability. Will anyone say that we are not interested in world-wide conditions? When a country or a people does not produce normally for itself because of faulty economic conditions, that country or that people will inevitably be fed and clothed to a greater or less extent by other countries and other peoples; and therefore our poorest people, our people who are most needy, together with every other element of the country, will enjoy the greatest degree of prosperity when the people of every nation are able to feed and clothe and house themselves and when the blessed sun of reasonable plenty shines most brightly everywhere.

Now, I have digressed a great deal in a way, have gone outside of the limits of the matter I started out to discuss; but the things I have been speaking of are correlated matters about which I feel very deeply and which may serve to emphasize the subject matter of this speech. My bill was drafted more particularly with reference to conditions affecting gradual rises and falls in general commodity prices which are not within the control of the Federal Reserve Board. In other words, now that we have this splendid banking system, it seems to me that the next step should be an attempt to prevent gradual rises or falls in general commodity prices through long periods of years, causing all concerned misery, misunderstanding, and bad feeling, and culminating in makeshift legislation, radicalism, and sometimes even in revolution and war.

In the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington there is what is known as an index number, which, as a rough explanation, I will say is computed by averaging the price levels of various commodities. These commodities are in nine groups—farm products; food, etc.; clothes and clothing; fuel and lighting; metals and metal products; lumber and building materials; drugs and chemicals; house-furnishing goods; and miscellaneous. There are, I think, 243 commodities listed in the nine groups, the wholesale price of each being accurately kept for the purpose of ascertaining the tendency of prices to rise or fall. A chart is kept which by means of a curved line graphically indicates the trend of prices. As your finger traverses this line from 1873 to 1896 you find prices constantly falling; from 1896 to 1914 prices constantly rising, with a sharp upward trend through the period of the war. As I looked at this chart the other day memories of the hard-worked and poorly paid farmer of my boyhood flooded back to me. It used to seem to me that this man who did so much for everyone else was able to do very little for himself. I remembered how almost impossible it was for him to pay his loans and mortgages. I remembered how the money lender flourished, and I began to see as clearly as we see the sun at noonday that during this period of constantly falling prices, which means ever higher money, the man who had commodities to sell suffered and the man who had money to sell flourished as the green bay tree; and as my finger traveled up the curve of high prices from 1896 I remembered how the man with the fixed income began to suffer, the complaints of the wage earner; that the school-teacher, the clerk, the office man, the salaried person of every type began to feel the pinch and eventually to actually suffer from this condition; and I saw pictured in letters of fire that the "wayfaring man, though he were a fool," might read and understand, the fixed income of these people becoming cheap and the commodities that they had to buy for their support and the support of their families correspondingly high.

Some may say, What of it? Where one person is injured another is benefited, but this is not the case. From about 1879 until 1896 populism rose from small beginnings, chiefly in the great agricultural areas of the Middle West; the money lender and the bondholder were held up to every reproach and contumely; the names of Russell Sage and Hetty Green were thought of as the name of Shylock. Discontent, bad feeling, and difficult financing reduced very much economic output and culminated in the free-silver campaign of 1896.

Shortly after the beginning of the rise of 1896—that is, at about the beginning of this century—the rise in prices began to spread the seeds of socialism among the worker and the man with the fixed income; industrial unrest began, labor unions were formed and became powerful, strikes common, and many of the seeds of the Great War were sown.

Nowhere throughout that part of the world using our monetary standard was the rise in prices felt with any more cruelty than among the middle classes and the toilers of Germany, and this discontent among the great bulk of the people went a long way toward creating the opportunity and, in the minds of some possibly, the national necessity for war.

A great teacher once said to his students: "Divide the study of any social situation into four questions: What is it? Why is it? What of it? What are you going to do about it?" I have talked about the first three questions. I fully realize that the study of the problem of stabilizing the purchasing power of money is in its period of early conception, and that the agony of birth and the gamut of the diseases of infancy and childhood must be run before we can hope to see the thing in the wondrous beauty of its maturity.

But some basis of discussion should be established, some concrete plan should be made the target of constructive criticism, and to that end I have introduced a bill, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which attempts to stabilize average commodity wholesale prices by controlling the quantity of money and credits in relation to the volume of trade by increasing or diminishing that quantity as the average price level goes down or up.

It is probably as well not to undertake a detailed discussion of the bill here and now, but to let the matter finally develop from the committee if it should deem my views worthy of consideration as a framework for legislation.

Years of reflection convince me that equality of economic opportunity is probably the most serious concern of statesmanship. Class legislation lessens the creative enthusiasm of the group favored by it and restrains the economic development of the group outside the favored class.

All of us here to-day must in a few short years and in the fullness of time be gathered to our fathers; the eyes of none of us will shine with the light of those who see the blessed brotherhood that one day will come, when the lion and the lamb shall lie down together; but I firmly believe it lies within the power of Congress during the next few years to solve this problem of stabilizing the purchasing power of money, which will add so much to human happiness and help so largely in solving the gravest political questions.

Right here, as a matter demanding immediate consideration, I feel that it should be suggested to the Federal Reserve Board and to the bankers of the country and to the great thinking public, whose sentiment will so largely control the financial policy at this period of reaction from war inflation, that billions of dollars of war bonds of the Government were paid for in inflated—that is, cheap—money; that to double the price of the money with which these bonds will have to be paid, as is being seriously discussed as a part of a policy of deflation, will change the burden on the taxpayers of this country from twenty-five billions to the equivalent of fifty billions of dollars—that is, will double the burden—that numberless private contracts were entered into at or near the peak, and that practically the actual contract price would be thus doubled; that millions of dollars worth of farm lands were bought and farm mortgages given during the area of high prices, and that such a policy would probably cut the price of these farms in two and double the burden of the mortgage.

I firmly believe that the purchasing power of money can be stabilized. I believe that the solution, when we have it, will be found to be simple; and I trust that that solution will soon be embodied in legislation. I never want to see agriculture and industrial enterprise struggling in the agony of a long period of falling prices or to see the young, active, bright business man, naturally uninformed as to financial science and portents, feel that he is rising to prosperity on the tide of rising prices only to find his business bankrupt and his hope blasted in the inevitable crisis just beyond the peak.

I spoke a while ago of class legislation. It is mighty hard to control the class spirit which fosters such legislation. We all have the class tendency. With some it is social, with some economic, with some religious, with some sectional, with some a combination of two or more; but in whatever guise it appears, the result is antisocial and detrimental to the people as a whole.

The spectacle we have now in the Senate, and had in the House last summer, of the representatives of powerful interests parceling out among themselves the resources of the country through the tariff bill with a reckless abandon, the same in principle with that of the buccaneers of the West Indies as they dvided the loot from the captured trader, is simply a manifestation of the class spirit of powerful economic units, in utter disregard of the interests of the average man, woman, and child, of the person with a comparatively small or fixed income, of the farmer, the small business man, and the laboring man.

Stabilizing the purchasing power of money, if it can be done, strikes at the very root of class advantage and tends to prevent the inception of movements of special privilege. It is mighty easy to get in the habit of losing sight of the under dog, mighty easy to garb with the cloak of conservatism the golden calf of indifference to the common weal.

We all want to be conservatives in protecting the people from the doctrinaire, the political adventurer, or the dealer in the same quack remedies and short-cut treatments which through the ages have gone along with the disintegration and downfall of peoples, but "Where this is no vision, the people perish," and the lessons of the war and postwar period have prepared the minds of the people for two great strides in government of the people, by the people, and for the people—a league of the nations of the world, providing for mutual reciprocal disarmament and legislation stabilizing the purchasing power of money.

In the consideration of this legislation the question of necessary cooperation with other nations need not be controlling, as we are dealing now with a much more uncertain exchange situation than any which independent stabilization by this country could possibly create.

On May 12, at Philadelphia, before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Mr. Edmund Platt, vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board, speaking on America and the Debts of Europe, had this to say in connection with foreign exchange:

"It seems probable that the major depressions of exchange mark periods when our people were seeking to convert foreign balances into dollars, and that exchange recovered when most of the conversion had been made and losses wiped out. Some very large American exporters are known to have taken considerable losses in this way. They sold in terms of foreign currencies and found them when payments became due considerably depressed, but when recovery was delayed beyond their expectations they finally bought dollars and took their losses. Very large losses are also known to have been charged off by some of our bankers."

Again:

"No longer ago than April 1 the editor of the Economic World, whose articles are always worth reading and usually sound, predicted that 'no person now living will ever see the value of the present French franc of actual currency normally and regularly equal to one-half of that of the gold franc established by law as the monetary unit of France.' At the time that was published the French franc was quoted at about 9 cents in our currency. It had been as low as 5.79 in 1921 but had recovered to 8.13 at the end of December. Within a little more than two weeks after Mr. March made this prediction French francs sold at 9.375, and had little more than a quarter of a cent to go to reach half par. They have since fallen back somewhat, but I see no reason why they should not continue to advance if France makes progress toward balancing her budget. They are not lower now than our Civil War greenbacks were at one time, and complete restoration does not appear impossible, though it may take a considerable number of years."

We involuntarily shrink from the serious study of economic questions with which we are comparatively unfamiliar. It is irksome and subjects us to criticism of various kinds. Personally, in my own periods of complaisance with things as they are, I have gotten inspiration from the following lines of the American poet, James Russell Lowell:

Said Christ our Lord, "I will go and see
How the men, my brethren, believe in me."
He passed not again through the gate of birth,
But made Himself known to the children of earth.

Then said the chief priests, and rulers, and kings,
"Behold, now, the Giver of all good things;
Go to, let us welcome with pomp and state
Him who alone is mighty and great."

With carpets of gold the ground they spread
Wherever the Son of Man should tread,
And in palace chambers lofty and rare
They lodged Him, and served Him with kingly fare.

Great organs surged through arches dim
Their jubilant floods in praise of Him;
And in church and palace and judgment hall,
He saw His own image high over all.

But still, wherever His steps they led,
The Lord in sorrow bent down His head,
And from under the heavy foundation stones
The Son of Mary heard bitter groans.

And in church, and palace, and judgment hall,
He marked great fissures that rent the wall,
And opened wider and yet more wide
As the living foundation heaved and sighed.

"Have ye founded your thrones and altars, then,
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that building shall endure
Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?

"With gates of silver and bars of gold,
Ye have fenced my sheep from their Father's fold.
I have heard the dropping of their tears
In heaven these eighteen hundred years."

"O Lord and Master, not ours the guilt;
We build but as our fathers built;
Behold Thine images, how they stand,
Sovereign and sole, through all our land.

"Our task is hard—with sword and flame
To hold Thine earth forever the same,
And with sharp crooks of steel to keep Still, as Thou leftest them, Thy sheep."

Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man,
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

These set He in the midst of them,
And as they drew back their garment hem,
For fear of defilement, "Lo, here," said He,
"The images ye have made of Me!"

The Anglo-Saxon peoples have gone a long way since those words were written, but, my friends, the next time you watch the glory of the winter storm, in warmth and comfort, consider to what percentage of the people that storm means only misery and hardship. That thought has often made me feel with terrible distinctness the long, long hill humanity has to climb to relieve the agony of the world.

I am confident the subject of these remarks is entitled to our most painstaking consideration. I am not so confident that the suggestions embodied in my bill even approximate a solution. I have an abiding conviction that this great body will at the proper time approach the matter with the caution which it demands, but with courage, with resolution, with vision, and with hope. [Applause.]

[Speech of Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland, in the House of Representatives, August 16, 1922]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, since May 23 last, when I addressed the House on stabilizing the purchasing power of money, in which address I attempted to emphasize the incalculable value of stabilization to the farmer, the salaried man, and the wage earner, as well as to every other class in our complex and highly organized civilization, and on which date I introduced a bill for which the hope was expressed that it would serve as a basis for constructive legislation in the matter of this all-important subject, this body will be interested to know that the effort has been approved by farmers' organizations, labor organizations, and professional men, and also by the very highest authorities on national and world-wide finance, economics, and legislation. Without burdening the RECORD with the great mass of material which I have accumulated, I feel that this House will be glad to have inserted as a part of my remarks a letter from ex-Vice President of the United States Thomas R. Marshall; a letter from the Hon. Claude Kitchin, for long years a great national figure, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives during the Wilson administration, now the minority leader of this House, highly esteemed and much loved as he is by Democrats and Republicans alike; a letter from Roger W. Babson, president of Babson's Statistical Organization, Wellesley Hills, Mass., whose statistical work in the field of economics and whose analyses of business cycles are so well known and so important as to be found in most of the great business houses, banks, trust companies, and financial organizations throughout the country and also in the smaller ones which can afford them; a letter from the American Chamber of Commerce in Berlin, Germany; and a letter from William T. Foster, director of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, who sends with his letter his carefully worked out views on the subject, which I will incorporate in these remarks immediately following his letter. The communications mentioned follow in their order:

FRANKFORT, IND., August 9, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GOLDSBOROUGH: I am so glad that you have introduced a bill to stabilize the purchasing power of money. I wish I could be present at the hearing, but it will be impossible for me to do so. Don't let this matter drop or stop with a perfunctory hearing, because this is a thing that is going to come to pass, and you will be a very proud man to know that you had the honor of taking the initial step in the House of Representatives.

Cordially yours,

THOS. R. MARSHALL.

OFFICE OF MINORITY LEADER,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., August 4, 1922.

MY DEAR GOLDSBOROUGH: I thank you for sending me your excellent speech, which I read with unusual interest. It was admirably conceived and logically and clearly put. I congratulate you. I made no mistake when I championed your candidacy for membership on the Banking and Currency Committee and am glad I withdrew in your favor our North Carolina candidate. I want you to be as watchful and diligent as possible on that committee. On every measure from the committee I suggest that you make a speech, however short, explaining and analyzing the bill. When the Democrats get control of the House we will have much important legislation before that committee. I want you to go right to the front with respect to the bills before it. Your power of analysis and clearness of expression, together with your practical experience, will justify your taking a leading part and becoming a most valuable and useful member.

Trust you have had a most restful and pleasant vacation and that no opposition in the primaries has or will arise. Your splendid record in Congress, together with the esteem and confidence of the membership of the House in you, should certainly prevent any such opposition.

With warm esteem, your friend,

CLAUDE KITCHIN.

P. S.: Am thankful to say that I will soon be back to my "old self" in good shape.

C. K.

REPORTS OF FUNDAMENTAL BUSINESS CONDITIONS FOR MERCHANTS, BANKERS, AND INVESTORS

WELLESLEY HILLS, MASS., August 4, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GOLDSBOROUGH: I understand from our correspondence that a hearing is to be held on your bill for stabilizing the dollar toward the end of August. I hope to be present and to make a statement in person, but whether I shall be able or not I want to tell you how glad I am that you have brought forward this proposal. If you can convince Congress of the grave need of this legislation at this time, you will have accomplished one of the greatest tasks ever set before statesmen. If you do not succeed in your first attempt, I hope you will keep everlastingly at it. Depend upon it, some day the dollar will be stabilized.

It is the growing consciousness of the need of stabilization which has led not only to Professor Fisher's plan, which your bill embodies, but to the less-worked-out plans of Edison, Ford, Senator Ladd, etc.

Business men and bankers have expressed alarm over some of these proposals on the ground that they may produce inflation. Any proposal, the effect of which would be inflationistic, ought to be nipped in the bud. What we want is something to prevent both, and that is the object and effect of the bill which you have introduced. The common idea that we must on principle oppose any plan to change our currency system is simply sitting on the safety valve. If something is not done to give us a scientific and stable currency, some unscientific and unstable currency will be enacted. The only way to head off instability is to make greater stability. The conservative man who is afraid of a change ought to support your bill, because our present system changes our monetary standard every year. This constant change in the purchasing power of our dollar is the greatest foe of conservative business. It makes a speculation of everything. For years I have been studying the business cycle and trying to help the business man by foresight to struggle through the cycle. But I have repeatedly said in my speeches and writings on this subject that until we had the Fisher plan or some equivalent for stabilizing the dollar the business man would always be suffering from the business cycle. The trolley companies, which were at one time so prosperous, were literally ruined by the depreciation of our dollar. I have made a special investigation of this. I could give instance after instance of the evils which come from a changing yardstick in commerce.

As ex-Vice President Marshall has said, next to the peace problem the problem of stabilizing the dollar is of the greatest importance.

I have studied Professor Fisher's plan from time to time with great care, and the objections which have been alleged against it. As I have often said, only those who do not understand it oppose it.

Let me add that my audiences of business men all over the country, when they have had the idea explained to them, like it immensely.

The Congress which stabilizes the dollar will deserve and receive the everlasting gratitude of the business world.

With the most earnest wishes for your success, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

ROGER W. BABSON.

AMERICAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN GERMANY,
Berlin, July 19, 1922.

To the Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for sending me a copy of your speech on the stabilizing of the purchasing power of money. I read it through with great interest and found many ideas in it that were entirely novel, and I find many of my friends appreciate them as keenly as I.

Under separate cover I have taken the liberty to send you our publication. If at any time we can be of service to you will you please feel at liberty to call on us.

Thanking you again, I remain,

Very truly yours,

THE AMERICAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN GERMANY,
ARTHUR E. DUNNING, Executive Secretary.

NEWTON 58, MASS., July 31, 1922.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been greatly interested in your speech of May 23 on the problem of stable money. I am glad to note that there is to be a hearing on your bill. At the request of Prof. Irving Fisher, I send you the inclosed statement of my views on this problem.

With best wishes, faithfully,

WILLIAM T. FOSTER,
Director, Pollak Foundation for Economic Research.

THE DOMINANT NEED OF BUSINESS: A STANDARD OF VALUE

(By William T. Foster, director of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research)

Before the World War, a carpenter in Vienna loaned 3,000 Austrian gold crowns, the savings of a lifetime, the equivalent of a full year's wages. After the war the debtor returned to the carpenter in full legal settlement 3,000 depreciated paper crowns, the wages of three days' labor. Still further to illustrate the mockery of money as "a standard of value," Joseph Szebenyei tells of a traveler in a second-class restaurant in Vienna who offered the waiter a $20 gold piece in payment for a dinner bill of 300 kronen. The bewildered waiter, after examining the treasure with curiosity and delight, went to the proprietor and said:

"Here is a gentleman, sir, who wants to pay with a $20 gold piece. How much am I to give for it?"

Having received instructions from the landlord concerning current rates of exchange, the waiter returned to the guest and said, seriously, "I am to give you as much change, sir, as you desire."

This story illustrates how far short money can come of being a standard of value or a standard of deferred payments. No matter how much value the monetary "standard" may measure at any one time, it may soon measure no value at all. On the other hand, we have not heard of a customer, even in Austria, asking how many yards of silk he could buy for a gold coin and receiving the answer, "I am to give you, sir, as many yards as you desire." The yardstick is a standard—that is to say, a virtually invariable unit—money is not. So zealously is the yardstick guarded against fluctuation in length that the visitor in Washington who wishes to observe the standard yard of alloy in the glass case in which it is kept at uniform temperature must view it through a telescope lest the heat of his body might change the length of the bar one ten-thousandth part of an inch. How ridiculous it would seem to substitute for this standard yard the waist measurement of the President of the United States. How the unit would have shrunk, as Professor Fisher, remarks, upon the inauguration of Mr. Wilson. Yet at one time the "yard" actually did vary with the girths of the chieftains, and the monetary "standards" of the world still do vary far beyond the physiological ranges even of the fat lady and the living skeleton at the circus. That is why, since 1914, the use of index numbers of prices to measure the shifting values of monetary units has spread rapidly, though nobody has needed an index number to keep track of the length of the yardstick. It is a true standard; money is not.

For one purpose only is money a standard. As long as the gold basis is adequate the power of money to purchase gold does not change; and this is an advantage to dentists and goldsmiths. They know precisely what weight and fineness of gold their dollars will buy year in and year out. The rest of us are equally protected; we have reason to feel complete confidence that our "good United States dollars" in any form will continue to be a standard of purchasing power in terms of gold, but not in terms of anything else. Unfortunately for us, it is almost always something else that we want to purchase.

It is often said that the chief difference between a money economy and a barter economy is due to the introduction of something whose value varies but little. "Money," says Prof. Alfred Marshall, "tends to steady the market." With the statement that money introduces into the processes of exchange a commodity whose value might be made virtually constant, many would agree; others would not agree. The fact is, however, that monetary units never have measured purchasing power with a constancy approaching that of our units for measuring space or temperature or force. Since the World War began money "standards" have been chaotic rather than constant. Whatever money might have done, if otherwise administered, it has in fact frequently unsteadied the markets of the world. The folly of thinking of money as a standard should be widely proclaimed until we succeed in making it a standard.

Paper money, when it is not actually and freely convertible into something which is regarded as valuable, is ridiculously far from being a standard of value. The history of every country teaches this lesson with painful iteration. During the war of the American colonies for independence the irredeemable continental issues fell off in purchasing power until the phrase "not worth a continental" passed current as the money would not. Early in the nineteenth century Spain issued paper pesetos until they had depreciated 96 per cent, although the Government still declared them to be legal tender. During the same period Austria printed so many florins that eight of them would not buy a single silver florin. In the Argentine, in 1840, fiat money was issued in such quantities that it took thirty-two times as many paper pesos as formerly to buy an ounce of silver. During the Civil War in the United States irredeemable "greenbacks" were issued until, in 1865, according to the index number of wholesale prices, it took $219 to buy what $100 would buy in 1860. In Uruguay, in 1875, paper money increased in volume until the premium on gold ran as high as 875 per cent. Following the Satsuma insurrection, Japan issued inconvertible government notes until the total circulation was more than 100,000,000 yen, and the premium on silver was 79 per cent. In spite of these lessons of history many European countries during the World War and after plunged into veritable debauches of irredeemable paper money.

In England money fell to about one-third of its pre-war purchasing power. In France it fell further; in Italy, still further; while in Germany the mark fell below one-seventieth of its pre-war exchange value. In Austria, where paper money poured forth from the printing presses until it cost more to print a krone than a krone would buy, the thrifty proprietor of Kronen Bier used paper money for labels in order to reduce his printing bill. It remained for Russia to say the last word concerning irredeemable paper money as a standard of value. Lenin and Trotski pursued the policy of fiat money to its logical conclusion. As a result, a Russian 1-ruble note, which was worth about 33 cents on the pre-war gold basis, is not worth a peasant's notice on no basis at all. It takes more of these notes than his pockets will hold to buy a copper cent's worth of bread.

Ridiculous as it is to call money a standard which is based on nothing but the fiat of a government, it is equally ridiculous to call money a standard merely because it is based on land or public credit. A ship is not held in place when it is made fast to another ship, which is itself drifting. If land or public credit were the basis of money, the value of the basis in terms of dollars would itself increase with the depreciation of the dollar and thus provide eventually for issues of paper money as boundless as Russian rubles. Equally futile is the attempt to stabilize the purchasing power of monetary units by having them "represent" energy units, or labor hours, or production capacity, or merely anticipated output of wheat, or fertilizers, or anything else. Unless by "represent" we mean actual and free convertibility into a commodity having the characteristics of gold, representative money is inevitably unstable money.

All this now appears obvious to most people. Not so obvious is the fact that money is not necessarily a standard even when it is convertible into gold. Yet the recent experience of the United States, to cite none of the other numerous examples, proves that the "gold standard" itself is not a standard; that paper money may be on a genuine gold basis—that is to say, actually and freely convertible into gold at a fixed parity up to the limits of the demand for conversion—and yet be unstable in purchasing power. So far does the gold basis fail to make money a standard of value or a standard for deferred payments that the United States dollar of 1920 was worth not more than 38 per cent of the dollar of 1913. In other words, the wholesale price level increased during those years about 165 per cent. Even in time of peace the fact that paper money is convertible into gold does not make it a standard. Before the war various commodities were freer than dollars from fluctuation in exchange value. A depositor who wished to protect his savings against any variation whatever in exchange value could have achieved this purpose most nearly, it appears, by taking his dollars out of the savings bank and investing them in carpets. Carpets came nearer than dollars to being a standard for measuring purchasing power in the sense in which the yardstick is a standard for measuring carpets. From 1873 to 1896 money appreciated in gold-standard countries about one-quarter; from 1896 to 1914, on the other hand, money depreciated about one-third. In short, whether in time of war or in time of peace, the so-called gold dollar has proved unreliable in exactly the same way, though not to the same extent, as the inconvertible paper dollar.

A gold basis evidently does not necessarily stabilize the purchasing power of the superstructure of paper certificates and bank credit. But is not gold itself stable in value? Would it not be possible, therefore, to have a stable dollar if all money were either actual gold coins or paper certificates backed by 100 per cent of gold reserves? Far from it, for gold itself is unstable. In point of fact, as Jevons long ago demonstrated by means of index numbers of prices, the value of gold has varied greatly from time to time. During the 20 years preceding 1809 gold prices doubled, which is the same as saying that the value of gold was reduced 50 per cent. During the next 40 years the situation was reversed; the value of gold doubled and prices were cut in two. Then followed a period of rising prices up to 1873, during which the purchasing power of gold was reduced one-third. Since 1873 these up-and-down movements have continued.

Nevertheless in gold-standard countries at the present time gold is often regarded as the standard of value. The generally accepted idea is that the value of gold determines the purchasing power of the paper money that is based on gold reserves. On the contrary, the purchasing power of the gold is determined by the value of the paper money and all the other money, of which the gold is a small part. If it were not for the use in the United States of paper money and bank credit based on gold reserve, the gold dollar might now be 5,000 per cent higher in purchasing power. In that case $1 would buy a bicycle, but it would take a laborer more than two weeks to earn the dollar. In short, although the value of gold has always varied widely, its value in gold-standard countries has not fluctuated as widely during the past few decades as it would have fluctuated had gold been the only medium of exchange. Some of our present-day critics of the Federal reserve system and of the bank credit and paper money that it supports quite overlook the fact that our dollar comes very much nearer to stability than would have been possible had every dollar been made of a fixed quantity of gold.

The value of gold, like that of any other commodity, is affected by changes in supply and demand. The supply of gold may be increased suddenly by the discovery of new mines or new processes; it may be increased a thousand fold by the invention of methods of making gold out of baser metals or extracting it from the sea—achievements that are no more chimerical than the phonograph. The demand for gold, on the other hand, even if gold were the only medium of exchange, might be changed at any time by changes in the amount hoarded, in population, in fashions, in the use of substitutes for gold in the arts, and above all by changes in the volume of commercial transactions. In short, even if gold were the only medium for exchange, neither the demand for gold nor the supply of gold would naturally fluctuate in any known or predictable relation to fluctuations in the work which money is called upon to perform. Therefore, gold itself would fluctuate in purchasing power.

We must conclude that everyday thinking concerning economics would be relieved of one of its many confusions if our unstable monetary units were not again referred to as standards of value. In connection with our personal affairs—investments, insurance, family budgets, and daily purchases—even those who regard these remarks as commonplace do not consistently take into account shifting price levels. In business enterprises as well, men who are perfectly aware that prices are changing nevertheless frequently fall into economic error because they disregard the full effects of changing prices. Looking upon their book profits as though dollars were standards of value and prices were stable, they joyously expand their operations, and they commit themselves to future payments in money, merely to find to their dismay that their profits are only in depreciated goods, while their debts are legally payable only in appreciated dollars. Optimistically relying on money as a standard measure of foreign trade, a leading financial journal assured us early in 1921 that "exports from the United States to Germany in the fiscal year which ends with June, 1921, will be of greater value, measured in good American dollars, than in any year in the history of our trade relations." "Good American dollars" are good for what? When we answer that question correctly we find that exports to Germany in the year in question were really less than they had been for 20 years. The false conception of money as a standard of value has obscured its actual effects on the economic order.

INFLATION AND DEFLATION

Much current controversy is due not to conflicting ideas but to conflicting uses of the same word. This is true of the monetary term inflation. When a nation has too much money it is said to have inflation. That is about as near as we can come to an accepted definition of the term. As to what constitutes having too much money there is no agreement. Most commonly, however, inflation is defined as a quantity of currency or bank credit, or both, in excess of "the legitimate requirements of business." So far so good, but what are the legitimate requirements of business? The answers to this question are many and varied; they agree for the most part only in being hazy.

Such phrases as "the requirements of commerce," "trade needs," "the financial demands of industry," and "enough money to do business with," while appearing to be quantitatively exact, are in reality far from it. As they are used in everyday discussions of monetary problems these phrases merely add confusion to subjects that are already confusing. Prices and volume of money are definite factors, subject to approximately exact measurement; but what is the measure of "trade needs"? No definite measure whatever is used in connection with most of our current discussions of money. Yet it is possible to define inflation and the financial needs of business with quantitative precision.

If we are right in the contention that the chief monetary need of business is a stable price level, our interest in the volume of money centers around its effect on the price level. After all, most people care nothing about fluctuations in the supply of money until something startling happens to prices. If the world had experienced extraordinary expansions of currency only in connection with equally extraordinary trade revivals, accompanied by no extraordinary rise in prices, it is safe to say that monetary discussions would have found no use for the term "inflation." It seems best, therefore, to define inflation with reference to changing price levels.

If we use the term "inflation" to denote any condition of money that permits a rise in the general price level, we confine ourselves to a definite and logical use of the term and one which directs attention at once to the practical problem with which business is chiefly concerned. Similarly, we may well define deflation as any condition of money which permits a fall in the general price level. Fruitless controversies are thus avoided over the question what is normal and the question whether, with a given volume of money at a given time, we have inflation or deflation, or neither. We do not now speak of normal and abnormal degrees of fever. Any rise at all in the temperature of the human body above 98⅗° is fever. On this point we do not argue or even ask the opinions of doctors; we read the thermometer. If we adopted an equally definite use of the term "inflation," we should not consult economic doctors concerning the condition of money; we should read the index numbers of prices. If we found that the price level was rising—in other words, that the value of the monetary unit was falling—we should know that the currency had been inflated.

THE VICIOUS SPIRAL OF INFLATION

Inflation leads naturally to further inflation. Once the upward movement of prices has started, there are at present no forces in the ordinary operations of business and finance sufficient to correct the fault. If the volume of money is freely "responsive to the needs of business," it is responsive to the needs of inflation. When prices are rising, no matter what the causes may be, prices tend to rise still higher. Higher prices lead to higher wages; higher wages lead to still higher prices. Higher dollar valuations of products are used as bases for larger bank loans; larger bank loans put more money into circulation and thus provide buyers with the means of further bidding up prices. In Germany, for example, following the World War the danger of continued inflation decreased the value of the mark in foreign trade; this increased the real burden of the reparation payments; this, in turn, led the Government to call upon the Reichsbank for new loans, which caused still further depreciation of the mark. All this stimulated further speculation, which decreased the amount of money available for other uses, and thus led to new demands for new issues of currency, which led to higher prices, which incited the people to demand larger doles, which increased the Government budgets and forced upon those in power the recurrent alternative of printing more marks or being thrown out of office. Thus, wherever the volume of money is not regulated in the interests of a stable price level, the vicious spiral of inflation carries a nation on to a crisis.

Furthermore, inflation of the currency thrusts the financial burdens of a nation most disastrously upon people who are least able to bear them, on those with fixed incomes—clerks, teachers, some groups of wage earners, and all people with small salaries, and on widows and orphans dependent on pensions or insurance annuities or savings-bank accounts. Meantime some holders of goods and some speculators in the exchanges make vast fortunes out of the sufferings of others. In a remarkably sound and penetrating series of papers published in 1791, Peiatiah Webster describes the results of the contemporary inflation: "If it saved the State," he says, "it also polluted the equity of our laws; turned them into engines of oppression and wrong; corrupted the justice of our public administration; destroyed the fortunes of thousands who had most confidence in it; enervated the trade, husbandry, and manufactures of the country; and went far to destroy the morality of our people." In short, governments, by means of excessive issues of paper money or forced loans from the banks, destroy the standards which they themselves have set up, and thus deliberately repudiate large parts of their own debts. Inflation of the currency is, in fact, national, official repudiation of fundamental principles of justice.

DISASTROUS EFFECTS OF UNSTABLE MONEY

Shifting price levels are disastrous morally, socially, economically.

Unstable monetary units are morally injurious, because they are unjust. As a matter of justice, the dollars returned in payment for a loan should be the same as the dollars borrowed—the same in the only quality that matters, their purchasing power. Dollars are not standards of deferred payments unless their command over the general range of commodities remains virtually the same, year in and year out. When their purchasing power changes, either the debtor or the creditor loses more than justice demands. Our Austrian carpenter loaned his full year's wages and received in full payment the wages of three days. Thus does unstable money make a mockery of thrift. In gold-standard countries the injustice differs in degree, but not in kind.

Because shifting price levels provide these opportunities to get something for nothing, inflation does the moral damage of encouraging extravagance and wild speculation while it discourages thrift and honest labor. In describing the degenerating influences of one period of inflation, Andrew D. White says: "In city centers came a quick growth of stock jobbers and speculators, and these set a debasing fashion in business which spread to the remotest parts of the country. Then, too, as values became more and more uncertain there was no longer any more motive for care or economy, but every motive for immediate expenditure and present enjoyment. So came upon the Nation the obliteration of the idea of thrift. Luxury, senseless and extravagant, set in, and this, too, spread as a fashion. To feed it, there came cheating in the Nation at large and corruption among officials and persons holding trusts; and while the men set such fashions in business, private and official, women set fashions of extravagance in dress and living that added to the incentives to corruption. Faith in moral considerations, or even in good impulses, yielded to general distrust. National honor was thought a fiction cherished only by enthusiasts. Patriotism was eaten out by cynicism." It is impossible to tell, merely from reading this account, whether it was written to describe the condition of France during the "Mississippi bubble" orgy of speculation in the early eighteenth century, or the similar troubles of Austria in the early nineteenth century, or the reckless expansion of the continental currency in the United States during the Revolution, or conditions in central Europe in 1922, or—what the passage was written to describe—the experience of France during the revolution with the infamous paper assignats.

Travelers on the Continent now find business men, professional men, and even laboring men, "exchange mad"; gambling seems to be their main occupation. This moral breakdown is only in small part, if at all, the necessary aftermath of war; it is, however, the inevitable result of vast inflation. It is sure to come, to some extent, with any degree of inflation. On the other hand, the alternative of financing a nation by depreciating the currency is the rigorous moral exercise of abstinence, economy, and hard work. There have been many futile attempts to make people moral by government regulation, but no government has had the courage to make full use of the most effective methods at its disposal. Nothing within the power of the State would do so much for public morality as stable money.

INFLATION AND SOCIAL UNREST

Inflation leads to social unrest, for whatever is morally wrong is socially intolerable. Whenever certain groups, through no virtue of their own, are prospering, while other groups, through no fault of their own, are suffering there is cause for protest against the established economic order. The protests are directed anywhere except in the right directions, for few people understand where their troubles begin. Meantime, their troubles are real and their resentment is righteous.

Following inflation profits inevitably rise faster than wages and rising profits inevitably incite a rising spirit of revolt. Workers everywhere are more likely to be content with low wages when business is bad than with high wages when business is good. No wages whatever, no matter how far above the amount carefully figured by labor leaders or by economists as required "to keep a typical family of five in health and comfort," will be satisfactory as long as workers believe that the conditions of the business warrant higher wages. As the profits of war industries increased in England laborers demanded "a fair share of the increase." They had no means of knowing what a fair share would be, nor did they much care. It seemed to them that employers were making all they could make; there seemed nothing to do but follow the example And as money profits were really piling up, employers put up wages rather than run any risk of strikes. The increased pay roll was promptly provided by the increased prices of the products. The consumers of these products paid the bill. Wherever the employers had war contracts on a cost-plus commission basis they had no objection to higher wages; the higher the wages the higher the profits. In such cases the consumers were all the people, and all the people paid in taxes, direct and indirect, both the wages and the profits. Thus inflation led to the high cost of living and to widespread discontent. Says the French proverb, "After the printing press, the guillotine."

As wages rose in the United States during the war, wage earners went into the markets with the expectation of buying more goods than they had been accustomed to buy with their old wages, for they were still more or less attached to the idea of money as a standard of value. They thought that, with more dollars than they had ever dreamed of getting, they ought somehow to be better off than ever before; yet they felt that they were not as well off. And they were not. They said that the level of the river does not and can not change; it seems useless to seek their aid in the adoption of flood-prevention measures. Meantime, their refusal to face the facts and their failure to devise safe and practicable remedial measures make it easy for Mr. Ford and Mr. Edison, and innumerable other equally misguided though less distinguished reformers, to arouse popular enthusiasm for measures that would merely lead us from monetary confusion to monetary chaos.

INFLATION IS ECONOMICALLY DISASTROUS

In the stress of a nation's need, inflation deceives the people generally, and often the government itself, by making it seem easier than it really is to obtain the sinews of war—or the after-war sinews of bonus payments. On a boundless expanse of paper currency any loan whatever can be floated to-day and a larger one to-morrow. It is "easy money." The trouble does not begin until the Government tries to exchange the money for something useful—and the trouble does not end until the easy money is offset by hard work. If the process of raising a war loan doubles prices, the Government finds when it spends the money that it can obtain only half the needed cannons and shells. The dollars themselves do not go to the front. Meantime, no pressure has been brought to bear upon the people to produce more and to consume less. On the contrary, as we have already seen, inflation promotes extravagance in consumption, and, as we shall now see, it also promotes inefficiency in production.

Inflation, it is true, increases profits, and profits stimulate industry; but the stimulus falls like the gentle rain from heaven on the just and the unjust—the producers who hinder as well as those who aid the winning of the war and the winning of the peace that follows. Furthermore, the stimulus is only temporary. Although rising profits at first increase production, they also increase a kind of social unrest that soon interferes with production. The object of Government financing during the war was necessarily to obtain more goods, and more goods were obtained as long as increased bank credit enabled employers to put idle people and idle machinery to work. The country soon reached the point, however, where it was employing virtually every man and every woman who was able and willing to work. After that, employees could add to their own staffs only by taking laborers away from other employers. At this point competition among employers for workers inevitably resulted in higher wages and, consequently, in new demands on the banks for increased working capital. But bank credit created for the purpose of enabling somebody to take workers or orders away from somebody else did not increase production. There was no gain in the efficiency of the workers; on the contrary, the workers, already incensed over "war profiteering," had less incentive to efficiency than ever, since they knew that if they lost one job they had only to go across the street to find another job. Moreover, the unusually high profits led to careless business methods; and excess-profits taxes led to further extravagance, prompted by the thought that a large part of what might be saved would be taken by the Government in taxes. The net results of inflation—of thus placing new purchasing power on the markets without a corresponding increase in production—were a further rise in prices, followed by further inflation, followed by further economic inefficiency.

Morally, socially, and economically the dominant monetary need is a unit of exchange that is a true standard of value.

In the face of all these facts, obvious as they seem, we find leaders in the world of commerce and finance still insisting that the American gold dollar is a satisfactory standard, stable in purchasing power. In the editorial columns of the Commercial and Financial Chronicle appears this eulogy: "To-day this dollar, in the confusion of finances, the disorder of so-called 'exchanges,' the debasement of foreign currencies, stands alone, unchanged, and unchanging. Because it exemplifies the gold standard in itself it is stable. Why or how has its 'purchasing power' diminished? This is a supreme fallacy; it has not. It stands out above the carping critics who would make it a shifting thing. Around it whirled a fateful war, and it stood fast. But only because back of the American dollar is the gold dollar and back of the gold dollar is the gold standard—and that though 'tried' is not found wanting." In another editorial we read that "the gold standard as a standard does not change at all" and the American dollar is the "sole and chief representative of stability in the monetary world of to-day." Thus is expressed that unreasoned faith in the stability of the gold standard which has become a cardinal point in the creed of many business men and which prompts them hastily to reject without due consideration all proposals for stabilizing price levels, the worthy along with the unworthy. Such men obstruct economic progress. If people who are being carried away by a flood still insist again and again that they should be glad to return to their pre-war wages and pre-war prices. They believed that somehow they were being fooled. They condemned employers, shareholders, "profiteers," "Wall Street," the Federal reserve system; in short, they condemned everybody who seemed to be profiteering by the war, while they themselves seemed to be losing.

As wages were put up in "essential" war industries, they had to go up eventually in virtually all other industries. The substantial increases in the pay of munition makers in England, like the increases in the pay of metal workers, shipbuilders, and railroad men in the United States, unsettled the economic order. Ordinary and accepted relations between the wages of various groups of workers were upset. Unrest followed. As soon as the increased wages of munition workers were charged up to other workers in higher prices and higher taxes the other workers demanded the wherewithal to pay the higher bills. But before they received their new wages the bills were higher still. So they demanded further increases. These increases promptly went into costs, and prices continued to rise. For wages as a whole it was an uphill struggle to overtake prices, which had started up the hill first and seemed to keep the lead without even a struggle. Thus the vicious spiral of inflation is always a vicious cause of injustice, and so of industrial unrest.

Fortifying the Federal Reserve System Against Inflation and Deflation

[Speech of Hon. T. Alan Goldsborough, of Maryland, in the House of Representatives, Saturday, February 17, 1923. The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14270) to amend sections 3, 4, 9, 12, 15, 21, 22, and 25 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act]

Mr. Goldsborough. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee is the result of extended hearings and careful analysis on the part of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and while the bill as presented to the House with committee amendments is the result of much mutual concession within the committee, we believe it is a bill covering the subject which will receive substantially the widest approval of the American people, both in numbers and scope of territory. While the bill changes administrative features of the law, we believe that these are matters which can be adjusted from time to time as public policy dictates. The modifications of the loan limit is a matter which, in my opinion, demands from the House the most serious consideration. Feeling as I do that the committee did as well as it could under all the circumstances, I am in favor of the bill as reported with committee amendments and will now ask the attention of the Committee of the Whole House to a somewhat collateral consideration, which seems to me most important and can well demand the closest consideration by every Member of the National Congress.

On February 1, addressing the Committee of the Whole on the bill from the Banking and Currency Committee limiting expenditures in the construction of Federal reserve bank buildings, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] in referring to the Federal reserve banks, spoke as follows:

"Every time the banks show an excess amount of earnings they should be compelled to reduce the rediscount rate so as to keep their earnings in reason and thereby give to the borrowing public of the country an opportunity to get money at cheaper rates than they have been able to get it."

As a matter of fact, Federal reserve banks are only allowed to retain 6 per cent of their earnings for themselves, the remainder going back to the people through the Federal Treasury; but the point I wish to make is that the immoderate use of the rediscount facilities of the Federal reserve system is the thing which has caused the speculation, the inflation, the deflation, the economic unrest, the drop in the price of farm products, and the general suffering of the last few years.

Due to the increase in the gold supply from the gold discovered in Alaska, in the Klondike, and South Africa our bulk of money and available credit expanded from 1896 until 1914, and the primary purpose of the Federal reserve act was not to make available more credit but to prevent the contraction of credit and the artificial causing of depression and panics by large financial interests. The Federal reserve act legislation was passed, of course, at exactly the right time, because without its machinery we could never have financed the war, and the public and private burden of debt is, of course, too great to justify our going back to the old system, even if it were desirable for any reason, but there is grave danger of the primary function of the Federal reserve system being lost sight of and of its being made the means of a most unwholesome credit situation.

There are inserted in this speech as a part of it certain figures which can easily be verified and which I believe can be profitably studied by every Member of Congress and which are as follows:

Summary table

[In thousands of dollars on June 30. Annual index numbers, 1913=100]

Years	Money in circulation	Individual deposits in all commercial banks	Physical production	Wholesale prices
1917	$3,873,997,000	$21,867,219,000	120.7	177
1918	4,367,045,000	23,386,377,000	118.0	194
1920	5,380,853,000	32,496,718,000	118.7	226
1922	4,375,556,000	31,414,812,000	112.3	149

Total stock of money and gold in the United States, total money and gold in circulation

[In thousands of dollars]

	Total stock of money	Gold stock	Total money in circulation	Gold in circulation [1]
June 30—
1914	$3,738,599,000	$1,890,657,000	[2]	[2]
1917	5,408,549,000	3,019,147,000	$3,873,997,000	$1,615,413,000
1918	6,741,532,000	3,075,789,000	4,367,045,000	990,718,000
1920	7,887,182,000	2,687,513,000	5,380,853,000	675,545,000
1922	8,178,602,000	3,785,521,000	4,375,556,000	590,468,000

[1] Amounts held outside the U. S. Treasury and the Federal reserve banks.
[2] Comparable data not available.

Loans and discounts, investments, and individual deposits of all reporting banks in the United States, except mutual savings banks

[In thousands of dollars]

	Number of banks	Loans and discounts	Bonds, stocks, and other securities	Individual deposits
June—
1914	26,131	$13,164,435,000	$3,729,448,000	$14,602,107,000
1917	27,301	18,225,827,000	5,872,132,000	21,867,219,000
1918	28,255	20,199,859,000	7,567,831,000	23,386,377,000
1920	29,519	28,664,668,000	8,671,243,000	32,496,718,000
1922 [1]	29,770	24,859,018,000	9,540,274,000	31,414,812,000

[1] Preliminary figures.

Total cash reserves and excess reserves ("free gold") of the Federal reserve banks and ratio of cash reserves of Federal reserve banks to individual deposits of all commercial banks in the United States

[In thousands of dollars]

Period	Cash reserves of Federal reserve banks	Free gold of Federal reserve banks [1]	Reserve percentage	Per cent of cash reserves of Federal reserve banks to individual deposits of all commercial banks
June—
1917	$1,334,352,000	$689,221,000	75.4	6.1
1918	2,006,199,000	781,876,000	61.7	8.6
1920	2,103,284,000	250,965,000	43.4	6.47
1922	3,144,542,000	1,624,192,000	77.9	10.0

[1] Amount held by Federal reserve banks in excess of required reserves.

Prices and production

Period	Annual average prices	Physical volume of production
		Industrial	Agricultural	Combined
1913	100	100	100	100
1917	177	121.2	120.0	120.7
1918	194	117.8	118.3	118.0
1920	226	114.0	124.4	118.7
1922 (year)	149	106.5	119.4	112.3
Fourth quarter	155	121.8	[1] 119.4	120.7

[1] Figure for year 1922.

I am only going to refer to a very few of them at this time. In 1914 the reporting banks of this country had loans and discounts aggregating $13,164,435,000. They owned bonds, stocks, and other securities amounting to $3,729,448,000. In 1922 the figures were: Loans and discounts, $24,859,018,000; stocks, bonds, and other securities, $9,540,274,000; whereas the physical volume of production was only 12.3 per cent greater in 1922 than in 1914. We find the wholesale price index for 1922, 49 per cent higher than in 1914, and it has since gone up about 13 per cent. We find Federal reserve notes in circulation as of February 14 amounting to $2,243,603,000 and the reserve at 75 per cent.

There are various bills in the process of enactment through the Congress, the merit of any one of which I am not here and now discussing either favorably or unfavorably, which, if enacted into legislation, frankly contemplate immense additional credit structures, all to be ultimately supported by the Federal reserve system. If the present resources of the reserve system are allowed to be fully extended with our present immense supply of gold, the general price level of 1920, 126 per cent higher than the price level of 1914, will be exceeded, and this is exactly what will happen within the next four years unless there is some Federal legislation to stabilize the purchasing power of money. The Federal Reserve Board can not control the situation. The power of the Federal Reserve Board is defined by subsection D of section 14 of the Federal reserve act, which subsection gives to the Federal Reserve Board the final authority over rediscount rates to be charged by the Federal reserve banks—

"which shall be fixed with a view of accommodating commerce and business and which, subject to the approval, review, and determination of the Federal Reserve Board, may be graduated or progressed on the basis of the amount of the advances and discount accommodations extended by the Federal reserve bank to the borrowing bank."

Under this section no board would have the hardihood nor, in my judgment, the legal right to interpret this section so as to regulate rediscount rates with a view to perpetuating substantial stability in the general price level, and the very least, it seems to me, that the Congress should do would be to amend subsection D by placing the word "agriculture" before the word "commerce," and, after the word "business," add the words "with a view of moderating fluctuations in the general price level." If some affirmative authority of this kind is not given the board it must ultimately give way to clamor for credit, first from one source and then another, and culminate in a situation worse than the collapse of 1921 and 1922.

My friends, few of us realize the awful possibilities for good or evil of a colossal credit structure like the Federal reserve system. Credit beyond the legitimate needs of business expansion breeds inflation in general price levels; inflation in general price levels appears to justify another margin for credit; when further credit is extended the inflation in general price levels which follows furnishes a new basis for credit until the whole structure falls in on itself.

This system must be supported by some sort of legislation to stabilize the purchasing power of money. The House Committee on Banking and Currency have just completed some very interesting hearings on a bill introduced for the purpose of securing this very stability. It is not my purpose here and now to discuss the merits of that bill, but I believe that every Member of Congress upon a reading of the hearings will be convinced of the necessity of prompt legislation which will place our immense credit structure under such measure of control as to prevent inflation and its consequent following period of speculation, deflation, and collapse, so that we will have a democracy indeed in finance, where every man, be he farmer, business man, banker, or laboring man, can have the credit he needs in order to carry on and to extend the scope of his usefulness in a conservative and wise manner as well for himself as for the public at large; but where, also, the machinery of credit will be so adjusted as to sound its own warning when a period of healthy expansion is being passed and a period of overproduction and speculation being reached.

What the farmer buys is costing him now around 76 per cent more than it did in 1914, whereas the price of what he had to sell during his selling period in 1922 was less than in 1914, although now the price level of farm products has risen to about 25 per cent more than it was in 1914. Stabilization of the general price level will very rapidly bring the price of farm products up to a point of yielding a wholesome and satisfactory profit, but another period of inflation and collapse will only increase the burden of debt under which the farmer is struggling. As for the man or woman with the average income, and the wage earner, a period of inflation, during which the dollars they receive will constantly buy less and less, is a period of acute suffering and a grave type of economic and social evil. Let us act now before the lessons of the last three years are entirely forgotten.

Stabilization of Money

[Speech of Hon. T. Alan Goldsborough, of Maryland, delivered before the Maryland State Banking Association (printed in the Congressional Record by the request of Hon. Eugene Black, of Texas, Monday, June 2, 1924)]

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Maryland State Bankers' Association, in the course of these remarks I hope you will not be forced to feel about me as a woman felt who met a friend she had not seen for several years and who said to her:

"Your husband does not knock you about as he used to, eh?"

"No, sir," the woman answered.

"I am mighty glad to hear it. After all, his heart is in the right place."

"Oh, yes, sir; his heart's in the right place, and the rest of his body, too. He is in jail."

I trust also you will not be as careful to show this feeling as was Mrs. Maloney when she was brought before the magistrate for an assault on Policeman Casey. She had been unusually attentive throughout the proceedings, and now the judge was summing up the evidence.

"The evidence shows, Mrs. Maloney," he began, "that you threw a stone at Policeman Casey."

"It shows more than that, your honor," interrupted Mrs. Maloney, "it shows that Oi hit him."

When I was asked to address this distinguished body of representative Marylanders the question naturally arose as to what I could say which would be of interest and possibly of some service. Years ago in Caroline County, when I was a boy, we had only one bank, and the offering of a promissory note to that institution for discount was done with the humility proper in the asking of a great favor, while the board of directors in discounting that note, which, by the way, had to be protected by indorsements representing many times the amount asked for, deported themselves as if they were a charitable organization bestowing from their own individual resources largess to the benighted multitude. This is no longer the condition. With 10 banks in the county, each bidding for business, the danger now, in so far as there is danger, is toward too great laxity in loaning the funds of these banks. What has happened in Caroline County is typical of what has happened in the other counties of Maryland and in Baltimore City, is typical of what has happened in all the older communities through the length and breadth of the United States, and is typical of that spirit of democracy which is the result of a vastly increased average intelligence, enlightenment, and education, and which, in its spread not only throughout our own great people but the people of the world, is so great a part of the hope of the future.

It is extremely difficult to segregate basic human necessities and single out any given one or two as of paramount importance, but, based not only upon preconceived notion but upon what I believe has been a patient investigation, I have reached the conclusion that there are at least two fundamental human problems that our people are now prepared to consider and solve—the abolition of war and the stabilization of money. It is of this last I would speak.

My grandfather was a country doctor, and in 1885, as a very small boy, I began to drive with him constantly, except when I was in school. In those days the farmer had no hours; the farmer's wife had no hours. They worked from the time they could see in the morning until daylight down at night, and as a class they were always poor. This fact was driven home to me, because time and again when it was necessary for the family doctor to make some sort of a collection in order to live he found that after the interest and bonus on the bill of sale had been paid and the interest and part of the principal on the fertilizer note and the taxes and insurance attended to there was nothing left for the doctor; and a great many times, instead of making a collection, he "lightened his wallet" to him who was less well off than he. I wondered about this condition. I tried to think why it was that these people whose work was never done were always poor. Afterwards, with a broadening view, I wondered why it was that the average of those with things to sell were at such a great disadvantage relatively with those who had money to sell. About the time I graduated from college in 1899 I noticed a change. Those with things to sell had gradually begun to prosper and those with money to sell gradually began to do not so well, and finally I reached the conclusion that from my earliest recollection until near the beginning of the century the investor and the man with a fixed income appeared to be always in a gradually better position, while the small business man, and especially the producer—having in mind the farmer—was constantly going back; and that since the beginning of the century and up to 1914 the position was exactly reversed, although the farmer, for other reasons, has always occupied a relatively unfavorable position. Finally, it appeared to me that various social phenomena had resulted and were resulting from these varying conditions. The gradual fall in prices from 1873 to 1896 culminated in the Bryan free-silver campaign, which, if successful, would have resulted and was intended to result in the paying of debts with cheap money; that is, in the partial repudiation of obligations.

In the period from 1896 to 1914 we heard no more about free silver, but a wave of unrest began to spread among those with a fixed income; the clerk, the school-teacher, the salaried man of every class began to feel with ever-increasing pressure the gradual rise in the cost of living. Labor unions were formed, strikes became common, radical legislation of all sorts was offered in Congress; some of it was passed. We began to hear of capital as distinguished from labor and labor as distinguished from capital, as if our people occupied two armed camps, each battling against the other. And then the World War came on. Providentially, just prior to that time the Federal reserve act was passed, which increased potential credit many times. We have seen the period of inflation in 1919 and 1920 with general commodity prices rising to about two and one-fourth times what they were in 1914; and then the collapse of the latter part of 1921 and 1922, and the conservative, careful period of 1923.

What does it all mean, and is there any solution after we find out what it all means? When I went to Congress in 1921 with some opportunity to investigate these things which I had been wondering about for so long, I began to mull around, and one day in the Bureau of Labor Statistics I was shown a curve of prices based on the bureau's index number, and as I ran my finger along the line of falling prices from 1873 to 1896 and of rising prices from 1896 to 1914 I began to see why it was that the first period was one of prosperity for the man of fixed income, the mortgagee, and the bondholder, and why the last period was one of relative prosperity for the producer, the business man, and the stockholder, each period causing social misunderstanding, unrest, and misery to that part of our people not on the right side of the price trend. Now, there was a reason, of course, for these long periods of rising and falling prices, and remembering that we were on a gold basis it then occurred to me that gold began to be produced in South Africa and the Klondike just about 1896. By this time it seemed there was a little light just ahead and that the foundation of our changing economic conditions had been either a scarcity or a plentitude of gold. And now, what is the answer?

Careful economists tell us that there is a constant equation between the volume of production and its turnover and the volume of money and credits and their turnover (of course, I am speaking roughly), so that in order to preserve their relative positions of debtor and creditor, mortgagor and mortgagee, bondholder and stockholder, seller of goods and seller of money a means should be devised to preserve this ratio so that the volume of money and credit will expand only in the same proportion as production and turnover expands and contracts as production and turnover subsides. In the March number of Harper's Magazine there is an article entitled "Stabilizing the Dollar," which analyzes this subject in every satisfactory way and which, incidentally, speaks favorably of certain legislation now pending in Congress and introduced by me. I mention this fact as indicating two things: First, that the stabilization of purchasing power is becoming a matter of public interest; and second, that I am discussing a question in the solution of which I am attempting to assist in a practical way. In the Bureau of Labor Statistics in Washington there is kept an index number of wholesale price levels made up of a composite of something over 400 commodities, each weighed in accordance with what experience has shown to be its relative market importance. The standard from which conclusions are now drawn is the average price level of 1914. The present price level relative to 1914 is about 161. The legislation referred to and now pending in Congress contemplates starting with the general price level at the time when the proposed legislation becomes law and afterwards maintain approximately that price level by means which I will indicate in a few moments. In the meantime I want to make it perfectly clear, of course, that there is no attempt in this legislation to control the price level of individual commodities. They will move in accordance with the law of supply and demand, but the purpose is to keep the average the same, so that the value of money in an aggregate of the general commodities which it will buy will not appreciably change. In other words, while flour and eggs and butter and chickens and meat and sugar and coffee will individually vary in price, the filled market basket made up of these different commodities can always be purchased with the same amount of money. And right here let me say that when the general price level is kept constant, when there is an automatic restraint against inflation and its consequent deflation and collapse, the tendency of individual prices to change will be immeasurably reduced, because the unhealthy economic conditions, the result of these abnormal periods, is the chief cause of the sudden rise and collapse of the price of any given commodity.

How can we keep this index number constant? How can we prevent periods of inflation succeeding periods of business expansion, culminating in periods of speculation and ending in periods of collapse? The quantity theory of money has been recognized as essentially sound by practically all economists for more than a century. Illustrating by reducing the theory to its simplest form, if the total volume of commodities consists of 20 bushels of wheat and wheat is only traded in by the use of money, and the total volume of money is $20, as long as all that wheat is being traded in and all that money is in circulation wheat will be worth $1 a bushel. If, under the same conditions, there are $40 in circulation, wheat will be worth $2 a bushel; if, with 20 bushels of wheat and $20 in money $10 of that money is withheld from circulation and all other conditions are as stated in the first previous illustration, wheat will be worth 50 cents a bushel; if, on the other hand, one-half of that wheat is being withheld from the market and there is only a turnover in 10 bushels of the wheat, other conditions remaining, as in the first illustration, wheat will be worth $2 a bushel. Or expressed in the generalization mentioned heretofore in these remarks, there is a constant ratio between the volume of production and turnover and the volume of money and credits and their circulation. So that if your index number of general price levels remains constant, you are assured that your volume of money and credits are expanding only in proportion as production and turnover expands—that is, only in proportion to the legitimate needs of business—and you can be assured that when you restrain the rise of the index number you are restraining credits beyond the legitimate necessities of business, you are restraining unhealthy and abnormal production, and you are restraining business expansion within wholesome limits and stopping in its inception overproduction, waste, speculation, and collapse.

The basis of our monetary system is gold; our entire credit structure is based on gold. Now, let's assume that all the gold is withdrawn from circulation, gold certificates being substituted; and let's assume that we start with a reserve of $1,000,000 in gold at the present number of grains of pure gold in the dollar, and that the index number goes up 1 per cent, indicating that our money and credit structure is expanding more rapidly than our production and turnover. If we then increase the theoretical gold content in a dollar by 1 per cent, we have reduced our gold reserve from $1,000,000 to $990,000 and the possibilities of our credit structure by 1 per cent, which in turn tends to reestablish the normal ratio between production and turnover on one side and money and credit in circulation on the other.

Without going into the details of the proposed legislation, the above illustrations will serve to indicate its theory. Now, the question arises, is such legislation possible at this time? The law requires us to maintain our gold reserves at 40 per cent. We now have about 82 per cent, and in order to make this plan feasible without unduly weighting the dollar it will be necessary to legislate for a required gold reserve of about 70. It is, therefore, difficult to have passed such legislation at this time, but in the various discussions concerning stabilization caused by this proposed legislation various alternatives have been suggested, such as a legislative direction by Congress to the Federal Reserve Board to have raised rediscount rates in the Federal reserve banks when the index number is rising and reduce them when the index number is falling and in that way tend on the one hand to discourage unhealthy expansion and on the other hand to make money easy when business is not so good and thus tend to stimulate it. Another proposal is legislation requiring the Federal Reserve Board to have the reserve banks put securities on the market and thus tend to draw money from active circulation when the index number is rising and to buy them up and thus put money in circulation for business when the idex number is falling.

In considering the necessity of legislation let us go over for a minute what happened in 1923. At that time the mental attitude of the country regarding economic conditions was the attitude of a people who had just been through a period of unhealthy inflation and drastic and stupefying deflation and corresponded to the way people feel about a war just after the war is over. We would never have wars if people kept in the same frame of mind they are in just after one is over. In 1923 we were cautious, not because we are habitually wise enough to be cautious, but because and only because we had just had our lesson. Various banks in their monthly letters during 1923 gave reminders of the disasters of 1920; the monthly letters of the National City Bank of New York, for example, one of the most widely read of economic bulletins, in January advised business men to operate with caution. In February it remarked that business men "are following conservative policies and showing little inclination to become extended, which is the part of wisdom in present conditions." In March it warned its readers that every upward movement is in danger of running away. In April it again called attention to the danger of inflation. "The industries of the country," it declared, "are already working practically at capacity or to the limit of the labor supply. Under this condition they can not use more credit to advantage."

These warnings are typical of the state of mind of bankers in the early months of 1923. In February and March, 1923, the reserve banks of New York, Boston, and San Francisco raised their rediscount rates. Due in part to this action interest rates of commercial banks rose in February and again in March, rates on call loans on 60 to 90 day paper and on 4 to 6 month paper being all higher in March than in any month of the previous year. Raising of money rates was followed promptly by curbing of the upward movement of prices and overproduction. Not so generally understood is the fact that the open-market operations of the Federal reserve banks in the first half of 1923 tended to curb the involuntary movement, and in the second half of the year tended to sustain business on its new level. Early in January the Federal reserve banks held open-market acceptances and United States securities to the value of $734,000,000. These they reduced steadily throughout the period of incipient business boom. By July the total holdings were less than $300,000,000. Between October 17 and the end of the year, however, the holdings increased from about three hundred million to four hundred and seventy-three million dollars.

Thus the open-market operations took money out of general circulation at a time when, according to our indices, money in circulation was increasing faster than the volume of trade, and later in the year, when these same guides began to point in the other direction, the open-market operations put more money into circulation. We were cautious in 1923, because we had had a recent lesson. We will be less cautious as time goes by, and in a very short time when credit begins to be demanded all over the country for developments of all sorts the Federal Reserve Board, without express legislative authority, will not be able to restrain a period of inflation greater, probably, than any we have ever known. In 1920, with our gold reserve down to 43.4 per cent, the index number was 226, or two and one-fourth times higher than in 1914. In 1922, with a reserve percentage of 77.9, the index number fell to 149. With the present reserve percentage of 82 per cent, the index number of wholesale prices is about 160, so that a determined demand for credit based on our gold reserve could pull our reserve percentage down to 45, probably, before it could be stopped. The index number would rise to around 300, which would mean prices higher than this country has ever seen and which would result in an economic collapse greater than that of 1921 and 1922. This problem, my friends, is on the very verge of being solved, but we can't wait too long. As I said before, human memory is short. Unless our obligations as a world power and a leader of civilization are fulfilled shortly, the gradual abolition of war never can be achieved until the lessons of the next war direct the human mind to the solution of the problem, and unless we have promptly some legislation looking to real scientific monetary stability, it will be too late until the next so-called business cycle has left in its wake its dreadful toll of economic waste, misery, and human despair.

I, personally, am an optimist. When I compare conditions now with what they were 30 years ago, I see tillage where there was swamp; I find sewers taking the place of unhealthy, insanitary conditions; I find the people willing to spend thousands of dollars a year to build roads to lighten the human burden and to draw the city, the town, and the country ever closer together; I find the body of the child taken care of in a manner undreamed of 30 years ago, and I see a public endeavor to surround with the beneficence of education every class from the highest to the lowest; and if you and I live out the normal span of our lives I have no doubt whatever that we will look back and wonder why we were ever short-sighted enough to allow a condition of constantly changing money value to exist without making the necessary changes in our system. A problem like the one we are discussing to-day is a problem of democracy, a democracy which is one in fact and not one in name only; a democracy which demands that that which one has accumulated by his industry and his endeavor shall not be taken away from him because of a fall in the value of the medium of exchange, and that the results of human toil shall not be dissipated and the toiler left in his despair because of an increase in the value of the medium of exchange.

In the course of some litigation several years ago a certain prominent manufacturer said during his cross-examination that he knew nothing of history and didn't recognize the value of such knowledge. This was either an ill-considered statement or else was the result of the kind of practical success along a given line which creates in some minds the obsession that they are blessed with all wisdom, an obsession which interferes with the process of reflection.

In an address delivered at the University of Michigan in April, 1911, on the study of ancient literature, the Hon. James Bryce, then ambassador to this country from Great Britain, had this to say concerning the study of history:

"We can conjecture the future only from what we know of the past; that is to say, from what we know of human nature and the processes by which it and human institutions change. One who knows only his own country and people does not really know them because it is only by knowing something of other countries and their peoples that he can tell which characteristics of his own people are normal, generally present in all peoples, and which are peculiar to his own. So likewise he who knows only his own time does not really know it, for he can not distinguish between characteristics that are transient and those that are permanent. This is the main use of history besides, of course, the pleasure which all knowledge gives. To know what we are, we must know how we came to be what we are, and must realize that we shall before long pass into something different."

The lessons of history teach of the cycle, inevitable under our present monetary system—expansion, inflation, speculation, collapse, slow recovery. Stabilization, restraining expansion at the point of overproduction and consequent inflation, is not only an economic problem the solution of which people are ready to undertake but is clearly a direct problem of civilization involving self-restraint and mental and spiritual elevation.

The great body of bankers, representing as they do much of the best thought of our communities, are bound to be conservative in the sense that they shrink from political nostrums and fundamentally unsound economic proposals, but pure conservatism is alike offensive to them, as it means stagnation and a refusal to note the march of civilization.

In the language of Edward G. Ryan, the great Wisconsin lawyer and judge:

"Pure conservatism is always wrong; civilization is never fixed. No Joshua has power to stay the course of the human mind. Change is the necessity of human history, progress the duty of the human race. Pure conservatism has no place in the annals of mankind. It concedes the past, but denies the future. It worships the actual, but anathematizes the possible. Its creed is the present because it is the present. It is the bigot of the present, without sympathy with the past or prophecy of the future. Content where it finds itself, pure conservatism sits down by the wayside, while the march of civilization passes by and presses on to the promised land of the future, guided on its dark way by faith in the destiny of man as by a pillar of fire."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired. All time has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas, 289, nays 60, not voting 82, as follows:

[Roll No. 60]

YEAS—289

Adkins	Dies	Kennedy	Rayburn
Allen	Disney	Kerr	Reid, Ill.
Allgood	Dominick	Ketcham	Reilly
Almon	Doughton	Kinzer	Rich
Amlie	Dowell	Kniffin	Robinson
Andresen	Doxey	Kopp	Rogers, N. H.
Andrews, N. Y.	Driver	Kunz	Romjue
Arentz	Elizey	Kvale	Sanders, N. Y.
Arnold	Englebright	LaGuardia	Sanders, Tex.
Auf der Heide	Erk	Lambertson	Sandlin
Ayres	Eslick	Lambeth	Schafer
Bachmann	Evans, Mont.	Lamneck	Schneider
Baldrige	Fernandez	Lanham	Schuetz
Bankhead	Finley	Lankford, Ga.	Selvig
Barbour	Fish	Lankford, Va.	Shallenberger
Barton	Fishburne	Larsen	Shannon
Beam	Fitzpatrick	Leavitt	Shott
Beedy	Flannagan	Lewis	Shreve
Bland	Foss	Lichtenwalner	Simmons
Blanton	Frear	Linthicum	Sinclair
Bloom	French	Lonergan	Smith, Idaho
Boehne	Fulbright	Loofbourow	Smith, Va.
Bohn	Fuller	Lovette	Smith, W. Va.
Boileau	Fulmer	Lozier	Snow
Boland	Garrett	Luce	Somers, N. Y.
Bowman	Gasque	McClintock, Ohio	Sparks
Brand, Ga.	Gifford	McCormack	Spence
Briggs	Gilbert	McGugin	Steagall
Browning	Gilchrist	McKeown	Stevenson
Brumm	Glover	McLeod	Stewart
Buchanan	Goldsborough	McMillan	Strong, Kans.
Buckbee	Granfield	McReynolds	Strong, Pa.
Bulwinkle	Green	McSwain	Summers, Wash.
Burch	Greenwood	Maas	Sumners, Tex.
Burtness	Gregory	Major	Sutphin
Busby	Griffin	Maloney	Swank
Butler	Guyer	Manlove	Swanson
Byrns	Haines	Mansfield	Sweeney
Cable	Hall, Miss.	Martin, Oreg.	Swick
Campbell, Iowa	Hall, N. Dak.	May	Swing
Campbell, Pa.	Hancock, N. Y.	Mead	Tarver
Cannon	Hardy	Michener	Taylor, Colo.
Carden	Hare	Miller	Taylor, Tenn.
Carter, Calif.	Harlan	Milligan	Temple
Carter, Wyo.	Hart	Mitchell	Thomason
Cartwright	Hartley	Mobley	Thurston
Cary	Hastings	Montague	Tierney
Cavicchia	Haugen	Montet	Timberlake
Chavez	Hawley	Moore, Ky.	Turpin
Chiperfield	Hill, Ala.	Morehead	Underwood
Christgau	Hill, Wash.	Mouser	Vinson, Ga.
Christopherson	Hoch	Nelson, Mo.	Vinson, Ky.
Clague	Hogg, W. Va.	Niedringhaus	Warren
Cochran, Mo.	Holaday	Nolan	Weaver
Cole, Iowa	Hooper	Norton, Nebr.	Welch, Calif.
Collins	Hope	Norton, N. J.	West
Colton	Hopkins	O'Connor	Whitley
Condon	Horr	Oliver, Ala.	Whittington
Connery	Houston, Del.	Overton	Williams, Mo.
Cooper, Ohio	Howard	Parker, Ga.	Williamson
Cooper, Tenn.	Hull, Morton D.	Parks	Wilson
Cox	Jacobsen	Parsons	Wingo
Crail	James	Patman	Withrow
Crisp	Johnson, Mo.	Peavey	Wolcott
Cross	Johnson, Okla.	Person	Wolverton
Crosser	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pettengill	Wood, Ga.
Crump	Johnson, Tex.	Polk	Woodruff
Dallinger	Jones	Pou	Woodrum
Davis	Kading	Ragon	Wright
Delaney	Karch	Rainey	Yon
De Priest	Keller	Ramseyer
DeRouen	Kelly, Ill.	Ramspeck
Dickinson	Kemp	Rankin

NAYS—60

Aldrich	Chindblom	Davenport	Hadley
Andrew, Mass.	Clancy	Douglas, Ariz.	Hess
Bacharach	Clarke, N. Y.	Dyer	Huddleston
Beck	Coyle	Eaton, Colo.	Johnson, Wash.
Bolton	Crowther	Free	Kahn
Britten	Culkin	Gibson	Kendall
Burdick	Darrow	Goss	Kurtz

Lehlbach	Partridge	Stalker	Watson
McFadden	Pittenger	Stokes	Weeks
McLaughlin	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Taber	Welsh, Pa.
Magrady	Ransley	Thatcher	White
Mapes	Reed, N. Y.	Tilson	Wigglesworth
Martin, Mass.	Seger	Tinkham	Williams, Tex.
Nelson, Me.	Snell	Treadway	Wyant
Parker, N. Y.	Stafford	Wason	Yates

NOT VOTING—82

Abernethy	Dickstein	Hollister	Oliver, N. Y.
Bacon	Dieterich	Holmes	Owen
Black	Douglass, Mass.	Hornor	Palmisano
Boylan	Doutrich	Hull, William E.	Patterson
Brand, Ohio	Drane	Igoe	Perkins
Brunner	Drewry	Jeffers	Prall
Canfield	Eaton, N. J.	Jenkins	Pratt, Ruth
Carley	Estep	Johnson, Ill.	Purnell
Celler	Evans, Calif.	Kelly, Pa.	Rogers, Mass.
Chapman	Fiesinger	Kleberg	Rudd
Chase	Freeman	Knutson	Sabath
Clark, N. C.	Gambrill	Larrabee	Seiberling
Cochran, Pa.	Garber	Lea	Sirovich
Cole, Md.	Gavagan	Lindsay	Sullivan, N. Y.
Collier	Gillen	Ludlow	Sullivan, Pa.
Connolly	Golder	McClintic, Okla.	Tucker
Cooke	Goodwin	McDuffie	Underhill
Corning	Griswold	Millard	Wolfenden
Crowe	Hall, Ill.	Moore, Ohio	Wood, Ind.
Cullen	Hancock, N. C.	Murphy
Curry	Hogg, Ind.	Nelson, Wis.

So two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Gavagan with Mr. Wood of Indiana.
Mr. Drewry with Mr. Connolly.
Mr. Griswold with Mr. Rogers.
Mrs. Owen with Mr. Estep.
Mr. Cullen with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Millard.
Mr. Black with Mr. Hollister.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Perkins.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Underhill.
Mr. Dieterich with Mrs. Ruth Pratt.
Mr. Prall with Mr. Bacon.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Wolfenden.
Mr. Rudd with Mr. Evans of California.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Goodwin.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Jenkins.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Golder.
Mr. Patterson with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Sullivan of New York with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Lindsay with Mr. Eaton of New Jersey.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Holmes.
Mr. Brunner with Mr. Sieberling.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Cochran of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Boylan with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. McDuffie with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Clark of North Carolina with Mr. Curry.
Mr. Oliver of New York with Mr. Knutson.
Mr. Celler with Mr. Moore of Ohio.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Doutrich.
Mr. Fiesinger with Mr. Brand of Ohio.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. William E. Hull.
Mr. Dickstein with Mr. Nelson of Wisconsin.
Mr. McClintic of Oklahoma with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Cooke.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hall of Illinois.
Mr. Douglass of Massachusetts with Mr. Garber.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Palmisano.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Sirovich.
Mr. Hancock of North Carolina with Mr Carley.
Mr. Cole of Maryland with Mr. Collier.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I was called from the Chamber. If I had been present I would have voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye," but I was not present when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—STABILIZING THE PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, for a long time I have been an advocate of the stabilization of money so as to prevent the disastrous fluctuations in commodity values. The present lack of stabilization has been particularly disastrous to agriculture. The great bulk of the indebtedness of the farm community was incurred at a time when commodity values were twice or three times as high as they are now. That means that for every dollar of indebtedness the farmer has to pay twice or three times as much of what he produces as the money represented at the time it was borrowed.

The bill before the House (H. R. 11499) reads as follows:

"SEC. 31. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency."

SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

SEC. 3. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

The only trouble with this resolution from my point of view is that it does not go far enough. I believe that the value of the dollar should be definitely fixed upon the average value of commodity prices as found by the index number of the Bureau of Labor statistics during the period of 1921 to 1929, inclusive. Our best economists are agreed that this can be done without in any way destroying either the gold standard or the stability of our currency. Such a policy enacted into law would not only stabilize the debt-paying and purchasing value of commodities but would go a long way in stabilizing the earning power of labor and would prevent the shocking fluctuations in security values that have characterized this market in the last two years.

In my judgment, it is the one great step that must eventually be taken if we are to prevent recurring periods of inflation and succeeding periods of deflation. Such stabilization of the value of money would also have the additional merit of practically putting an end to speculation and gambling upon boards of trade and would in large measure prevent the huge losses that have brought poverty and distress to thousands of people throughout the country.

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I believe the bill (H. R. 11499) for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar is one of the most important pieces of legislation that has hitherto come up for consideration in the House during the present session of Congress.

I concede that we felt the same way about the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and Glass-Steagall Credit Expansion Acts. While the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has failed to measure up to expectations, it has undoubtedly proved beneficial. It has greatly curtailed bank closures and enabled the railroads to continue in operation. But it has not afforded ample credit facilities for constructive purposes generally.

In consequence, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has neither put our vast army of unemployed to work nor set the wheels of industry and commerce in motion. Instead of percolating down to agriculture and labor, as they were intended to do, the benefits have percolated down to the banks and stopped, and are now revolving around in a fixed circle.

Notwithstanding the speed with which the Glass-Steagall credit expansion bill was hustled through Congress, the Federal reserve system has not yet invoked its provisions. As a consequence, credit is more constricted and money is scarcer and dearer than when this bill was passed. Besides, commodity price levels are at an exceedingly low ebb. To offset this condition, the enactment of supplemental legislation was imperative. This is embraced in the bill for stabilizing the purchasing power of the dollar, which bears the indorsement of some of our foremost economists and agricultural and industrial leaders throughout the country.

Let us analyze this measure briefly.

It is a simple declaration of policy, namely, that the purchasing power of the dollar during the period of 1921–1929, as indicated by the commodity index of the Department of Labor, be restored and maintained through control of the volume of credit and currency. That is all there is to it. There is nothing radical about it.

Administration of this act is delegated to the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve bank, and the Secretary of the Treasury. Under the provisions of the act the Federal reserve system is not only empowered to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar, but to maintain its stability. In my judgment, there is no question but that this can be done without endangering the financial structure of the Nation, because the Federal reserve system has the requisite machinery for controlling credit and currency expansion. Nor is there any question in my mind but that the restoration and maintenance of commodity price levels as directed by this measure would improve the economic situation. On the other hand, if the Federal reserve system fails to administer the provisions of this act, as requested by Congress, and the economic situation is not remedied, then the onus will be placed on our financial leaders; and besides, it will be necessary for Congress to bring about stabilization of the purchasing power of the dollar by means of mandatory legislation.

It is absolutely essential to the economic well-being of the country that our monetary system should serve all the people instead of a favored few. We must have an honest and a stable dollar, not an elastic dollar that periodically fluctuates to the extent that it imposes financial ruin on a great majority of the people, as is the case under the present system. During the last 50 years the United States has gone through more than half a dozen major depressions. We hardly pull ourselves out of one panic until we find ourselves gripped in the clutches of another. Our rubber dollar is primarily responsible for the occurrence and recurrence of those vicious economic disturbances.

It is my opinion that we have done a fairly good job of passing remedial legislation thus far, and that our constituents appreciate what we have done; but it yet remains for us to enact the bill H. R. 11499, so as to restore commodity prices to the average level of the period of 1921–1929. Then private debts can be paid with dollars of the same value as when these debts were created. Otherwise wholesale repudiation of these debts is inevitable.

According to an old saying, "You can't get blood out of a turnip." By the same token, you can not collect debts out of people without the requisite wherewithal.

During the last 15 years virtually all debts, both public and private, have practically doubled because of the increased value of money. According to L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange, it requires $177 worth of farm commodities to pay a $100 debt contracted in 1930; or $202 worth to pay a $100 debt created in 1929 and $217 worth to liquidate a $100 debt assumed in 1925. Moreover, the rate of interest has increased proportionately.

The fellow who is in debt and whose debt was contracted when commodity values were considerably higher than now has only three ways to get out, namely, repudiation of his debts, availability of cheaper money with which to pay them, or a boost in the commodity price that will restore it to the level prevailing when the debts were contracted.

It must be admitted that farmers can not pay debts with commodities at the ratio of 5 to 1. Yet this is exactly what the cotton farmer who assumed a debt when cotton was selling at 25 cents a pound is doing now, because five bales of cotton are worth only as much as one bale was worth then.

Consequently, our farmers are in this predicament: Instead of reducing the principal of a debt when they make a payment on it the obligation grows all the while. This condition must be remedied before the farmer can meet his obligations. Of all groups that are suffering from the effects of the prevailing depression, the farmer is suffering most. Unlike the manufacturer, he can not shut up shop and stop production; he must keep on producing in normal volume, while his prices become lower and lower because of surpluses piling up in the face of a vanishing market.

Better times, when they do come, must start on the farm and gradually work up through industry and commerce. And better times can not prevail on the farm until the average commodity price level of the period of 1921–1929 is restored in accordance with the provisions of this measure. Nor is it enough just to patch up our financial machinery sufficiently to meet the present emergency. The dollar should have a stable measure of purchasing power—a real and permanent yardstick of value.

Suppose, for instance, that our measuring yardstick should be 18 inches long one day, 36 inches long the next day, and 72 inches long the next day. Confusion would be rife. Yet that is exactly the kind of dollar we have—a topsy-turvy dollar that is thwarting the best-laid plans of economic recovery.

For the last decade Congress has been considering legislation designed to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar. Most of the opposition has come from our financial leaders and captains of industry, and that leads me to believe this legislation would benefit the rank and file.

I do not believe the United States is on the very verge of bankruptcy when the material worth of the country is estimated at $400,000,000,000. Many a time in the past has the country pulled itself out of the morass of an economic panic, and it will pull itself out of the prevailing depression. But let us stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar, not only to pave the way out of wilderness now but to forestall economic disruptions in the future. I believe the proper administration of bill H. R. 11499 will supplant our rubber dollar with an honest dollar of standard value.

Mr. YON. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, under leave to extend my remarks, will say that I am of the opinion that this Goldsborough stabilization bill to restore and maintain commodity prices, if properly administered, will do more to relieve the present conditions than any legislation that has been passed in many years. The great trouble with the farmers at the present time is that there is not enough to buy their products, and the cotton, cane, turpentine, and other farmers are unable to get production cost for their products. The dollar buys too much of commodities and is too hard to get.

The working people are unable to buy the products because they have no jobs, and the same thing applies to every industry. While in a sense this bill is to meet an emergency—that is needed—it is also the opinion of the author, the Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, that it also contains permanent features. I am sure that we all agree that something needs to be done to relieve the present conditions, and I know of no better plan than this bill, as reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, if put in effect. There is no need of describing the conditions of the country, as every man and woman in this country is acquainted with the depression and the effects that it has brought about. However, I may say that if anyone doubts that something needs to be done to help the people, just go down some night on Pennsylvania Avenue and B Street, this city, and watch the people down there lying on the ground around fires and on the bunks and beds that are furnished by the charitable institutions of this city, and watch them as they march up for something to eat, and you can get an idea of what the people are up against in the great industrial centers of this country. These people previously had good positions and lived happily and were able to buy from the farmers, who in turn could and would buy materials and other much-needed things for the farm.

We on this side of the House are not responsible for the present conditions of this country. We were told in 1928 that the country would continue to have prosperity under the Republican rule, as all of the prosperity that the country had enjoyed was under the leadership of that party. And this is one of the reasons that I was opposed to their plan of turning out thousands of Federal employees and cutting off their salaries to such an extent that they would not be able to live and educate their children, and further serving greedy private interests that want to take advantage of the situation to cut the wages of their employees, and also admitting that this depression is permanent. This I do not believe, and I do not want the Congress of the United States by its action to destroy the hopes of the millions of people. This is false economy and not real economy. There are many ways that the National Government can relieve the people of tax burdens. For instance, the building program of Washington could be stopped at this time, and many other things that could be mentioned, but unnecessary here.

However, on the Democratic side we should be anxious to do something that will restore confidence and bring back that prosperity that we have heard so much talk about. With the many bills that we have passed and this bill to stabilize commodity prices, then I believe that we are on the right track at last with the cooperation of the people of this Nation for that new day that will find all of our people employed and doing business as they did prior to 1928.

ALLOWANCES FOR WIDOWS AND CHILDREN AND DEPENDENT PARENTS OF WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8578) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, by providing allowances for widows and children and dependent parents of veterans of the World War, with an amendment striking out subsection (d) on page 2, lines 16 to 20, inclusive.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 201 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 472), be hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subdivision to read as follows:

"(8) Where any honorably discharged ex-service man who entered the service prior to November 11, 1918, and served 90 days or more during the World War dies of a disability not acquired in the service the following monthly allowances shall be paid:

"(a) If the deceased leaves a widow without means of support other than her daily labor and actual net income not exceeding $250 per year who was his wife and living with him not less than five years next before his death or who married him prior to January 1, 1925, $20;

"(b) If the deceased leaves a widow and one child without means of support other than her daily labor and actual net income not exceeding $400 per year, $26, with $6 for each additional child;

"(c) If the deceased leaves no widow but one child, $20, with $6 for each additional child: Provided, That no child shall be permitted to draw this allowance who has an actual net income exceeding $400 per year;

"(d) The payment of allowance for a widow shall continue until her death or remarriage;

"(e) The payment of allowance to or for a child shall continue until such child reaches the age of 16 years or marries, or if such child be permanently incapable of self-support by reason of mental or physical defect, then during such incapacity.

"(f) Whenever the allowance payable to or for the benefit of any person under the provisions of this subdivision is terminated by the happening of the contingency upon which it is limited, the allowance thereafter for the remaining beneficiary or beneficiaries, if any, shall be the amount which would have been payable to them if they had been the sole original beneficiaries;

"(g) As between the widow and the children not in her custody and as between children, the amount of allowance shall be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulations;

"(h) No allowance under this subdivision shall commence prior to the date of the passage of this amendatory act, or the date of application therefor, and such application shall be in such form as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from South Dakota for 20 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment which was offered was to strike from the bill the dependent parents. That is very much against my wishes and against my views, but we found it necessary to do that in order to secure the passage of any bill at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I do not yield. The gentleman has plenty of time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I just wanted to ask the gentleman why that was necessary?

Mr. RANKIN. It was necessary because we were unable to get the bill from the Rules Committee or to get it to the floor of the House at all.

There are some other provisions in the bill for which I am not responsible. They are what are called the "needs clauses." They were not put in by me or by those who agree with me on the committee, but they are there. Therefore the bill, if it is passed at all, will be passed with those provisions in it.

In 1930, when we were considering what was finally designated as the Rankin bill, it provided for an extension of the presumptive period for men suffering from chronic constitutional diseases, up to 1930. If that bill had not been vetoed, the widows, orphans, and dependent parents would all have been taken care of, but in order to defeat that bill they brought in what they called the disability allowance bill, and passed it under suspension of the rules, providing a small compensation for the disabled men, but leaving out the widows, orphans, and dependent parents. It is the only bill of its kind I have ever known to pass a parliamentary body, which took care of disabled veterans and denied one particle of relief to their dependent widows and children, after the veterans passed away.

I introduced the next week a resolution in our State convention of the American Legion and fought it through the national convention of the American Legion to take care of those dependents.

This bill is indorsed by the American Legion, by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and by the Disabled Veterans of the World War. They do not agree with some of the minor provisions, such as the needs clauses, but on the whole they are in favor of this bill and have indorsed it at their national convention.

I do not know what opposition has developed, but I do say that a great many of those men died from service-connected disabilities in my State and in your States, and their widows and orphans should have been taken care of long ago. They are entitled to it. I trust when it comes to a vote there will not be one dissenting voice.

I know it will be said that this will cost a little money, and I know that will be harped on, but is that any reason why we should turn out without a penny the widows and orphans of those men who were called to the service in 1917 and who rendered services from which, invariably, they ultimately lost their lives and left their wives and children without a penny on which to live during these trying days of the worst panic America has ever seen? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLANTON). The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi, especially his statement that it was necessary to bring this measure before the House under suspension of the rules. I can so well recall as the years have gone by since 1924 when, as chairman of the Veterans' Committee, I brought many bills before the House under suspension of the rules, and I can hear the gentleman from Mississippi rear and rant and race up and down this aisle because of the iniquitous procedure; and as late as June 26, 1930, when I brought in the bill to which he refers, the disability allowance law, with one of his arms working in one direction and one in the other, and hair flying, he said:

Your action in bringing this bill in here and forcing it through in this manner, without giving us any opportunity to amend it, is one of the most outrageous abuses of legislative prerogatives ever indulged in by the party in power in the history of the American Congress.

We shall not oppose it. We expect to let it go through in order that when it gets over to the Senate, where the gag rules do not apply, they will amend it by inserting provisions which will take care of these unfortunate men who served their country in times of war and are now unable to defend themselves in times of peace. [Applause.]

To that statement on June 26, 1930, he received great applause from the same people who to-day have swallowed this gag.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I decline to yield, because I have only 20 minutes. That is not very much time, and I can not commence to express myself as to what I think about this gag rule. I know that it is the only manner in which we can pass a great deal of this legislation. Of course it is, and I know it is—this bill would not have been passed without it—but I get everlastingly tired of the demagogues who get up on the floor of this House and protest against it all the time, day after day, year after year, and then come in and invoke it. This business about reforming the rules by the Democrats is bunk, and nothing else but bunk. Here now is a gag rule.

Why, the distinguished gentleman who is presiding as Speaker pro tempore said, when I brought the disability allowance law up at that time:

> All other relief measures coming before this House since the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation was created have been called up under a suspension of the rules, where only 20 minutes to the side was allowed for debate, and where none of the voluminous and important provisions could be changed in the slightest particular. These former bills thus passed have been machine made. They have been mostly prepared by hard-boiled bureau chiefs. Not even ranking members of the committee, much less any of the other 434 Members of the House, could change one word of the bills.

The gentleman who is taking the place of the Speaker to-day and is invoking this gag rule made that statement. I say that this House has almost degenerated into what a very, very eminent Democrat said the other day, a Democrat who is one of the great men of this country. He said the trouble with the Democrats is that they have the opposition complex, and they have it so bad they can not be constructive. Of course, I knew that that was true. Then he said:

> Another thing—having that opposition complex, they indulge in political demagogy, and that degenerates into political hypocrisy.

And I knew that that was true.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No. The gentleman can get time from his own leader, if you have any leaders on that side.

I have not seen one for some little time, and I doubt if any will develop. [Laughter.] But, coming to this bill, it ought not to have been brought up at this time, because ultimately we must decide all the need of veterans and their wives. This bill provides that a perfectly sound, healthy woman of 20 or 23 years old, without children, perfectly able to work, will get a pension when people are going to be discharged from Government employment, including service men who have suffered and bled, service men with families, and service wives. It is absurd and ridiculous to pick out one bill at this particular time and settle that measure, when to-morrow you must vote on the future of the service men themselves. Somewhere there is some political colored man in a woodpile in bringing it up at this time or it would not have been brought up. Again, the bonus question is not settled. I say there is no person who can justify this legislation at this time, when the whole service question must be settled and when it is necessary to practice economy; and if I am the last man that votes for it I will be the last one that does.

You did not take care of widows of Civil War veterans until 25 years after that war. You did not take care of Spanish War widows until 16 years after that war. But you are taking the youngest widows of any war, without children, and paying them $20 a month when the Government is bankrupt. In five years it will take $161,000,000, and you can not laugh that off.

I knew perfectly well it was never the intention of the Democratic majority of this House to work any economy. The only economy they want is what they can not secure. It might be an economy of words, because they do not like to hear the words I am speaking now.

Mr. PARKS. May I ask the gentleman how long his party was in power before it bankrupted the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I do not yield. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I taken?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLANTON). The gentleman has used seven minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting official documents.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman's request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting official documents and records.

Mr. PARKS. I would like to know what the documents are. If they are Republican propaganda, I am going to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. They are bills and reports of a Democratic committee of this House.

Mr. PARKS. When?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. This session.

Mr. PARKS. It must be good if it is a Democratic report, and I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill and report are as follows:

H. R. 7230

A bill granting uniform pensions to widows and children of certain persons who served the United States in time of war, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act if any person who served 90 days or more in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during the World War or war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, or the Civil War, in which the United States was engaged and who has been honorably discharged therefrom or who, having served less than 90 days, died of or was discharged for disability incurred in the service in line of duty, has died or shall hereafter die leaving a widow or a minor child or children under the age of 16 years, such widow upon due proof of her husband's death, without proving his death to be the result of his Army, Navy, or Marine Corps service, and upon proving that she had married such veteran person and had lived continuously with him, except for temporary absences which were not the fault of said widow, for five years prior to his death, or if a child is or was born as the issue of said marriage, regardless of date of marriage, such widow shall be placed upon the pension roll at the rate of $20 per month during her widowhood; if and when she becomes 40 years of age, she shall be placed upon the pension roll at the rate of $30 per month during her widowhood; if and when she becomes 50 years of age, she shall be placed upon the pension roll at the rate of $40 per month during her widowhood; if and when she becomes 70 years of age, she shall be placed upon the pension roll at the rate of $50 per month during her widowhood; and any widow mentioned in this act shall also be paid $6 per month for each and every child of such veteran under 16 years of age, and in case there be no widow or one not entitled to pension under any law granting additional pensions to minor children, the minor child or children under 16 years of age of such veteran person shall be entitled to the pension herein provided for the widow, and in the event of the death or remarriage of the widow or forfeiture of the widow entitled to pension, under the provisions applying to pension laws, the pension shall continue from the date of such death, remarriage, or forfeiture to such child or children of such officer or enlisted man until 16 years of age: Provided, That in case a minor child as herein defined is insane, idiotic, or otherwise mentally or physically helpless, the pension shall continue during the life of such child, or during the period of such disability; and this proviso shall apply to all pensions heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted under this or any former statute.

SEC. 2. That the pension or increase at the rate of pension herein provided for, as to all persons whose names are now on the pension roll, or who are now in receipt of a pension under existing law, shall commence at the rates herein provided on the 4th day of the next month after the approval of this act, except where otherwise herein provided; and as to persons whose names are not now on the pension roll, or who are not now in receipt of a pension under existing law, but who may be entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act, such pensions shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Veterans' Administration after the approval of this act in such form as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; and the issue of a check in payment of a pension for which the execution and submission of a voucher was not required shall constitute payment in the event of the death of the pensioner on or after the last day of the period covered by such check, and it shall not be canceled but shall become an asset of the estate of the deceased pensioner.

SEC. 3. No claim agent, attorney, or other person shall contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting claims for pensions or the increase of pension provided for in this act; and any person who shall, directly or indirectly, otherwise contract for, demand, receive, or retain a fee for service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under this act, or shall wrongfully withhold from the pensioner or claimant the whole or any part of the pension allowed or due to such pensioner or claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall be construed to reduce any pension heretofore granted under existing law.

SEC. 5. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby modified and amended only so far and to the extent as herein specifically provided and stated.

[House Report No. 492, 72d Cong., 1st sess.]

GRANTING UNIFORM PENSIONS TO WIDOWS AND CHILDREN OF CERTAIN PERSONS WHO SERVED THE UNITED STATES IN TIME OF WAR, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. GASQUE, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 7230):

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7230) proposing to grant uniform pensions to widows and children of certain persons who served the United States in time of war, having had the bill under consideration and having heard Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the representatives of the various veterans' organizations, the national officers of the various woman's auxiliaries, and many other persons representing those who would become beneficiaries thereunder, respectfully submit the following report, with the recommendation that the bill H. R. 7230 (star print) do pass.

This bill has many new features and should immediately provide relief for over 290,000 dependent widows and children of veterans of all the wars, including the World War, Spanish War, and the Civil War.

The outstanding new feature of this bill is the fact that it establishes uniformity of pensions paid to widows and children of veterans of all wars.

It treats the widows of all war veterans alike. They will all file their claims under the provisions of the same law and on the same application blank, under the same conditions, and no favoritism will be shown toward any war-time widow. Under the provisions of the bill, as reported by the committee, the widow of the World War veteran and widows of other wars will be entitled to pensions by proving that the veteran is dead, without proving that death was due to service or in any manner connected with service. These pensions will continue to the widow or minor child during widowhood and will be stopped upon remarriage, death, or forfeiture of title for immoral conduct.

If the veteran rendered 90 days' service in any of the wars and was honorably discharged or rendered less than 90 days' service and was discharged for disability due to service in line of duty, this act grants the widow a pension at the rate of $20, $30, $40, and $50 per month. If the widow lived continuously with the veteran, except for a temporary absence of five years prior to veteran's death, or if a child is or was born as the issue of this marriage, regardless of the date of marriage, the widow will receive a pension of $20 per month. When such widow becomes 40 years of age, the rate of pension will be increased to $30 per month, and when such widow becomes 50 years of age, the rate of the pension will be increased to $40 per month, and should she become 70 years of age she will receive $50 per month during her widowhood. This bill further provides for the minor children under 16 years of age.

The widow will receive $6 per month additional for all minor children under 16 years of age, and the widow entitled to pension under this act will receive the $20, $30, $40, or $50 rate plus the $6 per month until such child or children attain the age of 16 years, respectively.

This bill also provides that the pension shall continue during the period of helplessness of such child.

The date of commencement of pension for those already on the pension roll will be on the 4th day of the next month after the approval of this act. All those persons not receiving pensions under the law who are entitled to pensions under this act shall commence upon the date of the filing of application.

Section 3 of this bill provides that no attorney fee for original or increase of pensions will be allowed under the provisions of this act.

Section 4 provides that nothing contained under this act shall be construed to reduce any pensions heretofore granted under the existing law.

Section 5 of the bill provides that all acts or parts of acts in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby modified and amended only so far and to the extent as is herein specifically provided and stated.

The number of beneficiaries under the provisions of this act and the cost of this bill are fully explained by the following chart, which shows the exact number affected and the total cost of the bill for the first year:

	Costs
Civil War dependents (124,781)	$573,917
Spanish War dependents (28,789)	3,586,822
World War dependents (136,558)	19,406,852
Grand total (290,128)	38,567,591

The following chart shows the total number affected each year for a period of five years together with the total cost per year for a period of five years:

World War

Calendar year	Widows		Children		Estimated cost
	Service connected	Nonservice connected	Service connected	Nonservice connected
1932	410	52,466	9,311	74,371	$19,406,852
1933	487	69,043	9,816	97,868	31,642,074
1934	583	87,666	10,056	124,267	40,313,435
1935	700	104,099	10,255	147,561	48,445,042
1936	835	116,807	10,416	165,575	54,981,449
Total to end of 5-year period	835	116,807	10,416	165,575	194,788,852

Widows

Calendar year	Civil War		Spanish War		Total
	Number on roll	Annual increased cost	Number on roll	Annual increased cost	Number on roll	Annual increased cost
1932	124,781	$15,573,917	28,789	$3,586,822	153,570	$19,160,739
1933	114,799	14,328,063	31,668	3,945,516	146,467	18,273,579
1934	105,615	13,181,808	34,835	4,340,093	140,450	17,521,901
1935	97,166	12,127,288	38,319	4,774,164	135,485	16,901,452
1936	89,393	11,157,140	42,151	5,251,593	131,544	16,408,733
Total for 5 years	----------	66,368,216	----------	21,898,188	----------	88,266,404

Grand total

Calendar year—	Widows	Children	Estimated cost
1932	206,446	83,682	$38,567,591
1933	215,997	107,684	49,915,653
1934	228,699	134,323	57,835,336
1935	240,284	157,816	65,346,494
1936	249,186	175,991	71,390,182
Total to end of 5-year period	249,186	175,991	283,055,256

The committee feels that this measure will not only equalize war-time widows' pensions but will save in the administrative costs of adjudicating each claim. Further, it will eliminate piecemeal legislation in the future and will provide a vast saving in many ways.

The Director of the Bureau of the Budget has reported that the proposed legislation is not in accordance with the financial program of the President.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Now I want to call attention to the fact that there is a bill before this House, the Gasque bill, providing for the treatment of all veterans and all widows alike, something that should have been done since the World War, but has not been done.

I can readily see that some provisions of this bill make it necessary for the leadership of this House apparently to bring it in at this time instead of one of the others, because the Gasque bill would take care of Civil War widows, at the same time taking care of World War widows. I would not support the Gasque bill in its entirety, but if some of the rates contained in it were reduced I would. It comes from the Committee on Pensions. It is a bill that has been well worked out, taking into consideration the history of the wars in which the United States was engaged, taking into consideration the fact that men who served in any war and their widows should be treated exactly alike; and if some of its rates were reduced to an extent that it would be possible to enact it, and it would be possible to raise the money for it I would like to support that particular measure. It is a bill where pension is based on age. It would provide that a 72-year-old widow would receive a large pension, but it would not provide what this bill provides, that a 22-year-old widow, who has been married a few years, has no children, and is perfectly sound, would receive a pension.

I am satisfied this bill ought to be killed; that this legislation should be referred back to a combination of the Pension Committee and the Veterans' Committee, or some committee, and a bill reported under which the Government can survive. No legislation should be passed until you act upon the veterans' provision in the economy bill to-morrow.

You should wait and see whether you are going to strike out Title IX; whether you intend to allow men who enlisted in 1921, after the war was over, toreceiveas much as a man who lost his life or his arms at Chateau-Thierry. Tomorrow you are going to determine whether you are going to vote out Title IX, which has that particular provision in it. Thanks to the rule, I will be able to get a record vote on it.

In spite of the talk I am making today I know this bill is going to pass, because this House does not have digestive apparatus enough to stand up against this kind of legislation. It does not have it. There are certain reasons for it. Propaganda has never been as thorough and has never been as strong as it is to-day. I know the pressure is such that we are bound to secure legislation we should not secure. Personally I have voted "no" in the House many times since the days I voted against the war, though the time I voted against the Adamson law and until to-day on this law I have rather enjoyed it, because the question is not whether you vote "yes" or "no" on a bill. The folks back home want to know whether or not you are honest in your vote; all except those individuals who have a direct, selfish, and personal interest in legislation, and they eventually wash themselves out.

I would like to have more time to talk on this bill. I am going to extend my remarks by inserting the Gasque bill and report. I will conclude by calling your attention to the fact that the Democrats who talk about this rule-reform wave have to-day choked down the necks of the Members of the House the same sort of gag rule previously used. I wish to say I am not objecting to it, but I do object to people demagoguing when they do it. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am rather surprised that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] would be opposed to this bill in view of the fact that during the Republican administration he was chairman of the Veterans' Committee. I am more surprised that he would try to make a political issue out of the matter. We all know that he and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], who is now chairman of the Veterans' Committee, have not agreed on many matters of veterans' legislation, but the gentleman from Mississippi has always been found mighty liberal in supporting measures for the World War veterans. It may be, as the gentleman from South Dakota states, that this is a "gag rule," but it is the only way we can get this measure considered at this late hour of the session, and then, too, the Republicans are so used to "gag rules" that we thought there would be no opposition to this procedure. Since I attempted and thought I had succeeded in acting as a go-between, I am amused at the gesture of opposition from the gentleman from South Dakota.

It is true this bill is not just what it should be, as it is a compromise measure. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] was the one who inserted the "needs clause" in this measure, and I went along with him with other members of the committee in order to eliminate the dependent parents' clause insisted upon by the gentleman from Mississippi. Since the gentleman from Mississippi, for the good of the cause, has eliminated the dependent parents' clause, there is no reason why we should not all support this measure.

As a matter of fact, under the economic conditions confronting Congress and the Nation, I am certain that the veterans will not seriously object to this compromise measure containing the "needs clause," as it is only a question of time until there will be a uniform widows' pension bill passed through Congress, such as the Gasque bill for which I am committed. At this time its passage is impossible.

The first pension granted to widows and orphans for those of the Civil War was in 1890, 25 years after the war; this law gave $8 a month to widows and $2 a month to minor children; a similar bill was passed for the Spanish-American War widows 16 years after that war. This needed relief is coming much earlier, being only about 12 years since the actual close of the World War.

I realize that a widow who is entitled to a pension because of the death of her husband, as well as the children, should not be required to file an inventory of her wealth or income, but in these trying times when it is necessary that we should economize, and when it is necessary to take care of the poor widows and orphans in this country, I feel that a compromise measure is in order and that no veteran should have any cause to complain.

All over my district, as well as all over this Nation, there are widows and orphans of deserving World War veterans required to live from hand to mouth, and it is nothing more than justice for this poorer class to be taken care of at this time, even though we are in the midst of a financial panic.

Under the terms of this bill a widow who has more than a net income of $250 a year, besides her labor, is not entitled to this pension. If she has not lived with her husband for five years before his death she is not entitled to a pension; but if the widow had lived with the soldier five years before his death and she does not have a net income of $250 a year other than her daily labor she is entitled to $20 per month and each child is entitled to $6 per month. If the widow married the veteran prior to January 1, 1925, the same benefits are awarded. Under the existing laws all widows and children, and even the dependent fathers and mothers, are entitled to pensions if the veteran died from service-connected disabilities. This law is for the purpose of taking care of the more needy widows and orphans where the veteran died from non-service-connected disabilities.

In my opinion, where a man left his home at a time when he could make much money and entered the service of his country, where he could not and did not make any money and when he gave many months in defense of his country, it is nothing more than right and just that his widow and children should be taken care of rather than they should become a public charge or that they should be required to live upon the most meager sustenance. Certainly any widow who has a net income of less than $250 is in dire need of the necessities of life. It is unpatriotic and poor citizenship, especially in a land of wealth, that would not grant relief in such instances. I would that it were possible for us to eliminate the "needs clause," but expediency and good judgment dictate that we should accept and take the best that we can obtain for these deserving people at this trying time in our Nation's history.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. I am not interested in any political row, but I am interested in the wording of this bill and what the ambiguous language means. Subdivision (a), for instance, states——

Mr. FULLER. I have not the time to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURTNESS. I should think some member of the committee would answer it.

Mr. FULLER. The language of the bill is so plain that any wayfaring man can read it as he runs. If the gentleman can not understand this language, I can not explain it to him in the time allotted me. The language of the bill is just as plain as the letters on a box car, and the language of the report and the bill is not susceptible to any controversy. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes all I may say is that there are some things in the bill which I do not like. I do not like the amendment taking out the dependent parents, because I have had practical cases, as you must have had in your own districts, that illustrate the need of this provision.

I remember a case within the last three months of a widow who is an old lady 65 years of age and whose boy died in a hospital in Idaho. I do not know whether the doctor made a mistake or not in injecting something into this boy's arm, but anyway the boy died within two or three weeks. I want to just picture to you in a moment the heroism of this mother who is taken out of this bill to-day. I called this matter to the attention of General Hines, and an investigation was made. I think the doctor who had injected whatever he did inject into this man's arm did so with the best of intentions, but at any rate the boy died, and the mother said to me, "I have no desire to have that doctor thrown out of the service. I understand he is to be pensioned in a short time." Even when she knew her boy was dead she said this to me. The boy is dead to-day, and this old mother must go to the welfare department of the city of Lynn and get whatever aid she can from the city, because when we took out the dependent parents provision we removed her from any possibility of aid from the United States Government.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. We are going to try to have that amendment put back in the bill in the Senate.

Mr. CONNERY. I hope it will go back in the bill when it reaches the other body, because I think you will find that justice demands that the aged parents of these boys who die in hospitals—I would not say that the parents of any veterans who died without an injury connected with the service should be taken care of—but surely the man who dies as a result of an injury that came from direct connection with his service should have his dependent parents taken care of.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Do they not draw compensation under existing law under such conditions?

Mr. CONNERY. Not unless the man died in action, as I understand, under the present law.

Mr. HARE. No; the gentleman is mistaken. If he dies of a service-connection disability——

Mr. BROWNING. They do not receive it unless he died from a service-connected disability.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; exactly.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. In section (a) what is net income as used there?

Mr. CONNERY. I hope the Hous will pass this bill for the widows and orphans of the World War veterans.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOUSER].

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the courtesy of the gentleman from South Dakota in extending to me this time, when I am in favor of the bill.

Under the law at the present the widow of a soldier of the World War gets nothing, unless it is proved that the soldier died directly as the result of service-connected disability. We know that thousands of these men who were married and fathers of children died in their early thirties as a result of their experiences and suffering in the World War.

I am sorry that we are not voting for the Gasque bill, which would equalize the pensions of widows of all wars. But this bill is the only opportunity presented for giving the widows of World War veterans justice. I hope it will pass; I hope that party lines will not be taken into consideration in its adoption. It is only common justice. Let us pass this bill to-day, and later on adopt the Gasque bill. It is only in the interest of fairness, and so let no selfish individual on the ground of economy tell you that you ought not to do right by the widows of these World War veterans who went to war to give their lives, if necessary, for their country. I regret that the committee permitted a pauper clause in this measure since in the last Congress we overwhelmingly defeated by our votes such a declaration of policy on the grounds of decency and principle, but am compelled to vote for the bill since it is the best we are permitted to consider. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. GASQUE].

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall vote for this bill for the reason that I do not have an opportunity to vote for anything better. If this bill was to come before the House in this form we should have had an opportunity to offer amendments. I am unalterably opposed to inserting in any pension bill the "pauper clause." I think it is outrageous to require the widow of a man who served his country in any war to be required to take a "pauper oath" before her Government will give her a pension. This bill is especially unfair to the widows of the World War veterans. The widows of no other wars are required to take this "pauper's oath." Why should these widows have to take such an oath? As I have stated, however, I shall vote for it, because it will at least give to some widows, who have long been denied what they are entitled to, a little relief. There is a bill on the House calendar, for which I have been trying to get a special rule before the Rules Committee, which would give to the widows and orphans of all wars the same treatment, which was introduced by me and reported unanimously from the Committee on Pensions. This bill gives to the widows and orphans of all wars the same pension, based on their age, without requiring them to take a "pauper's oath."

I am disappointed that we are not able to get a rule for this bill from the leadership of the House, due largely, we are told, to the fact it carries an expenditure of five or six million dollars more a year than this bill. I am convinced, however, that this would be saved in the administration of the law had we been able to pass the uniform pension bill reported from the Committee on Pensions. This inequality of pensions for widows of various wars has been a very expensive policy for the Government to follow, due to the fact that every time the widows of one war are given an increase the widows of all other wars demand the same treatment. In supporting this bill I want to state that I have not given up the fight for a uniform widows and orphans pension bill, but I shall vote for this as the best I can get now, due to its being brought up under the suspension of the rule, and I sincerely hope that it will not be long before we can get a real pension bill which is uniform in its treatment to the widows and orphans of all wars. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to get some information from the gentleman from Mississippi. I want to ask him if he will not ask to substitute the Gasque bill, H. R. 7230, for this bill, H. R. 8578?

Mr. RANKIN. I can not do that under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I think we can do it by unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 7230 be substituted for H. R. 8578.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLANTON). That is not in order under suspension of the rules. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi or some member of the committee to explain the meaning of paragraph (a) on page 2. There seems to be some confusion as to whether that means in regard to the income of the widow.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] is the author of that provision, and I suggest that the gentleman direct his inquiry to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, when I was chairman of the committee I usually did the explaining.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I shall answer the question if the gentleman can not. My understanding is that that is $250 over and above their own earned wages, and so forth. Of course, I was not in favor of that provision in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In the brief time given me to discuss the pending bill proposing a small pension to dependent widows and orphans of deceased World War veterans, let me say that while all of the provisions of this measure may not meet with our approval, it is a compromise and is undoubtedly the best bill we are going to have a chance to vote on during the present session of Congress.

There has been only one voice raised thus far against this bill. I refer, of course, to the genial and able gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. ROYAL JOHNSON, former chairman of the Veterans' Committee, who freely admits that he is a devoted friend of the disabled veterans and their dependents, but who in recent years usually has managed to find an excuse to vote against legislation looking to their relief.

When I came to Congress, more than five years ago, I was laboring under the impression, or, rather I should say the hallucination, that the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota was a tried and true friend of the disabled veterans and their dependents. I had, of course, heard of his splendid war record, for which I still honor him. I had imagined him a safe man to follow, or at least work with, on all legislation for the relief of our veterans and their dependent widows and orphans. I soon discovered, however, that he usually voted with the crowd in this House that is opposed to any kind of real relief for our war veterans. We all know he can usually be relied upon to vote with the "standpats." I want to say in his presence that I have been amazed, surprised, and chagrined at his attitude in recent years on veterans' legislation.

Mr. Speaker, what surprised me most about the gentleman's speech a few minutes ago, in opposition to this legislation, what surprised me more than anything he has said during his many speeches in recent years in opposition to other important veteran legislation on this floor was his cheap, disgusting, and demagogic appeal to partisan politics. No one on this floor knows better than does the gentleman from South Dakota that partisan politics has no place in this debate, and yet he saw fit to take up most of his time lecturing those of us on the Democratic side of this aisle, in a clever and cunning effort to prejudice some real friends of veterans against the pending bill. I just want to tell him that the roll is going to be called on this measure granting belated recognition to the dependent widows and orphans of World War veterans, and that he is going to feel mighty lonesome when he reads the list of his handful of followers. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], who desires to have some explanation in respect to some section of the bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] brought up one of the questions that I had in mind and which another speaker refused to answer. The chairman of the committee clarified that by his construction, which I think was necessary. I rise now to ask another question with reference to the word "or" at the end of line 6, on page 2, subdivision (a) with reference to time. The language is—

Who [the widow] was his wife and living with him not less than five years next before his death or who married him prior to January 1, 1925.

Does that qualification as to five years apply in all cases?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly. It means that she must have lived with him for five years next preceding his death, or must have married him prior to January 1, 1925.

Mr. BURTNESS. That is the point. If they were married prior to January 1, 1925, then the 5-year provision does not apply?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the only reason I take the floor is to keep the record straight. The members of the Committee on Rules are used to having the "buck" passed to them. They stand the pressure from all over the country. This is one instance, however, where I do not want the RECORD to fail to show the truth. This bill has been in the Committee on Rules for several months. I feel sure that if the amendment offered here to-day had been offered and accepted before the Committee on Rules, the bill would have been reported out on the floor long ago. I never heard any opposition to the bill, not even from the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], except to that clause relating to parents. As I recall, there was unanimous opposition to including parents.

To my surprise a suggestion has been made here to-day that if we pass the bill now with that provision out of the bill, an attempt will be made to put it back in the Senate by the proponents of the bill, who are now content to accept the bill with the amendment. I submit the question to the House as to whether that is entirely fair with the House which now proposes to pass the bill upon the theory that the widows and orphans of the World War veterans are the only ones to be taken care of.

I am very glad to see the bill come out here on the floor and to see the proponents of the bill finally accept the constant suggestion of the Committee on Rules that this new departure in respect to parents be eliminated. The elimination of that motion is undoubtedly what made it possible to bring the bill on the floor to-day, and no attempt should be made to break faith with the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have only one more speaker and I shall expect him to close the debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, this Government of ours almost from the beginning of its history has been liberal to veterans of wars and their dependents. We are doing in this bill in a measure only what we have done for the veterans and dependents of other wars. We must realize, and the people of the country must realize, that when they vote for war and throw the Nation into war and send our young men to fight and die and be disabled, there will be enacted by the American Congress liberal pension laws for dependents. [Applause.] If the American people do not want this policy continued, then they ought to be slow in throwing our country into war, especially into a war like the World War, where the suffering was so intense, and where we lost so many of our splendid youths upon the fields of battle, which brought such sorrow to the homes of thousands of our American fathers and mothers.

The World War was a great mistake so far as we of the United States were concerned. We should not have permitted ourselves to become entangled in the conflicting ambitions of the monarchies of the Old World. The reelection of President Wilson in 1916 on the platform "He kept us out of war" was the sober judgment of the American people as to whether we should enter that war. However, the pressure of the profiteer and the international banker who were solely concerned about the security of their European loans, together with the sensational exaggerations of a partially subsidized press, swept the President and Congress off their feet, and we became engulfed in a conflict that cost the lives of 10,000,000 human beings, representing the very flower of the world's young manhood.

The mobilized forces of the United States in the World War reached the enormous total of 4,355,000 men. Of this number, 126,000 made the supreme sacrifice and now sleep the sleep of eternity. The wounded American casualties amounted to 235,000, many of whom died of their wounds or were either partially or wholly incapacitated. Aside from these frightful fatalities, our late European allies still owe us to-day, after a most liberal policy of refunding, the staggering sum of $11,280,000,000 and from present indications the repayment of this loan, the major portion of which was made for rehabilitation purposes after the signing of the armistice, is exceedingly doubtful. Under the selfish leadership of France the United States seems to be anathema in all the countries of Europe. Our contribution to the World War in men and money is forgotten, and we are looked upon as a sort of international Shylock.

As the direct aftermath of the war the whole world is now suffering from one of the greatest depressions in history. The very foundations of our industrial civilization seem to be crumbling. The cost of government is mounting, taxes and unemployment are increasing, and everything seems to be topsy-turvy. Prohibition, which was surreptitiously forced on the public during the war, has given us the bootlegger, kidnaper, gangster, and racketeer. It has added materially to unemployment, filled our jails, enriched Capone and his gang, corrupted many public officials, undermined respect for law, and deprived the Federal Treasury of an annual revenue approximating $1,000,000,000.

If we had not foolishly entered this World War, the United States would still be riding the crest of prosperity. There would be no necessity for balancing the Budget, as we would have had a surplus instead of a deficit in the Treasury, and we would not now be confronted either with the distressing problem of unemployment or the evils of a prohibitory law that is incapable of enforcement. But above all, there would be no pain to-day in the hearts of millions of mothers whose precious boys now sleep under the poppies on the hillsides of France, cruelly deprived of their God-given right to live their own lives of happiness and contentment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak further upon this subject and would not have done so, had it not been for the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], who apparently finds great fault with my attitude toward the service men. Of course, that gentleman has not been present during all of the years since the World War, and he is not familiar, perhaps, with all of the record. Had he been familiar with it, he would not have been so apt to make the statement he did. It happens that most of the bills affecting service men that have been enacted, until a very recent time, I have drawn and supported, but 25 per cent of the income of the United States is now paid out for service men, and there comes a time when there is a limit. I know when the limit is reached, though others may not know when it is reached. There comes a time when the people of the country can raise only a certain amount of money through taxation. Laws have been passed, when we had plenty of money in the Treasury, which should to-day be repealed. Some of them are in the economy measure which will come before the House to-morrow.

I have every sentiment for the service man. I ought to have, because I am perhaps better acquainted with the real service man of the World War than many of those who shed so many tears for him, but I know that the laws ought to be revised by some commission, so that equal justice is done to the veterans of all wars.

The provision in the economy measure ought to be retained, and this bill ought to be held up until it can be drafted so as to treat fairly the widows of all wars, and until we know where the money will come from.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it shall not be my purpose to engage in the controversies back and forth relative to the method employed for the consideration of this legislation.

It occurs to me that this is a matter of such far-reaching consequence and such great importance to the widows and orphans of the veterans of the World War that we should consider it without engaging in any matters of that kind.

The history of pension legislation goes back to the beginning of this Government. Legislation heretofore passed which granted benefits to the veterans of all wars in which our Nation has engaged has made provision for the widows and orphans of the men of all prior wars, and to-day we simply ask, in a measure, the same degree of consideration for the widows and orphans of our comrades of the World War as has been accorded to the veterans of other wars.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Is there not as much justice in passing this measure for the widows and orphans as there was in passing the disability allowance for the soldiers themselves?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Absolutely. It is true this measure does not provide the same degree of allowance for widows and orphans of World War veterans as is now provided by law for the widows and orphans of the veterans of other wars, yet we do take into consideration the fact that this is the beginning of this type of legislation and it should be equalized so that the beneficiaries may all receive the same degree of consideration.

I am glad that the provision which is eliminated by way of amendment has been taken out. I yield to no man in interest or in sympathy for the parents of my comrades of the World War, but we should remind ourselves of the fact that neither this nor any other country in the world has ever embarked upon a pension policy providing a pension for the parents of veterans of a war who did not die of a service-connected disability. The parents are now provided with dependency compensation when their son died of a service-connected disability.

I do not favor the so-called needs clause in this bill and opposed it in the committee and hope it will be eliminated before the final passage of the bill in the Senate. Experience has shown that the inclusion of such a provision does not result in any saving to the Government in the cost of the legislation. Such provisions have been included in this type of legislation in the past and have later been eliminated upon the recommendation of the Government officials charged with the responsibility of administering the act.

While this bill is not exactly what I would prefer, I am so anxious to secure the passage of legislation providing for these widows and orphans of the World War veterans that I am willing to accept the bill as offered for passage with the hope that some changes may be made later.

The bill provides an allowance of $20 per month for the widow of a World War veteran. It provides in the case where a veteran leaves a widow and one child the sum of $26 per month, with $6 for each additional child. If the veteran leaves no widow but one child, $20 per month, with $6 for each additional child.

I am happy to have the privilege of raising my voice in support of the passage of this legislation. To-day the pale faces of the widows and orphans of the World War veterans are turned in anxious anticipation to the Congress of their Nation, and I sincerely hope their appeal will be granted and this legislation passed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 316, nays 16, not voting 99, as follows:

[Roll No. 61]

YEAS—316

Adkins	Dowell	Kinzer	Reed, N. Y.
Allen	Doxey	Kniffin	Reid, Ill.
Allgood	Driver	Kopp	Reilly
Almon	Dyer	Kunz	Rich
Amlie	Eaton, Colo.	Kurtz	Robinson
Andresen	Eaton, N. J.	Kvale	Rogers, N. H.
Andrew, Mass.	Ellzey	LaGuardia	Romjue
Andrews, N. Y.	Englebright	Lambertson	Sanders, N. Y.
Arentz	Erk	Lambeth	Sanders, Tex.
Arnold	Eslick	Lamneck	Sandlin
Auf der Heide	Fernandez	Lankford, Ga.	Schafer
Ayres	Finley	Lankford, Va.	Schuetz
Bacharach	Fish	Larsen	Seger
Bachmann	Fishburne	Leavitt	Selvig
Baldrige	Fitzpatrick	Lehlbach	Shallenberger
Bankhead	Flannagan	Lewis	Shannon
Barbour	Foss	Lichtenwalner	Shott
Barton	Frear	Lonergan	Shreve
Beam	French	Loofbourow	Simmons
Bland	Fulbright	Lovette	Sinclair
Blanton	Fuller	Lozier	Smith, Idaho
Bloom	Fulmer	McClintic, Okla.	Smith, W. Va.
Bohn	Garrett	McClintock, Ohio	Snow
Boileau	Gasque	McCormack	Somers, N. Y.
Boland	Gibson	McDuffie	Sparks
Bowman	Gifford	McFadden	Spence
Brand, Ga.	Gilbert	McGugin	Stafford
Briggs	Gilchrist	McKeown	Stalker
Britten	Glover	McLaughlin	Steagall
Browning	Goldsborough	McLeod	Stevenson
Brumm	Goss	McReynolds	Stewart
Buchanan	Granfield	McSwain	Stokes
Buckbee	Green	Maas	Strong, Kans.
Bulwinkle	Greenwood	Magrady	Strong, Pa.
Burdick	Gregory	Major	Sumners, Tex.
Burtness	Griffin	Maloney	Sutphin
Busby	Guyer	Manlove	Swank
Butler	Hadley	Mansfield	Swanson
Byrns	Haines	Mapes	Sweeney
Cable	Hall, Miss.	Martin, Mass.	Swick
Campbell, Iowa	Hall, N. Dak.	Martin, Oreg.	Swing
Cannon	Hancock, N. Y.	May	Taber
Carden	Hardy	Mead	Tarver
Carter, Wyo.	Hare	Michener	Taylor, Colo.
Cary	Harlan	Miller	Taylor, Tenn.
Cavicchia	Hart	Mitchell	Temple
Chavez	Hartley	Mobley	Thomason
Chiperfield	Hastings	Montet	Thurston
Christgau	Haugen	Moore, Ky.	Tierney
Christopherson	Hawley	Morehead	Tilson
Clancy	Hess	Mouser	Timberlake
Cochran, Mo.	Hill, Ala.	Nelson, Me.	Turpin
Collier	Hill, Wash.	Nelson, Mo.	Underwood
Collins	Hoch	Niedringhaus	Vinson, Ga.
Colton	Hogg, Ind.	Nolan	Vinson, Ky.
Condon	Hogg, W. Va.	Norton, Nebr.	Warren
Connery	Holaday	Norton, N. J.	Wason
Connolly	Hooper	O'Connor	Watson
Cooper, Ohio	Hope	Oliver, Ala.	Weaver
Cooper, Tenn.	Hopkins	Overton	Welch, Calif.
Cox	Horr	Parker, Ga.	Welsh, Pa.
Coyle	Howard	Parker, N. Y.	West
Crail	Huddleston	Parks	White
Crisp	Jacobsen	Parsons	Whitley
Cross	James	Partridge	Whittington
Crosser	Johnson, Mo.	Patman	Wigglesworth
Crowe	Johnson, Okla.	Peavey	Williams, Mo.
Crowther	Johnson, Tex.	Person	Williams, Tex.
Crump	Johnson, Wash.	Pettengill	Wilson
Culkin	Jones	Pittenger	Wingo
Darrow	Kading	Polk	Withrow
Davis	Kahn	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Wolcott
Delaney	Karch	Ragon	Wolverton
De Priest	Keller	Rainey	Wood, Ga.
DeRouen	Kelly, Ill.	Ramseyer	Woodruff
Dickinson	Kelly, Pa.	Ramspeck	Wright
Dies	Kemp	Rankin	Wyant
Dominick	Kennedy	Ransley	Yates
Doughton	Ketcham	Rayburn	Yon

NAYS—16

Aldrich	Davenport	Houston, Del.	Montague
Beck	Douglas, Ariz.	Hull, Morton D.	Snell
Carter, Calif.	Evans, Calif.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Thatcher
Clarke, N. Y.	Free	Luce	Woodrum

NOT VOTING—99

Abernethy	Canfield	Cole, Md.	Drane
Bacon	Carley	Cooke	Drewry
Beedy	Cartwright	Corning	Estep
Black	Celler	Cullen	Evans, Mont.
Boehne	Chapman	Curry	Fiesinger
Bolton	Chase	Dallinger	Freeman
Boylan	Chindblom	Dickstein	Gambrill
Brand, Ohio	Clague	Dieterich	Garber
Brunner	Clark, N. C.	Disney	Gavagan
Burch	Cochran, Pa.	Douglass, Mass.	Gillen
Campbell, Pa.	Cole, Iowa	Doutrich	Golder
Goodwin	Kleberg	Oliver, N. Y.	Sirovich
Griswold	Knutson	Owen	Smith, Va.
Hall, Ill.	Lanham	Palmisano	Sullivan, N. Y.
Hancock, N. C.	Larrabee	Perkins	Sullivan, Pa.
Hollister	Lea	Patterson	Summers, Wash.
Holmes	Lindsay	Pou	Tinkham
Hornor	Linthicum	Prall	Treadway
Hull, William E.	Ludlow	Pratt, Ruth	Tucker
Igoe	McMillan	Purnell	Underhill
Jeffers	Millard	Rogers, Mass.	Weeks
Jenkins	Milligan	Rudd	Williamson
Johnson, Ill.	Moore, Ohio	Sabath	Wolfenden
Kendall	Murphy	Schneider	Wood, Ind.
Kerr	Nelson, Wis.	Seiberling

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Gavagan with Mr. Wood of Indiana.
Mr. Griswold with Mrs. Rogers.
Mrs. Owen with Mr. Estep.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Millard.
Mr. Black with Mr. Hollister.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Perkins.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Underhill.
Mr. Dietrich with Mrs. Pratt.
Mr. Prall with Mr. Bacon.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Wolfenden.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Goodwin.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Jenkins.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Golder.
Mr. Sullivan of New York with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Holmes.
Mr. Brunner with Mr. Seiberling.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Cochran of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Boylan with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Clark of North Carolina with Mr. Curry.
Mr. Oliver of New York with Mr. Knutson.
Mr. Celler with Mr. Moore of Ohio.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Doutrich.
Mr. Fiesinger with Mr. Brand of Ohio.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. William E. Hull.
Mr. Dickstein with Mr. Nelson of Wisconsin.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Cooke.
Mr. Douglass of Massachusetts with Mr. Garber.
Mr. Linthicum with Mr. Beedy.
Mr. Milligan with Mr. Chindblom.
Mr. Cullen with Mr. Cole of Iowa.
Mr. Pou with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Lindsay with Mr. Treadway.
Mr. Kerr with Mr. Dallinger.
Mr. Rudd with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Burch with Mr. Williamson.
Mr. Lanham with Mr. Hawley.
Mr. Disney with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. McMillan with Mr. Hall of Illinois.
Mr. Smith of West Virginia with Mr. Weeks.
Mr. Drewry with Mr. Summers of Washington.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Clague.
Mr. Cole of Maryland with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Hancock of North Carolina with Mr. Schneider.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Carley with Mr. Bolton.
Mr. Sirovich with Mr. Palmisano.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Igoe.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to state that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. DOUGLASS, is unavoidably detained. If he were permitted to be present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mrs. ROGERS, is absent on Government business. If she were present, she would vote "yea."

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MOORE of Ohio, is unavoidably absent on account of illness. Had he been present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a similar announcement in behalf of my colleague, Mr. CHAPMAN.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HANCOCK, is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would have voted "yea."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the debate on this bill, but stepped out of the Chamber during the roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. JENKINS, is unavoidably absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I was called out of the Chamber. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—PENSIONS FOR WORLD WAR WIDOWS

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, this one measure, even in the desperate situation of the Federal Treasury, I can heartily approve. If there is any one class of persons more worthy of a pension than the widows and orphans of World War veterans, I do not know of it. It is true that it was a quarter of a century before widows of Civil War soldiers were granted pensions and 16 years before widows of Spanish War veterans were so favored. In each of these cases the pensions were small, but at that time were deemed adequate.

It has been 12 years now since the World War was terminated, but in these days of lack of employment thousands of World War widows with children are suffering privation, and the children undernourishment, which does not speak well for the chivalry of a Nation which has provided so lavishly for both service-connected disabilities of veterans and those disabled not in the line of duty.

Personally, I would have preferred the Gasque bill, which makes provision for all war widows of all wars alike and for dependent children. This bill is safeguarded by the provision that where a widow has a net income of $250 besides her labor, she is not entitled to the benefits under it. It also provides that she is not entitled to a pension unless she lived with her soldier husband for five years prior to his death, or was married to him prior to January 1, 1925. The reasons for these provisions are obvious and are the results of compromises between those who differed in the committee as to the details of the law.

I regret the provision for dependent parents was eliminated, for no doubt every Member, as I have, has had brought to his attention cases where a mother has been left helpless by the death of her son who was her only hope for support in old age. It is my contention that when that mother has sacrificed her son on the altar of her country, thereby losing not only his companionship and comfort but also her support, which every boy worthy of the name of son is glad to lavish upon his mother, her country should of right, as far as it can, repay her for her overwhelming loss, to reward her devotion and sacrifice by the only means in its power to lighten the burden her son would have considered it a high privilege to bear. Again I express my regret at this omission which at some more propitious time may be included.

But this bill makes an honest effort to do justice to those whom this great Government owes a debt of everlasting gratitude. No one in this Congress is more anxious for economy legislation than I nor more chagrined at the evident failure to enact speedily a real economy program, yet I do not want to see injustice meted out to these deserving and more or less helpliess widows and children in the name of economy. They deserve the protection of this Government if anyone does.

For of all who suffer in time of war and in the lonely years that follow it, none, it seems to me, bear such a heavy burden as the women whose lives fall within the shadow of its dread desolation. To them there is no beat of battle drum that stirs the heart where the hell of battle plunges. Only the dull dread of what must always befall some of those who fight for their country. Long ago we used to read in our old school readers a poem by Thomas Buchanan Read, which so aptly and beautifully expresses this thought, that I quote it not only to impress the truth to which I have referred but also to revive the memories that cluster around the light of other years:

THE BRAVE AT HOME

The maid who binds her warrior's sash,
  With smile that well her pain dissembles,
The while beneath her drooping lash
  One starry teardrop hangs and trembles,
Though heaven alone records the tear,
  And fame shall never know her story,
Her heart has shed a drop as dear
  As e'er bedewed the field of glory!

The wife who girds her husband's sword
  'Mid little ones who weep or wonder,
And bravely speaks the cheering word,
  What though her heart be rent asunder,
Doomed nightly in her dreams to hear
  The bolts of death around him rattle,
Hath shed as sacred blood as e'er
  Was poured upon the field of battle!

The mother who conceals her grief,
  While to her breast her son she presses,
Then breathes a few brave words and brief,
  Kissing the patriot brow she blesses,
With no one but her secret God
  To know the pain that weighs upon her,
Sheds holy blood as e'er the sod
  Received on freedom's field of honor!

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to indorse legislation granting pensions to the dependent widows and children of our World War veterans, because I feel that it is the duty of the Federal Government to help take care of them. It is said that dancers must pay the fiddler. We knew when we sent our soldiers off to war that sooner or later we would have to grant allowances to their dependent widows and orphans; therefore it behooves Congress to accept this responsibility without quibbling over it. Since Congress has granted liberal pensions to the widows and orphans of veterans of all former wars involving this country, there is no good reason why the widows and orphans of our World War veterans should be denied similar benefits.

Under the provisions of the present law only the widows and orphans of World War veterans dying from service-connected disabilities are entitled to pensions. This amendment eliminates that inequality. Whether or not death results from service-connected disabilities, the dependent widows and orphans of those valiant soldiers who left their homes and families and jobs and crossed the Atlantic to fight on foreign soil are entitled to allowances. I am glad this measure places all widows and orphans of World War veterans on an equal footing.

I can not imagine anything more pitiful than the plight of the widow or children of a World War veteran who have become public charges or who must eke out a mere existence with insufficient means for obtaining the bare necessities of life. Nor is there any justification for the Government leaving them to such a fate.

There is opposition to passing this measure at the present time because of unfavorable economic conditions. Neither the veterans nor their widows and orphans are responsible for the prevalence of the worst financial panic in the annals of this country. I am for strict economy in government; but when this country becomes so broke it can not afford a small pension for the widows and orphans of our war veterans, it might as well declare itself bankrupt and have it over with.

There is opposition to this bill because its administration will cost some money. But there was no opposition to our entrance into the World War on that ground. As a matter of fact, the entire resources of the country were pledged for financing our participation in that conflict. To oppose the granting of these allowances because of the cost involved is nothing more or less than beggaring patriotism.

The real truth is the pensions allowed, under the terms of this bill, are the least that the richest and most powerful nation under the sun could provide without losing face completely. I am quite sure its administration will not break the Treasury. It grants an allowance of $20 a month to the dependent widow of a veteran who served at least 90 days during the period of the World War and $6 a month to each child under 16 years of age. One orphan is allowed $20 a month and each additional orphan $6 a month. A widow whose net income exceeds $250 a year is ineligible to participate in the benefits, and so is an orphan whose annual net income exceeds $400. I regret that this so-called "needs clause" is incorporated in this amendment. It is a travesty on justice to require the widows of our World War veterans to take the "pauper's oath" in applying for a pension. This is not required of the widows of veterans of any previous war. I am confident, however, that this objectionable "needs clause" subsequently will be stricken out by amendment.

I can not understand why the administration should object so strenuously to this legislation. For that matter, I can not fathom the administration's attitude toward veterans' relief legislation generally. Practically every measure granting World War veterans a semblance of relief has had to hurdle a presidential veto. Not only does the Executive oppose such legislation, but he vetoes it in advance. I contend that it is anomalous for him to oppose the granting of relief to the distressed widows and orphans of our own World War veterans when he asked for and received from the Federal Treasury $100,000,000 for relieving distressed widows and orphans in Europe after the World War—distress thrust upon them by that dreadful holocaust.

Moreover, scores of Americans remained at home and piled up millions of dollars of excess war profits while our soldiers were fighting in France. During the last decade the administration has refunded excess war-profits taxes approximating a billion dollars. Regardless of the merits or demerits of these refunds, I contend that the dependent widows and orphans of the soldiers who did the actual fighting are more worthy to receive the allowances granted them under this measure. In my judgment, it is the height of ingratitude for those who have received excess war-profits tax refunds to voice opposition to the enactment of this law.

I repeat that I advocate this measure because I feel that the allowances granted to the dependent widows and orphans of our World War veterans are justifiable and meritorious. They should have been provided shortly after the end of the war. They will not bankrupt the Treasury; but they will enable the widows and orphans of World War veterans to keep soul and body together. No really patriotic American should object to the inconsequential appropriation required to administer the act. I am glad of the opportunity to cast my ballot in favor of the measure.

ARMY-NAVY FOOTBALL GAME

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 210

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that in the event the football teams of the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy engage in a contest this George Washington bicentennial year, the authorities in charge of the matter are hereby respectfully requested to use their good offices in having such contest in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman explain what he means by this resolution?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I spoke to the gentleman from New York about it. I realize this is a somewhat irregular procedure, but if the gentleman was present on the floor of the House a few days ago when I called attention to this matter, he would know that it seemed to meet with the universal approval of the Members who heard the suggestion I made. At that time I stated the reasons which actuated a request of this sort upon the part of those who were in charge of the bicentennial athletic contests in the city of Washington during the period of the bicentennial.

Mr. SNELL. This request is rather unusual.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I very frankly admit it is and I even admit it may trespass somewhat on the proprieties, but there was such a universal interest manifested in it that I felt I was warranted in offering the resolution.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Where does the gentleman think such a game could be held in the city of Washington?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would be very glad to have the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], who is officially and personally interested, answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. BLOOM. At the baseball park.

Mr. TILSON. How many can be accommodated at the baseball park?

Mr. BLOOM. From thirty to thirty-five thousand people.

Mr. TILSON. That is a very small capacity for such a game.

Mr. BLOOM. I am informed they can accommodate 40,000 people by using the field.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. I would like to ask if the resolution has the approval of the Economy Committee? From the standpoint of economy it would be better for the Treasury if they played this game at a stadium which will seat 80,000 or 90,000 people.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the gentleman that the Bicentennial Commission does not expect to ask any further appropriation out of the Federal Treasury. The matter of appropriations is behind us.

Mr. BLOOM. And this will not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object until the Economy Committee passes on this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope my friend will not do that. This is merely a suggestion.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] has indicated that this will not cost the Government of the United States directly or indirectly.

Mr. BLOOM. Not a cent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman it is better to have the game in the city of Washington in this ball park than to have it where the ticket speculators can make money out of it.

Mr. SCHAFER. In view of the statements of the two distinguished gentlemen from New York I shall withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. GOSS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I put in the RECORD a letter from Du Pont Co. containing figures comparing the expenditures of the Government for 1927 and 1932. At that time I had hoped to ask leave to put in the RECORD a statement by the Budget analyzing these figures and showing that they presented an unfair and unjust picture. I now have that statement, and I ask unanimous consent to insert the statement in connection with my remarks and ask that it may go in the permanent RECORD following the Du Pont letter.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman add that the Du Pont letter has been copied by many corporations throughout the country? There is an article in the Review of Reviews by a gentleman who is supposed to be informed, and corporations and banks and chambers of commerce have copied this letter, which is full of misinformation, purposely misleading on conditions with respect to the Budget, and they are circulating such misrepresentations throughout the country.

Mr. SWING. The gentleman's statement goes in the RECORD along with this request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that if we are to adjourn before the conventions we must speed up the work of the House, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday business this week be dispensed with.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object, but I want to make a note that this thing has happened in every Congress for years and years, until Calendar Wednesday is almost worthless. The Committee on Immigration has not had a Calendar Wednesday call since 1922. I agree it is necessary to speed up, and I want to say to the Democratic leaders that I know they have the work to do, but, as a matter of fact, they are throwing these great big national problems across the plate a little too fast. With this statement, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ARMY-NAVY FOOTBALL GAME

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss] is willing to withdraw his objection, and I therefore renew my request for the present consideration of the resolution which was read a little while ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GAVAGAN, at the request of Mr. KENNEDY, on account of illness.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT LEGISLATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of civil-service retirement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, on May 22, 1920, after many years of discussion and agitation, the original retirement act for Federal employees of the Civil Service of the United States, known as Public, No. 215, Sixty-sixth Congress, was approved by President Wilson. This act became effective for retirement purposes 90 days subsequent to its approval, namely, August 21, 1920, and embraced within its provisions all employees of the Civil Service of the United States, together with certain other small groups of employees, specifically mentioned therein, who were actually in the service on its effective date or who subsequently established a civil-service status. It was not retroactive in any of its provisions and did not include employees who became absolutely separated from the service prior to August 21, 1920.

Briefly stated, all employees to whom the act applied, who had rendered an allowable service to the Government of at least 15 years and had attained the statutory retirement age of 70, were retired on annuities ranging in amount from $180 or less to the maximum of $720 per annum, the computation of the annuity being based upon a certain percentage of the average annual basic salary received by the employee for the last 10 years of active service and the number of years of service rendered. Under the terms of this act, when an employee reached 70 years of age and had not served a total period of 15 years, he, nevertheless, was automatically separated from the service. Letter carriers, postal clerks, and mechanics retired at 65 years of age, and railway mail clerks at 62.

The total number of annuitants on the retirement roll at the expiration of the first fiscal year, June 30, 1921, was 6,471, the average annual annuity rate amounting to $568.44. The disbursements covering this period for the payment of refunds, annuities, and allowances amounted to $2,913,000. The total receipts by transfer on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of the civil-service retirement and disability fund for the year ended June 30, 1921, together with interest, and so forth, amounted to over $12,500,000.

Deductions from the salaries of employees under the purview of the act, numbering approximately 300,000, began on August 1, 1920, at the rate of 2½ per cent of the basic salary, pay, or compensation. At the end of the first fiscal year, or a period of 11 months, under the operation of the retirement system, after paying out of the fund refunds of deductions, annuities, and allowances, there was a balance in excess of $9,000,000 in the civil-service retirement and disability fund, invested by the Secretary of the Treasury under specific authority of the retirement act.

The scope of the original retirement act was broadened and liberalized by an Executive order issued June 7, 1922, extending retirement benefits to certain groups of unclassified laborers whose basic salaries exceeded $600 per annum.

An amendment approved June 17, 1922, included in the act charwomen, laborers, and other employees, whether classified or unclassified, employed on a regular basis, whose basic salary was at a rate less than $600 per annum.

An amendment to the retirement act, approved September 22, 1922, was designed primarily to provide an annuity under restricted conditions for those employees who, after long years of service, become involuntarily separated from the service, through no fault or delinquency on their part, before reaching the prescribed retirement age.

Annuities granted under the terms of this amendment are computed on a percentage basis; that is, allowances are made on a percentage of the amount the employee otherwise would be entitled to receive had he reached the statutory retirement age of the position occupied.

The act of July 3, 1926, otherwise known as Public, No. 522, Sixty-ninth Congress, became effective July 1, 1926. This act amended and replaced the act of May 22, 1920, and amendments thereof and at the same time continued the retirement system, but under several changed conditions. Eligibility for superannuation retirement was fixed at 62, 65, and 70 as theretofore. Laborers formerly eligible at 70 years of age became eligible at 65 and employees engaged in hazardous occupations or in occupations which required great physical effort or which necessitated exposure to extreme heat or cold became eligible at 62. Employees who had rendered 15 years of service in the Tropics likewise became eligible at 62, sea post clerks and village letter carriers at 65 years.

A new feature in connection with applications for continuance in the service was incorporated in this act to the effect that it did not contemplate automatic separation upon reaching retirement age unless the employee had rendered at least 15 years of service.

Several groups of employees formerly not within the purview of the act were included in this new act, one particular group being postmasters of the first, second, and third classes who had been promoted, appointed, or transferred from the classified civil service.

The act of July, 1926, established an entirely new method of computing annuities, the formula prescribed being the multiplication of the average annual basic salary received by the employee, not exceeding $1,500 per annum, during the last 10 years of allowable service by the number of years of service, not exceeding 30, and dividing the result by 45, the annuity being fixed at the nearest multiple of 12 and in no case to exceed $1,000 per annum.

The method of computing accredited service provided that "in determining the aggregate period of service upon which the annuity is to be based the fractional part of a month, if any, in the total service shall be eliminated." This method was a radical change from the one theretofore provided which, under the act of May 22, 1920, divided service rendered into 3-year periods.

For instance, if an employee had rendered in the aggregate 29 years 11 months and 20 days' service, he would, under the terms of the original law, be credited with 27 years only, as class A, under the old law, included employees who had served the United States for a total period of 30 years or more; class B, included employees serving 27 years or more, but less than 30 years; class C, 24 years or more, but less than 27; class D, 21 years or more, but less than 24; class E, 18 years or more, but less than 21 years; and class F, 15 years or more, but less than 18 years.

Another new provision in this act, and which established a new practice, dealt with credit for leaves of absence, as follows:

So much of any leaves of absence as may exceed six months in the aggregate in any calendar year shall be excluded, and in the case of substitutes in the Postal Service credit shall be given from date of original appointment as substitute.

Section 10 of the new act provided an increase in the contributions of the employees from 2½ to 3½ per cent of the basic salary, pay, or compensation beginning July 1, 1926.

A new feature concerning retirement on account of total disability required the applicant to execute the application prior to separation from the service or within six months thereafter.

Under the former law, the maximum amount of accumulated deductions and so forth which could be paid, in the event of the death of the employee or annuitant, without administration was $300, and when no executor or administrator was appointed, it was necessary for the claimant to wait 90 days from date of death before settlement of the claim could be made. Under the terms of the July act, such limitation was increased to $1,000 and when no executor or administrator was appointed, authority was given to settle such claim at the expiration of 30 days from date of death.

The amount transferred to the civil-service retirement and disability fund for the fiscal year 1926 (under the operation of the original act), was over $20,000,000, including interest. Disbursements totaled over $10,000,000 for this particular year and there was a balance in the retirement fund amounting to over $54,600,000, June 30, 1926. Thus, after approximately six years of operation of the retirement system, there were over 12,500 annuitants on the roll receiving an average annual annuity rate of $545, more than 10,200 on account of age, and over 2,200 on account of total disability.

It became necessary to readjudicate and recompute over 12,500 cases of annuitants on the roll under the terms of the act of July, 1926, as that law provided that the benefits thereof should be extended to those already retired. As a result, a large proportion of the annuitants received a substantial increase in their annuities. It is significant to point out that the average annuity on June 30, 1926, under the original act of May 22, 1920, was $545.57, whereas the average on June 30, 1927, under the act of July 3, 1926, was $721.39, an increase of a little more than 32 per cent. At the close of the fiscal year 1927 it was developed that of the total number of annuitants on the roll a little more than 19 per cent were receiving the maximum provided under the act of July, 1926. More retirement claims were filed during the first year of the July act than during any other preceding fiscal year with the exception of 1921. No doubt the higher rate of annuities provided thereunder had a marked influence on the result. More claims for retirement on account of total disability were filed in 1927 than in any of the years immediately preceding.

On May 29, 1930, an act amending the act of July 3, 1926, providing for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service was approved by the President. This act became effective July 1, 1930, and retains many provisions of prior laws, but there are several changes of vital importance. It reduces the age of superannuation retirement of certain groups of employees, and also provides optional retirement two years earlier in all cases where the employee has rendered at least 30 years' service. Section 2 of the act relates to automatic separation from the service upon reaching retirement age unless the employee is certified for extension. Prior laws provided that no one should be continued in the service for more than four years beyond retirement age after August 20, 1930. The new law makes possible still further extension in cases where the services of the employee are needed by reason of expert knowledge and special qualifications. This new act provides an entirely new method for the computation of annuities, and is the most important departure from the prior law.

A new feature regarding disability retirement is the extension of retirement benefits to employees otherwise entitled who shall have rendered a service to the Government of not less than five years, and retains the provision of the act of July 3, 1926, that the claim for total disability must be executed prior to the applicant's separation from the service or within six months thereafter.

The act of April 23, 1930, Public, No. 165, Seventy-first Congress, provides for a uniform date of retirement. In other words, all retirement of Federal personnel of whatever class—civil, military, naval, judicial, legislative, or otherwise—shall take effect on the 1st day of the month following the date of eligibility for retirement.

There were 22,650 annuitants on the roll at the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1931—15,357 on account of age, 4,947 on account of total disability, 1,374 by reason of involuntary separation, and 972 optional after 30 years of service—and the average annuity paid under the act of May, 1930, was $952 per annum, as compared with $759 for the last year under the July act; 33.7 per cent were receiving $1,200 per annum and 66.3 per cent less than that amount. It is significant to mention that under the act of May 29, 1930, there is really no maximum annuity and that as time goes on the rate will increase until it will be possible to receive as much as $2,500 per annum or more.

Section 4 of this new act, which prescribes the method of computing annuities, provides that a sum equal to $30 for each year of service, not exceeding 30, shall be allowed, to which shall be added the amount of annuity purchasable with the sum to the credit of the employee's individual account, together with interest at 4 per cent compounded annually on June 30 of each year, but it is further provided that in no case shall the annuity paid be less than an amount equal to the average annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, not to exceed $1,600 per annum, received by the employee during any five consecutive years of allowable service at the option of the employee, multiplied by the number of years of service, not exceeding 30 years, and divided by 40.

This new act of May 29, 1930, likewise provided that the benefits thereof be extended to all employees heretofore retired, which resulted in giving an increase in annuity to over 17,000 retired former employees.

The maximum life annuity to which an employee is entitled retiring at the present time, after 30 years of allowable service and an average annual basic salary of $1,600 per year or more for the best five consecutive years of allowable service, is $1,200.

There are now approximately 450,000 employees under the purview of the civil service retirement act, and the contributions by these employees to the civil-service retirement and disability fund for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, amounted to over $29,600,000.

During the operation of the civil-service retirement system the employees of the Government have contributed to the civil-service retirement and disability fund an amount in excess of $228,700,000 up to June 30, 1931. Interest and profits on the investments have exceeded $30,800,000. Miscellaneous receipts reached a sum amounting to over $1,000,000, and the appropriations by Congress have totaled over $61,000,000, thus showing total receipts to be in excess of $322,000,000. Out of that has been paid in annuities to retired employees an amount in excess of $96,000,000, refunds to employees separated from the service an amount of more than $35,000,000, and direct settlements by the General Accounting Office equaled over half a million dollars. Total disbursements to June 30, 1931, amounted to over $131,000,000, and the balance in the fund on June 30, 1931, was over $191,000,000 as compared with over $156,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year 1930.

THOMAS JEFFERSON AND RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address recently delivered in the city of Washington by the present Governor of Virginia, Hon. John Garland Pollard, on Thomas Jefferson and Religious Liberty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, recently in this city I had the pleasure of hearing Hon. John Garland Pollard, Governor of Virginia, deliver a very splendid address on Thomas Jefferson and Religious Freedom. Because of the historical information set forth in this unusual address, and because Governor Pollard is recognized as one of America's outstanding authorities on this subject, I requested the governor to furnish me a copy, which he was kind enough to do. Under the leave granted me I include the eloquent and informative address to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON JOHN GARLAND POLLARD, GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA, AT FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 21, 1932

Thomas Jefferson and our Baptist forefathers were friends. With the early Baptists religious liberty was a part of their religion; with Jefferson it was a part of his political philosophy.

Thomas Jefferson was born into an intolerant world. Men were not allowed to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences; they could not attend a church of their own choosing but were compelled to attend the church established by law and were taxed to support that church. Ministers of other churches were fined, beaten, and imprisoned for no other offense than the preaching of the gospel.

Heresy was punishable by law, a Virginia statute specifically providing that if a person brought up in the Christian religion denies the being of God, or the Trinity, or asserts that there are more Gods than one, or denies the Christian religion to be true, or the Scripture to be of divine authority, he must be punished for the first offense with incapacity to hold office—on the second offense he was punished by three years' imprisonment without bail.

With the coming of the American Revolution and the adoption of the first constitution of Virginia, it was declared in the famous bill of rights that "all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience," but the Episcopal Church was left established by law and it was not until nine years later that Jefferson's Statute of Religious Liberty was passed, after a struggle which he described as being the severest in which he was ever engaged. This statute of which Jefferson was so justly proud is one of the world's great liberty documents, and belongs beside the Magna Charta, the Virginia Bill of Rights, and the Declaration of Independence. It is unique in that it carries upon its face the arguments upon which it was based and gives a faithful picture of the evils it was intended to correct. I ask your closest attention while I reverently read its immortal words:

"Whereas Almighty God hath created the mind free; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishment or burthens or by civil incapacitations tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness and are a departure from the plan of the Holy Author of our religion, who being Lord both of body and mind yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was His almighty power to do.

"That the impious presumption of legislators and rulers, civil as well as ecclesiastical, who being themselves but fallible and uninspired men have assumed dominion over the faith of others, setting up their own opinions and modes of thinking as the only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, have established and maintained false religions over the greatest part of the world and through all time.

"That to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves is sinful and tyrannical, and even forcing him to support this or that teacher of his own religious persuasion is depriving him of the comfortable liberty of giving his contributions to the particular pastor whose morals he would make his pattern and whose powers he feels most persuasive to righteousness, and is withdrawing from the ministry those temporal rewards which, proceeding from an approbation of their personal conduct, are an additional incitement to earnest and unremitting labors for the instruction of mankind.

"That our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions any more than our opinions in physics or geometry.

"That therefore the proscribing any citizen as unworthy the public confidence by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to offices of trust and emolument, unless he profess or renounce this or that religious opinion, is depriving him injuriously of those privileges and advantages to which, in common with his fellow citizens, he has a natural right.

"That it tends only to corrupt the principles of that religion it is meant to encourage, by bringing, with a monopoly of worldly honors and emoluments, those who will externally profess and conform to it.

"That though those are criminal who do not withstand such temptation, yet neither are those innocent who lay the bait in their way.

"That to suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion, and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency, is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all religious liberty, because he, being of course judge of that tendency, will make his opinions the rule of judgment and approve or condemn the sentiments of others only as they shall square with or differ from his own.

"That it is time enough for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break into overt acts against peace and good order.

"And, finally, that truth is great and will prevail, if left to herself; that she is the proper and sufficient antagonist of error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate; errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them.

"Be it enacted by the general assembly:

"That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever.

"Nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened, in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer on account of his religious opinions or belief.

"But that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.

"And though we well know that this assembly, elected by the people for the ordinary purposes of legislation only, have no power to restrain the acts of succeeding assemblies constituted with powers equal to our own, and that, therefore, to declare this act to be irrevocable would be of no effect in law, yet we are free to declare, and do declare, that the rights hereby asserted are the natural rights of mankind, and that if any act shall be hereafter passed to repeal the present or to narrow its operation such act will be an infringement of natural rights."

This statute, unchanged, is to-day a part of our Virginia Code, and its principles have been carried into our present constitution. When the statute was under discussion in the general assembly an incident occurred which clearly showed that the law was not intended for the protection of Christians only but for all mankind. An amendment was offered inserting the words "Jesus Christ" before the words "Holy Author of our religion," and the amendment was overwhelmingly defeated, and as our supreme court afterwards declared, "all religions were put on a footing of perfect equality; protecting all, imposing neither burdens or civil incapacities upon any; conferring privileges upon none, placing the Christian religion where it stood in the days of its purity before its alliance with the civil magistrate, and when its votaries employed for its advancement no methods but such as are congenial to its nature, proclaiming to all of our citizens that henceforth their religious thoughts and conversation shall be as free as the air they breathe, that the law is of no sect in religion, has no high priest but justice. Declaring to the Christian and the Mohammedan, the Jew and the Gentile, the Epicurean and the Platonist (if any there be among us) that so long as they keep within its pale all are equal objects of its protection."

To the minds of many, even to-day, religious liberty means liberty to Christian denominations only and to other religions simply toleration; but the word "toleration" has no place in our political vocabulary, for it carries with it an implication that we by our grace may extend to others the privilege of worshiping God as they may please, while as a matter of fact men do not worship God according to the dictates of their consciences by virtue of any man-given right. The gift is direct from God and is born with us. The state which undertakes to withhold that liberty is despotic and a state that assumes to grant it is presuming to dispense one of Heaven's gifts and has the seeds of despotism in its bosom.

Nor is this liberty of which we speak confined to religionists, for a man not only has the right to worship God in his own way, but he has an equal legal right not to worship Him at all. For as Jefferson asked, Why punish him in this life because you suppose he will be miserable in that life to come?

In the years immediately preceding the passage of the statute of religious liberty it had become conceded that the Episcopal Church should be entirely disestablished, and the opposition to Jefferson's proposal took the form of what was known as the general assessment bill, which provided for a tax to support all the churches but allowed each taxpayer to designate the particular church to which his taxes should be applied. The proposition seemed very plausible, and it looked as if it would be adopted, but here Jefferson's keen comprehension of the true meaning of religious liberty shone out above other statesmen of the day who had hitherto actively or passively supported his plan of disestablishment, and over the opposition of Washington, Henry, Pendleton, and Marshall, but with the earnest support of Madison, Jefferson saved his State from marring a great principle, for the general assessment bill compelled religious contributions. It would have reintroduced law and with it, force, its necessary concomitant, into the realm of religion. It would have denied the great truth that the state has no religious function, that religion is a matter between a man and his God, that religion is voluntary, while law rests on force, that error may need the support of government, that truth can stand by itself.

Like all men who think ahead of their times, Jefferson was misunderstood and grossly abused. His position on religious liberty was assailed with unrelenting bitterness by the pulpit and the press. When Jefferson was a candidate for President, Timothy Dwight, then president of Yale University, prophesied the most terrible consequences if the ungodly Virginian should rise to power. The extent of his bitterness may be seen in the picture he drew of the conditions which would follow Jefferson's election: "Bibles would be cast into bonfires, the vessels of the sacramental supper would be borne by an ass in public procession followed by our children chanting mockeries against God, our wives and daughters victims of legal prostitution, speciously deluded, outcasts of delicacy, united in the loathing of God and man." This was but illustrative of the abuse to which Jefferson was subjected on account of his fight for soul liberty, and this abuse took such lodgment in misguided minds that pious women in New England, when they heard that Jefferson was elected, buried their Bibles to keep Jefferson from burning them.

How woefully the great philosopher was misunderstood! No statesman ever made a greater contribution to the cause of true religion, the real essence of which he comprehended much more clearly than his detractors. They charged him with lack of reverence for religion, but, as Bryan once said, "He is irreverent who thinks that religion needs support of government, not he who thinks that religion can defend itself."

I wonder if any of those who so cruelly misrepresented Jefferson have ever invented a better method of judging others than that disclosed by the great man when he said, "I have ever judged the religion of others by their lives, for it is in our lives, not in our words, that our religion must be read." And again, "It is a fair inference that if a life has been honest and dutiful to society, the religion which regulated it can not be a bad one." And further, "To produce the fruits of piety is far more important than to explain them."

All religions are beneficiaries of Jefferson's great struggle, for history has proven that religion flourishes most under those governments which as such seek to help it least. And yet there are some to-day still unconvinced and are trying to invoke the strong arm of the law in aid of religion. These good people forget the truth so well stated by another, "Nothing is worse done than that which is ill done for religion; that must not be done in defense of religion which is contrary to religion." And here let me repeat that religion is voluntary—law rests on force. Enforced religion is no religion at all.

Of all the wonderful sentiments which came from the heart and mind of Jefferson, there is one that grips my soul as none other. Said he, "I have sworn on the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." Note that his hostility was against every form of tyranny over the mind. There was a tyranny of law, now happily passed away, but there remains in all its cruelty a tyranny which proscribes, ostracizes, denounces, and condemns those who dare think for themselves. The spirit of religious liberty will never be completely enthroned until men have a more decent regard for the opinions of others.

True, all now concede the rights of conscience; but often it is a reluctant concession, a reluctance which seemingly says, "Yes; true you have the right to make a fool of yourself; but as you do not agree with me, you are abusing your privilege." Such an attitude was well illustrated by a remark made in 1785 by a Member of the General Assembly who was appealed to by a committee of humble Baptists to vote for Jefferson's statute of religious liberty. His condescending reply was, "I am clear for giving all a fair chance. There are many roads to Heaven, and I am in favor of letting every man take his own way; but one thing I am sure—no gentleman would ever choose any but the Episcopal road."

It was ever a source of sorrow to Jefferson's great soul that so many were not liberal enough to distinguish between religious and social opposition and who transferred at once to his person the hatred they bore to his religious opinions. He declared "that the opinions and beliefs of men depend not on their own will but follow involuntarily the evidence proposed to their minds." One of his biographers remarks that opinions are determined by the general sum of experience and knowledge and there is a childish failure in dignity in permitting them to act as a divisive force between individuals. Jefferson "never permitted himself to bear this mark of immaturity" and always gave his bitterest opponents all possible evidence of personal esteem.

And right here let me say that at the risk of being called provincial I give you my definition of a Virginia gentleman. He is one who can disagree without being disagreeable. Such a gentleman was Jefferson.

Why is it that those who so freely concede my rights of property and my rights of person condemn me when I come to exercise my right to freedom of opinion?

Those who sympathize with the man who would take our property or attack our persons we class as bad men, but those who through ostracism and denunciation seek to limit our freedom of opinion are often otherwise good men and not infrequently they are religious leaders. Indeed, this may be called a vice of the virtuous.

Those who deny my rights of property are partners of thieves and scoundrels—those who deny my rights of person are partners of thugs and assassins, but strange to say those who deny my rights of conscience claim partnership with God. Rights of property, rights of person, rights of conscience, these three, but the greatest of these are rights of conscience. Truly this is a blood-bought blessing, but it can not be long enjoyed except by those who love it and are willing to defend it. To fight the slightest encroachment upon it is resistance to tyranny, which is obedience to God.

In conclusion, Baptists were pioneers in the field of absolute religious liberty, just and true liberty, equal and impartial liberty. It is the greatest service Baptists have rendered to the world. Jefferson was the political genius who took up the fight and caused the principle to be recognized by government, making his greatest contribution to political science. Thus Jefferson and the Baptists became colaborers in a great cause. When the Baptists began to fight they were weak and obscure. Now, under the providence of God, they have become great and powerful. Let it not be said of us that our love of right was for ourselves only. Let us resist with vigor every effort to mar this sacred principle for which we have stood. Let us fight every encroachment, however slight, on the right of minority sects.

"Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now."

Resting under the protecting shade of this mighty oak planted by the hands of our Baptist forefathers, let us say to those who lift the axe against it, "Woodman, spare that tree; touch not a single bough. In our days of weakness it sheltered us, and we'll protect it now."

AT THE TOMB OF GEORGE WASHINGTON, MOUNT VERNON, VA.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address which I delivered at Mount Vernon to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address at Mount Vernon, Va., under the auspices of the American Conference on Institutions for the Establishment of International Justice, May 2, 1932:

This is a place of dreams; a place of reverie; a place of solemn memories. Standing beneath the glory of these majestic trees, before the tomb of him who lies within this ancient vault, we come as humble pilgrims, as children, seeking comfort, inspiration, and courage from the great life which ended here.

About us is the quiet, brooding spirit of George Washington. It is the calm spirit, the beautiful spirit, the courageous spirit of the man who gave so much to us. Here we feel in our most sensitive natures the soul of America—the America that George Washington brought into being and which he did all that was humanly possible to preserve after his time by leaving us his precepts and his advice.

I believe that if that long-silent voice could issue from the shadows of this shrine to us, his countrymen, he would bid us have courage, have faith, and be strong. I believe that if we attuned ourselves to that infinite spiritual message we would go from this place with new loyalty and new confidence in our future.

These are dark days for America, but no darker than the days which he experienced, and our situation is not so desperate as was his. We must take heart of his courage, faith of his steadfastness, and live with his immortal example as a light to our faltering feet.

We are apt to think in these gloomy days that our troubles are mountainous. We are afraid and uncertain. These are qualities which George Washington knew not. For at every point in his life he demonstrated exactly those qualities of mind and heart which we of to-day should strive to acquire.

The great man who lies within this silent tomb left us more than riches, more than material heritage, more even than the Nation which he created, for he left us those guiding principles to answer every national question and to form every national policy within his field of vision. And we are now only beginning to discover how far his vision extended into the future.

His rich and fruitful years brought him a harvest of wisdom which he, in his greatness, has left to us. Alert to every important political force and movement of his own time, he traced with unerring instinct the course these forces were to follow in later years and what would be their effect and consequences.

His was not only a great life rounded with the wisdom and the character of a perfect career but his also was a mind so strongly developed that he looked far into the future and left for us those standards of policy and of life that to-day, if we acknowledged and followed them, would surely lead us on out of the valley of discouragement and doubt to the shining heights of success and prosperity.

We who have been organizing the great world-wide ceremonies that mark the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth have been examining his life, his deeds, and especially his opinions with a new interest, and the result has been to discover in him the most powerful intellect that America has yet produced. But intellect without unselfishness is barren; wisdom without charity is empty.

George Washington left us a heritage greater than wealth, greater than station, greater than all the vanities of the world. He left us all of the knowledge and wisdom which he had acquired and which could be applied to the problems of a future America.

These priceless possessions belong to us. They came from the heart and the mind of the man who lived in this beautiful spot and whose bodily remains rest so close to us. Here we come into intimate communion with his life and also with the soul which passed beyond. Here we must feel our dependence upon his wisdom to guide us in our social and political lives as we feel dependent upon the God of mercy to lead us in our moral lives.

There is not a problem confronting us to-day, there is not a danger threatening us, that was not in some manner embodied in the vision of this greatest of our people. In so far as our country has remained true to its ideals and safely progressing toward its appointed destiny, it has accomplished this by leaning upon the teachings left to us by this man.

What if George Washington could not foresee the progress in transportation, communication, and science that has given this country a different aspect from that which he knew? What if George Washington did not hear the scream of a locomotive, or see airplanes flying over his beloved estate? These are not fundamental influences upon the human heart. They do not in themselves affect the souls of men and women.

The human instincts which George Washington knew so well have remained unchanged amid all this superficial miracle of development, and it is to the hearts of men of his day and for all future days that George Washington made his appeal.

He knew that men's hearts would never change. Men are of restless minds, and for this reason George Washington deemed it fit that he should work through the hearts of men to give them a sound, kindly conception of their duties to God, their country, and to themselves.

As nearly as it was humanly possible George Washington and his compatriots gave us an unchanging form of government, and we must acknowledge the transcendent wisdom which created that form of government when we remember that in principle it is exactly the same to-day as it was when promulgated by the Constitutional Convention over which George Washington presided.

It is because these fundamentals do remain unchanged and, please God, ever will remain unchanged that we continue to be a nation with unlimited ages of progress before us. But if our future as a nation is to remain secure we need always to rely on the affectionate and fatherly advice left to us by George Washington and the other great men of his time.

If this celebration in honor of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington has accomplished nothing else than to direct our minds to a more serious consideration of his rich store of political wisdom, it would have been justified. For in that wisdom lies safety. For in that wisdom lies every national attribute that makes for stability and the happiness of our people.

As a youthful colonel on his first diplomatic and military errands against hostile forces on American soil, George Washington had impressed upon his mind the need of bringing the scattered Colonies together. He saw their need of a new sense of nationalism if they were to live in peace for the future.

As Commander in Chief of the Revolutionary Armies he began his twin labors as military leader and as statesman. While saving the Colonies themselves, he began that colossal work of welding them into one Nation and one people which is to-day our proud America.

As counselor, advisor, and conciliator, he kept a watchful eye upon the progress of the framing of the Constitution upon which he pinned his hopes and desires.

As President, he began the work of creating out of these principles and policies a fabric of government which has outlasted time itself.

We can not read the record of George Washington's life without realizing that it was a life of continuous struggle. At no time, save in the few brief years of his retirement here upon this lovely estate, was George Washington free from care or the burdens of responsibility. These cares and responsibilities were not for himself but always for his country and his countrymen, always for others; and in his great heart he thought of us to-day. Sacrifice, suffering, danger—these were with him during his days and nights.

With devout and yearning hearts we stand here in reverence beside his tomb to catch the fleeting breath of his presence. His message comes to us through that mysterious transmission of spirit that is breathed in the hush of this moment and this place. The infinite peace of God is his. Here his love and his care sustain us in the sure knowledge that he is with us and is pointing the way. He is ever pointing the way. The commander and the comrade rides ahead.

If Washington were alive to-day, would he bow his head in discouragement before the problems which we face? If that inanimate clay which lies in this sacred place should breathe again, would George Washington say to us that all is lost? Would he who brought the Nation into being fear for its safety after all the years of its glorious history?

I say no!

George Washington, with that steady, inflexible purpose, that judgment and knowledge which he possessed, would calm the turbulent waters of our present unrest and bid us go on to a greater destiny.

That is the spirit of George Washington. That is the soul which we acknowledge here in this quiet spot. No greater tribute could we pay to him who lies within this tomb than to rededicate ourselves to him and to his purposes.

No greater thing could we do for ourselves than to stand here at this solemn hour and say we will go forward with George Washington, and under God's guidance we will achieve, we will succeed, we will preserve that which he gave us.

The benediction of our Creator is here. The peace of God is upon us. We should go forth armed with new courage, new wisdom, and new determination. Thus armed we will preserve our country, and we will keep faith with Washington.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 4313. An act to prevent the successive disagreement of two juries, impaneled to try a criminal case in the Territory of Hawaii, from operating as an acquittal of the accused or from permitting the discharge of the accused from custody; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7119. An act to authorize the modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 3, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Tuesday, May 3, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m.)

Continue hearings on soldiers' bonus.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

Wild-life conservation (S. 263).

COMMITTEE ON LABOR

(10 a. m.)

Metcalf prevailing wage bill.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

(10.30 a. m.)

Steagall banking bill.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 9840. A bill providing a nautical school at the port of New London, Conn.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1191). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia: Committee on Naval Affairs. H. R. 11332. A bill to abolish the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics; without amendment (Rept. No. 1192). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOLMES: Committee on the District of Columbia: H. R. 10138. A bill to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1176). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HOLMES: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 570. An act to exempt from taxation certain property used by the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1177). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HOLMES: Committee on the District of Columbia. S. 1203. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the National Society United States Daughters of 1812 in the District of Columbia; without amendment (Rept. No. 1178). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Committee on Claims. H. R. 1938. A bill for the relief of Katherine G. Taylor; without amendment (Rept. No. 1179). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Committee on Claims. H. R. 2188. A bill for the relief of Arthur K. Finney; with amendment (Rept. No. 1180). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3848. A bill for the relief of Ed Symes and wife, Elizabeth Symes, and certain other citizens of the State of Texas; with amendment (Rept. No. 1181). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Committee on Claims. H. R. 4064. A bill for the relief of Sarah Maddocks Ferguson; without amendment (Rept. No. 1182). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6774. A bill to authorize amendment of the act of February 25, 1927, for the payment of damages caused by reason of the overflow of the Rio Grande on August 17, 1921; with amendment (Rept. No. 1183). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SCHAFER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6785. A bill for the relief of Jose Ramon Cordova; with amendment (Rept. No. 1184). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina: Committee on Claims. H. R. 6975. A bill for the relief of Rufus Hunter Blackwell, jr.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1185). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7649. A bill for the relief of Charles A. Brown; with amendment (Rept. No. 1186). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7654. A bill for the relief of Vincent J. Conrad; without amendment (Rept. No. 1187). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SCHAFER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10104. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Burton S. Adams, deceased; without amendment (Rept. No. 1188). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MILLER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10891. A bill to provide for the reimbursement of Guillermo Medina, hydrographic surveyor, for the value of personal effects lost in the capsizing of a Navy whaleboat off Galera Island, Gulf of Panama; without amendment (Rept. No. 1189). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SCHAFER: Committee on Claims. S. 1586. An act for the relief of the estate of Peter Paul Franzel, deceased; without amendment (Rept. No. 1190). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GLOVER: A bill (H. R. 11750) for the relief of the widows of Spanish-American War veterans; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11751) to regulate interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CRISP: A bill (H. R. 11752) granting a pardon to Lieut. Thomas S. Massie, Mrs. Granville Fortescue, Albert O. Jones, and E. J. Lord; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOOFBOUROW: A bill (H. R. 11753) to provide for additional water supply for the Utah National Guard training camp on the Jordan Narrows Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: A bill (H. R. 11754) to grant compensation, disability allowance, or pension to enlisted men retired from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, and transferred members of the Fleet Naval and Marine Corps Reserves; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DELANEY: Resolution (H. Res. 209) to pardon Lieut. Thomas H. Massie, Edward John Lord, Albert Orrin Jones, and Mr. Granville R. Fortescue; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 378) authorizing an appropriation as the contribution of the United States to the expenses of the Permanent Court of International Justice for the calendar year 1932; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 11755) for the relief of Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOLTON: A bill (H. R. 11756) for the relief of Edward D. Wilson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARDEN: A bill (H. R. 11757) granting a pension to Frances Vaughn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTWRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 11758) to renew and extend certain letters patent to James B. Coffey; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 11759) for the relief of Jeremiah T. Sullivan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CROWE: A bill (H. R. 11760) for the relief of Oscar L. McCallen; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNERY: A bill (H. R. 11761) granting a pension to Jennie R. Dix; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11762) granting a pension to Mary F. O'Brien; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11763) granting a pension to Helen E. Trefethen; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11764) granting a pension to Sarah Linnehan; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11765) granting a pension to Myra A. Pennington; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11766) granting an increase of pension to Jennie Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11767) granting an increase of pension to Melissa E. Bemis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11768) granting an increase of pension to John Albert Fritz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11769) for the relief of Joseph O'Toole; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11770) for the relief of Daniel Joseph Hartie; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11771) for the relief of Joseph H. Higgins; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11772) for the relief of Frank Hansen; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11773) for the relief of Joseph Warren Roach; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11774) for the relief of Philip F. Haley; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11775) for the relief of Harold F. Jones; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11776) for the relief of Franklin R. Kelley; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11777) for the relief of Ellen A. Farrelly; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11778) for the relief of William J. B. Hughes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11779) for the relief of Andrew V. Donovan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11780) for the relief of Harry Melville Rollins; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11781) for the relief of Arthur Jannelle; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11782) for the relief of Joseph W. Christ; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11783) for the relief of Herbert F. Williams; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11784) for the relief of Harrison F. Morton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11785) for the relief of Henry J. McCann; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11786) for the relief of Edward F. Maney; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11787) for the relief of Frank H. Vose; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11788) for the relief of Charles A. Worth; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11789) for the relief of Herbert E. Robbins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DELANEY: A bill (H. R. 11790) granting a pension to Mildred M. Tracy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DRANE: A bill (H. R. 11791) for the relief of James S. Johnson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11792) for the relief of Charles R. Reagin; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 11793) for the relief of T. R. Flinchum; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREENWOOD: A bill (H. R. 11794) granting an increase of pension to Clementine Young; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11795) granting an increase of pension to Mary Agnes Dunlap; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H. R. 11796) for the relief of Raymond A. Wolf; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HART: A bill (H. R. 11797) granting an increase of pension to Sarah F. Carpenter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11798) to authorize the addition of certain names to the final roll of the Sac and Fox Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 11799) granting a pension to Lucy C. Montgomery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11800) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Laird; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLY of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 11801) for the relief of Matt Andriasevich; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11802) for the relief of Nick Bernath; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUDLOW: A bill (H. R. 11803) granting a pension to Peter Straub; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11804) granting a pension to Carrie J. Dahn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 11805) granting a pension to Sarah B. King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLK: A bill (H. R. 11806) granting a pension to Cecil Mason; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 11807) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Robison; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11808) granting a pension to Mary Sullivan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7342. By Mr. BOHN: Petition of Ira D. MacLachlan Post, No. 3, the American Legion of Sault Ste Marie, Mich., favoring the maintenance of the national defense; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7343. By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Petition of Yankton Chamber of Commerce, Yankton, S. Dak., requesting the passage of the Frazier bill, S. 1; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7344. By Mr. DRANE: Petition of 4,500 citizens of Florida, supporting House bill 1; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7345. Also, petition of citizens of Florida, protesting against compulsory Sunday observance; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7346. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition signed by the members of engine company No. 7 of the fire department of Yonkers, N. Y., opposing the curtailment of privileges and the reduction of salaries of Federal employees; to the Committee on Economy.

7347. By Mr. FRENCH: Petition signed by 17 citizens of Weiser, Idaho, protesting against compulsory Sunday observance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7348. By Mr. HESS: Resolution of the North-West Building & Loan Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio, opposing Federal pay cuts for employees receiving $2,500 per year or less; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7349. Also, resolution adopted by the City Council of Cincinnati, Ohio, protesting against the contemplated abolition of the United States customs office in Cincinnati; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7350. By Mr. JENKINS: Petition signed by about 150 citizens of Jackson County, Ohio, petitioning Congress not to pass House bills 8092 or 8759, or any other compulsory Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7351. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of the New York Tow Boat Exchange, New York City, favoring the coordination and consolidation of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service in a new bureau to be known as the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, as provided for in House bill 11207; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

7352. Also, petition of the National Grange, favoring the Goldsborough bill, H. R. 11499; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7353. By Mr. PARKER of Georgia: Petition of H. G. Hinley and seven other citizens of Herndon, Ga., urging the enactment of legislation regulating busses and trucks engaged in hauling passengers and freight; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7354. Also, petition of J. T. Aranda, of Savannah, Ga., and 23 other citizens of Georgia, urging the passage of railroad pension bill, H. R. 9891, and voicing opposition to Senate bill 3892 and House bill 10023; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7355. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of C. Ludwig Bauman & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing the elimination of the deduction of net losses sustained in a previous year; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7356. Also, petition of the National Grange, favoring the passage of the Goldsborough bill, H. R. 11499; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7357. By Mr. SANDERS of New York: Petition of the directors of the Monroe County Farm Bureau, urging that House bill 10517, a bill for increasing and stabilizing the price level of commodities, be promptly reported to the House; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7358. Also, petition of the directors of the Monroe County (N. Y.) Farm Bureau, favoring the Norbeck-Steagall bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7359. By Mr. SHOTT: Resolution adopted by the Imperial Colliery Co. Safety Club, of Burnwell, W. Va., with a membership of 331, opposing as detrimental to the bituminous-coal industry the passage of the legislation known as the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7360. Also, petition of the Scarbro Safety Club, of 225 members, Scarbro, W. Va., opposing passage of the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7361. Also, resolution adopted by the Summerlee Safety Club, of Summerlee, W. Va., representing a membership of 275, opposing the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7362. Also, resolution adopted by the Lochgelly Safety Club, Lochgelly, W. Va., with a membership of 205, opposing the passage of the legislation known as the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7363. Also, resolution adopted by the Alpha Poca Coal Co. Safety Club, Alpoca, W. Va., with a membership of 175, opposing passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7364. Also, resolution of the Kiwanis Club of Charleston, opposing the passage of the bill known as the Evans bill, H. R. 5840; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

7365. Also, resolution adopted by the American Legion, Wyoming County Post, No. 106, Mullens, W. Va., requesting that Congress pay the adjusted-service certificates in full at once without deduction of any interest due on loans already made on such certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7366. Also, resolutions adopted by Groups 3 and 4 of the West Virginia Bankers Association, opposing the Davis-Kelly bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7367. Also, letter of the Emmons Hawkins Hardware Co., of Huntington, W. Va., and signed by J. L. Hawkins, vice president and treasurer, opposing as disastrous to the bituminous-coal industry the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7368. Also, resolution passed by the Norton Safety Club, Norton, W. Va., opposing the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7369. Also, resolution of the Winding Gulf Safety Club, with a membership of 600, Winding Gulf, W. Va., opposing the bill known as the Davis-Kelly coal bill as detrimental to the bituminous-coal industry; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7370. Also, resolution of the Covel Safety Club, Covel, W. Va., representing a membership of 150, opposing the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7371. Also, letter signed by R. E. L. Quesenberry, of Kimball, W. Va., representing 21 shop employees on the Norfolk & Western, opposing as harmful and dangerous to the bituminous-coal industry the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7372. Also, letter signed by M. M. Harris, H. F. Brooks, and Grat Rose, of Willcoe, and representing 33 shop employees on the Norfolk & Western, opposing passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7373. Also, resolution adopted by the Whipple Safety Club, Whipple, W. Va., composed of a membership of 300, opposing as detrimental to the bituminous-coal industry the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7374. Also, resolution passed by the Prudence and Harvey Safety Club, of Harvey, W. Va., with a membership of 330, opposing the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7375. Also, resolution adopted by the Oakwood Safety Club, of Carlisle, W. Va., with a membership of 350, opposing the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal control bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7376. Also, resolution passed by the Southwestern Virginia (Inc.), of Wytheville, Va., a regional chamber of commerce, opposing the Davis-Kelly coal control bill as interference to a free and competitive selection of suitable coals to meet the requirements of various sections of the country serving that entire section; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7377. Also, letter signed by C. H. Woods, H. W. Gillette, R. B. Muncy, J. M. Plymale, and J. C. Brown, all of Kenova, W. Va., and representing 33 shop employees of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, opposing, as interfering with the production and development of the coal industry in the territory served by that railroad, the passage of the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7378. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Resolution of the Mallory Safety Club, Mallory, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7379. Also, resolution of the Landville Safety Club, Landville, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7380. Also, resolution of the Accoville Safety Club, Accoville, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7381. Also, resolution of the Youngstown Mines Safety Club, of Dehue, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7382. Also, resolution of the Jodie Safety Club, of Jodie, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7383. Also, resolution of the Marfrance Safety Club, of Marfrance, W. Va., opposing the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7384. By Mr. WHITE: Petition of citizens of the city of Toledo, Ohio, protesting against legislation before this House to compel Sunday observance; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, and Fisheries.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 3, 1932

(Legislative day of Friday, April 29, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 460. An act to give war-time commissioned rank to retired warrant officers and enlisted men;

S. 2428. An act to provide for the confirmation of a selection of certain lands by the State of Arizona for the benefit of the University of Arizona;

S. 2967. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; and

S. 3953. An act to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain."

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 283. An act to provide for conveyance of a certain strip of land on Fenwick Island, Sussex County, State of Delaware, for roadway purposes; and

S. 3908. An act to amend title 33, chapter 4, section 252, paragraph (a), of the Navigation Rules for the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2396) to amend section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), relating to the admission into the Union of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 24) thanking the Governor of the State of Virginia for the statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 79. An act to provide for conveyance of a portion of the Liston Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation, New Castle County, State of Delaware, for highway purposes;

H. R. 4709. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Orlando, Fla.;

H. R. 6688. An act to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight;

H. R. 8393. An act providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States;

H. R. 8578. An act to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, by providing allowances for widows and children and dependent parents of veterans of the World War;

H. R. 9306. An act to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 180), as amended;

H. R. 10683. An act to provide for the conveyance by the United States of a certain tract of land to the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut;

H. R. 10829. An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii;

H. R. 11057. An act to amend section 129 of the Criminal Code of the United States;

H. R. 11337. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the Federal building site in Dover, N. J., for another site; and

H. R. 11499. An act for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to enable me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kean	Schall
Austin	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smith
Blaine	Fletcher	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	George	Long	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Metcalf	Trammell
Capper	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Howell	Pittman	Waterman
Costigan	Hull	Reed	Watson
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	White
Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask that the resignation of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] from the following committees be accepted: Commerce, Naval Affairs, Manufactures, and Interoceanic Canals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Louisiana will be excused from further attendance upon the committees named.

On request of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Commerce; that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Naval Affairs; that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COHEN] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Manufactures; that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Interoceanic Canals; and that the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE PRESIDENT'S 5-DAY WEEK PROPOSAL—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, this morning the Washington Herald on the first page had the following statement:

Senator ODDIE and Representatives SNELL and TILSON told President Hoover they still hope to put through his 5-day week and payless furlough plan for reducing the Federal pay roll.

An error has occurred in the making of the statement. I did not visit the White House yesterday, and, furthermore, I do not approve of the 5-day week and the payless furlough. I have repeatedly stated my objections to it on the floor of the Senate. I believe it would be disheartening and damaging to the industry of the country, and I believe we can get along better without it.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask to have placed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of Commerce, Hon. R. P. Lamont, in reference to messages concerning his department.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, May 3, 1932.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: During a debate in the Senate last Saturday you asked how many letters or telegrams had been sent out by the Department of Commerce similar to the one you read into the RECORD. The question was not answered.

A search of our files shows a total of 30 in all, divided between eight States, as follows:

State	Telegram	Letter	Total
Tennessee	1		1
Louisiana	6		6
South Carolina	1	5	6
Indiana	2	4	6
North Carolina		6	6
Texas	2		2
Iowa		1	1
Wisconsin		2	2
Total	12	18	30

I can assure you that each one sent out was in reply to a message received.

Sincerely yours,

R. P. LAMONT,
Secretary of Commerce.

DUTY ON SUGAR

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have a critical condition in my State due to the trouble over the differential between raw and refined sugar. I ask that in the body of the RECORD at this point may be included the short statement which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE SUGAR INSTITUTE AS OF MAY 2, 1932

If imports of sugar refined in Cuba continue to increase at their present rate the sugar industries of the United States will be destroyed in 10 years. This is the contention of the domestic industries in a brief filed with the United States Tariff Commission for an increase in the duty on refined sugar. The brief emphatically states an increase in duty would not raise sugar prices to the consumer.

Exports to the United States of sugar refined in Cuba have grown from only 1,182 tons in 1925 to 320,987 tons in 1931. Exports from January 1 to March 26, 1932, were 53 per cent greater than exports during the corresponding period of 1931. "If the average rate of increase in the imports of Cuban refined sugar since 1925 is continued," the brief says, "it will take the new Cuban industry only 10 years entirely to supplant the domestic-sugar industries of the United States." These are the beet and cane producers and cane refiners.

In explaining why a higher duty would not raise the price paid for sugar by the United States consumer, the brief directs attention to the competition between the various units of each industry and the competition between the cane-refining industry and the beet-sugar industry.

Any artificial increase in price, it is held, even if such an increase were possible, would nullify by just so much the additional protection afforded by a higher duty. "What the industry asks for," the brief says, "is not a higher price for its product, but a restoration of its lost volume."

In pointing out the serious nature of the Cuban threat to United States labor and investors, the brief states that the domestic-sugar industries operate 173 mills or refineries in 24 States, pay $37,330,769 annually in salaries and wages, and purchase annually $521,582,617 worth of materials, fuel, and electric power.

Cuba's ability to supplant the product of the domestic industries, the brief states, is due partly to the fact that the present tariff, instead of affording protection to the domestic-cane refiners actually enables the Cuban refiner to bring his refined sugar into this country upon the payment of less duty than the domestic-cane refiner must pay on the amount of Cuban raw sugar he requires to produce an equivalent amount of refined.

The brief asserts that the Cuban refiner also has the advantage of lower labor costs, lower taxes, lower land values, transportation rates to markets in this country that in many cases are lower than the domestic refiner must pay to carry his product from the refinery to those same markets.

"Since 1925," the brief says, "Cuba has built seven refineries. In all she now has nine. Eleven more are planned, awaiting only the outcome of the present petition. By employing cheap labor at one-fourth the wages of American labor, Cuban refineries," says the brief, "can entirely supplant the American industries in a few years."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Lafayette Clubs of San Francisco, San Rafael, and Santa Rosa, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation legalizing the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer, which were referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Charles P. Green, of Hot Springs, S. Dak., urging an investigation of certain charges against the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the personnel of the Veterans' Administration, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Atascadero Woman's Club, of Atascadero, Calif., favoring the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the national executive committee of the American Turnerbund, of Pittsburgh, Pa., favoring the adoption of the 6-hour day and the 5-day week so as to diminish unemployment, and also submitting recommendations relative to unemployment relief and other matters, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Frank G. Cunningham, of St. Louis, Mo., in regard to relief in certain cases of life-insurance policies and the investigation of short selling in the stock market, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Philanthropy and Civics Club, of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation making it a crime to advocate or promote the overthrow or destruction of the Government by force or violence, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Philanthropy and Civics Club, of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the passage of legislation strengthening the immigration laws, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Veterans of the Revolution Pro-Independist of the Philippines, favoring the independence of the Philippine Islands, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Washington, D. C., by the Baltimore Archdiocesan Union of Holy Name Societies, recording their support of the President of the United States and the Congress in the efforts made to stimulate confidence in business institutions and to bring about a renewal of financial and industrial conditions that make for happiness and comfort, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Graham County, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the closing of barber shops on Sunday in the District of Columbia or other restrictive religious measures, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARBOUR presented communications in the nature of memorials from Glendora Grange, No. 168, of Como; Milltown Grange, No. 151, of Milltown; Lincoln Grange, No. 136, of Westwood; Sidney Progressive Grange, No. 215, of Sidney; Fenwick Grange, No. 20, of Harmersville; Hamilton Grange, No. 79, of Hamilton Square; Rancocas Grange, No. 131, of Burlington; Swedesboro Grange, of Swedesboro; Monmouth Grange, No. 92, of Freehold; Mickleton Grange, No. 111, of Mickleton; Saddle River Grange, No. 144, of Saddle River; Cape May Grange, No. 128, of Dias Creek; Olive Branch Grange, No. 142, of Matawan; Mount Bethel Grange, No. 201, of Mount Bethel; Lawrenceville Grange, No. 170, of Lawrenceville; Harrisonville Grange, No. 26, of Woodstown; Aura Grange, No. 122, of Aura; Adelphia Grange, No. 196, of Adelphia; Wayne Township Grange, No. 145, of Preakness; Acquackanonk Grange, No. 183, of Clifton; Columbus Grange, No. 58, of Columbus; Blue Anchor Grange, No. 166, of Blue Anchor; Mount View Grange, No. 137, of Mount View; Allenwood Grange, No. 193, of Allenwood; Centre Grove Grange, No. 57, of Millville; Williamstown Grange, No. 85, of Williamstown; New Market Grange, No. 152, of New Market; Cedarville Grange, No. 34, of Cedarville; Vernon Valley Grange, No. 134, of Vernon; Franklin Grange, of Wyckoff; and Washington Grange, No. 117, of Washington, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the imposition of additional taxes upon the automobile industry, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution of members of the North River Presbyterial Society of the State of New York, praying for action looking to protection of the reindeer in Alaska for the Esquimos, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

He also presented a resolution of the Aeries of Southwestern Washington, Fraternal Order of Eagles, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of Federal home loan banks, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Ca-Choo Club, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., requesting an investigation of the cause and prevention of hay fever, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Manufacturers' Association of Syracuse, and a petition of citizens of Cazenovia, in the State of New York, praying for the modification of the national prohibition law, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution of the Central Supply Association, of Chicago, Ill., favoring retrenchment in governmental expenditures, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Yonkers, N. Y., remonstrating against reductions in salaries or curtailment of privileges of Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution of the Dryden Aggies, Chapter No. 37, Dryden High School, of Dryden, N. Y., favoring moderate reductions in appropriations and opposing curtailment of the appropriations for agricultural extension and vocational education, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition in the form of a resolution adopted by Fleet Reserve Association, Branch No. 26, of New York City, N. Y., and a petition of citizens of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the cash payment of World War veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Ithaca Post, No. 221, the American Legion, of Ithaca, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Patman soldiers' bonus bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Canandaigua Post, No. 256, and Ralph Baldwin Post, No. 845, the American Legion, of Canandaigua and Frankfort, N. Y., respectively, remonstrating against the passage of legislation curtailing the benefits accorded to World War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New York remonstrating against the imposition of taxes on automobiles, motor trucks, parts, accessories, gasoline, and lubricating oil, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Mercer Club, of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the imposition of taxes on the automotive industry and allied industries and favoring the manufacturers' sales tax in lieu thereof, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

TAXES ON GRAPE JUICE AND CONCENTRATES

Mr. WAGNER presented a telegram from C. D. Champlin, of Hammondsport, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HAMMONDSPORT, N. Y., April 29, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

In considering the taxation of grape juice and concentrates may we call your attention to fact that the grape industry is practically bankrupt, and that any extreme taxation will restrict present markets. The forced use of benzoate of soda as a preservative will further curtail markets by preventing the use of grape products in the baking and allied industries. We are in a bad way and, while desirous of assuming our just share, ask that the committee give regard to our present state.

C. D. CHAMPLIN.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. FLETCHER presented minutes of a special meeting of the Dade County (Fla.) Bar Association, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A special meeting of the bar association was held in the circuit court room, Miami, Fla., Thursday, April 28, 1932, at 4 p. m., in pursuance of a regular call.

M. L. Mershon, president, presided, and declared that a quorum existed. He announced that the purpose of the meeting was to consider the proposed amendment to the national bankruptcy act, Senate bill No. 3866, House bill No. 9968, and called upon Herbert U. Feibelman, chairman of the bankruptcy committee, to submit a report which it had. Mr. Feibelman thereupon read the report, as follows:

"We, your standing committee on bankruptcy, beg leave to report as follows:

"There is pending before Congress an amendment to the national bankruptcy act, being Senate bill No. 3866, House bill No. 9968, known as the administration bill. Your committee has carefully read the measure; and while all of its features have not been thoroughly digested, your committee is prepared to say that such an innovation in the practice, not only in this country but elsewhere, should not be undertaken without the most thorough consideration and study.

"Many of the features of the proposed measure appear to your committee to be charged with possible difficulties and are of doubtful worth. Your committee is not prepared to approve the creation of a special bankruptcy bureau, with numerous high-priced officials answerable only to a bureau in Washington, resulting, it would seem, in a division of responsibility, which would tend to open the gateway to fraud, rather than centralize responsibility and prevent fraud.

"Your committee believes that the features of suspending the discharge of a bankrupt subject to the surveillance of nonresident officials of the new bankruptcy bureau would tend in great measure to prevent the economic recovery of failing merchants and not promote the morale of the citizenship. Your committee believes it to be the purpose of the bankruptcy act to rehabilitate the weak and strengthen those who, through circumstances beyond their control, have unfortunately failed in business. The proposed act, in its effort to apprehend the fraudulent merchant, necessarily would prevent many good citizens from starting life anew after an unfortunate failure.

"Your committee believes that the greatly increased costs through fees allowed officials of the bankruptcy court are hardly justified by the experience in this jurisdiction, where the compensation allowed such officials has been considered ample, and your committee believes that these additional burdens upon bankruptcy administration would deter rather than encourage the use of the act, and would defeat one of its main purposes—the prompt, orderly, and economic liquidation of insolvent estates. Your committee expresses full confidence in the Federal courts to administer insolvent estates under the existing bankruptcy act, as last amended, and believes that the proposed amendment was patterned more nearly in the light of the peculiar and abhorrent conditions that did obtain in certain eastern bankruptcy courts than in the light of conditions throughout the country, particularly in south Florida.

"We do not believe that the bench and bar of the Federal court, generally, has become so abject as to require the denial of responsibility under the proposed amendment; and we, therefore, recommend to the bar association the adoption of the following resolution:

"Be it resolved by the Dade County Bar Association, in meeting regularly assembled, That it is the sense of this organization that the proposed amendment to the national bankruptcy act, being Senate bill No. 3866 and House bill No. 9968, provides such a drastic innovation in bankruptcy administration as warrants the careful and extended study of Congress and interested persons before its adoption as law; that the added expenses of administration provided by the law, as well as other features, tend to discourage rather than encourage the use of the act, and would not only increase the cost of administration but would diminish the returns to creditors and promote fraud; that this association considers the creation of a bankruptcy bureau without assurance of added efficiency in bankruptcy administration, but with a division of responsibility rather than a centralization thereof, and with full confidence in the integrity and ability of the Federal bench and bar, this association urges that Congress permit the present law to remain until, after careful study and investigation, actual improvements in the methods of bankruptcy administration have been devised and demonstrated.

"Respectfully yours,

"HERBERT U. FEIBELMAN, Chairman.
"RUDOLPH ISOM.
"HOWARD W. MCCAY.
"H. H. TAYLOR.
"L. EARL CURRY."

Mr. Feibelman thereupon explained some of the major innovations in the proposed amendment, and was followed by L. Earl Curry, referee in bankruptcy, who spoke in disapproval of the pending legislation, condemned the bill as increasing the costs of bankruptcy administration and adding to the power of central government, without promise of added efficiency in bankruptcy administration. He predicted that if the bill were enacted into law the cost of administration would be increased from 30 to 50 per cent, and liquidation of insolvent estates would be greatly delayed. He stated that he knew of no referee or Federal judge who favored the plan, but all who, to his knowledge, have expressed themselves, were strongly opposed to it.

Thereupon it was regularly moved and carried that the report of the bankruptcy committee be approved, that the resolution be adopted, and that copies thereof be supplied to the press, to each member of the committees from the House and Senate having before them the pending administration bankruptcy bill, and to each Member of the House and Senate of the Florida delegation. Mr. Feibelman having announced his presence in Washington May 3, 1932, to testify before these congressional committees, it was regularly moved and carried that he be authorized to represent the Dade County Bar Association in submitting to these committees a transcript of the proceedings of this meeting, with a copy of the resolution adopted.

There being no further business, the meeting was, on motion duly made and carried, adjourned.

CHAS. A. MOREHEAD, Secretary.

We, M. L. Mershon, president, and Charles A. Morehead, secretary, of the Dade County Bar Association, do hereby certify that the foregoing pages numbered 1 to 3, both inclusive, constitute a true and correct transcript of the minutes of the Dade County Bar Association held in Miami, Fla., April 28, 1932, at 4 p. m.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and the official seal of this organization at Miami, Dade County, Fla., this 29th day of April, A. D. 1932.

M. L. MERSHON, President.

Attest:

CHAS. A. MOREHEAD, Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 931. An act to amend a part of section 1 of the act of May 27, 1908, chapter 200, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 592) (Rept. No. 631);

S. 933. An act to amend section 1025 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 632); and

S. 940. An act to provide against misuse of official badges, identification cards, and other insignia designed for the use of public officers (Rept. No. 633).

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3375) for the relief of Wiener Bank Verein, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. METCALF, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 186) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood, reported it without amendment.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT—ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS

Mr. HATFIELD, from the Committee on Manufactures, to which were referred the following bills, reported them adversely and submitted an adverse report (No. 635) thereon:

S. 436. An act to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, in respect to the definition of intoxicating liquor; and

S. 2473. An act to provide for increasing the permissible alcoholic content of beer, ale, or porter to 3.2 per cent by weight, and to provide means by which all such beer, ale, or porter shall be made of products of American farms.

Mr. METCALF submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Manufactures to accompany the bill (S. 436) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, in respect to the definition of intoxicating liquor, reported adversely from that committee, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 635.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WAGNER:

A bill (S. 4553) for the relief of Elizabeth Millicent Trammell; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4554) authorizing the Fort Hancock-Porvenir Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Fort Hancock, Tex.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4555) for the relief of Edwin Horton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 4556) granting an increase of pension to Anna M. Sipple (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 4557) to authorize the addition of certain names to the final roll of the Sac and Fox Indians of Oklahoma; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 4558) granting an increase of pension to Nancy Jane Albright (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4559) to amend sections 10 (b) and 16 of the Federal reserve act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COHEN:

A bill (S. 4560) granting an increase of pension to Paul O. Brownlee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4561) granting a pardon to Lieut. Thomas S. Massie, Mrs. Granville Fortescue, Albert O. Jones, and E. J. Lord; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4562) for the relief of Frank J. Miller (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GLENN:

A bill (S. 4563) for the relief of Roy Beavers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4564) to authorize the transfer to the Department of Florida, United Spanish-American War Veterans (Inc.), of certain Federal funds now on deposit in the name of Cary A. Hardee, Governor of the State of Florida, in the Lewis State Bank, of Tallahassee, Fla., and providing for the distribution and use of such funds; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. CAREY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 31, after line 3, insert the following:

"(w) Real estate acquired by State banks as security for loans: So much of the cost of real estate owned by a State bank or a domestic building and loan association not exempt from taxation under this title, as is charged off within the taxable year in obedience to the specific orders or general policy of the officers of the State having supervision over such bank or association. In determining gain or loss from the subsequent sale or other disposition of such real estate the adjusted basis provided in section 113 (b) shall be reduced by the amounts so charged off."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 4709. An act providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida at Orlando, Fla.;

H. R. 9306. An act to amend section 99 of the Judicial Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 180), as amended; and

H. R. 11057. An act to amend section 129 of the Criminal Code of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 6688. An act to fix the rates of postage on certain periodicals exceeding 8 ounces in weight; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

H. R. 8393. An act providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 8578. An act to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, by providing allowances for widows and children and dependent parents of veterans of the World War; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 79. An act to provide for conveyance of a portion of the Liston Range Rear Lighthouse Reservation, New Castle County, State of Delaware, for highway purposes; and

H. R. 10683. An act to provide for the conveyance by the United States of a certain tract of land to the borough of Stonington, in the county of New London, in the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 10829. An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii; to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 11337. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the Federal building site in Dover, N. J., for another site; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 11499. An act for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CONSERVATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WAGNER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that there may be inserted in the RECORD a radio address delivered by my colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] on April 23, 1932, on the subject of conservation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

On the 14th of March the United States Senate passed a resolution I had submitted, which reads as follows:

"Whereas under the inspiring leadership of President Cleveland it became the settled policy of this Nation to conserve its natural resources; and

"Whereas the establishment of an American conservation week will have the desired effect of bringing the American people to realize in the words of that great conservationist, President Roosevelt, that 'the conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life': Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representative concurring), That the President of the United States is requested to issue each year a proclamation designating the first week in April as American conservation week, and inviting the people of the United States to observe that week in schools, churches, museums, parks, and other suitable places, with ceremonies appropriate to the occasion."

That resolution is now pending in the House of Representatives. I hope it will secure the approval of the House before the end of the present session.

What prompted me to submit this resolution was the realization that we had permitted the policy of conservation to become the specialized science of the expert and the hobby of the sportsman. Conservation was losing contact with the great body of our citizens at the very time that it needed intelligent support and vigorous assistance.

Only a few months ago a committee of the United States Senate, after extensive investigation, sounded this sharp warning:

"Your committee finds convincing evidence of a rapid disappearance of wild life. The evidence supporting this conclusion comes from every source. It is not disputed. * * * The alarm of the conservationist, sportsman, fisherman, recreationist, and hunter has never been greater than at the present period."

That report of the Senate committee does not exaggerate the gravity of the risk we are running.

Should we permit the various forms of wild life upon this continent to disappear, we shall be guilty of destroying one of the greatest gifts of this bountiful continent. Nothing man has yet invented compares with the power of wild nature to refresh our souls, widen our vision, restore our strength, and calm our nerves when they are shattered and frayed by the fast pace of modern business activity.

There was a time not so long ago when our cities were but tiny islands of civilization sprinkled across a continent rich in natural and untamed life. At that time we had to protect ourselves against the jungle. All that has now changed. The time has come when we must preserve a portion of the jungle and the wilderness and protect the plant and animal life that can thrive only in the wilderness, so that we may have the means of satisfying the deep-seated yearning of mankind for contact with the great out of doors.

This aspect of conservation—namely, the need of providing for ourselves and for those who come after us free and easy access to opportunities to re-create their energies—is, in my judgment, by far the most important phase of wild-life conservation. But it is by no means the only one.

There is a business aspect to conservation It is estimated that there are in the United States about 13,000,000 sportsmen who resort to the great outdoors for their recreational activities. Their expenditures for that purpose exceed $650,000,000 a year. Their purchases finance a major industry, an important branch of our national economy, which deserves to be cultivated like any other branch of the Nation's economic effort.

Furthermore, the direct contribution of the various forms of wild life by way of food and clothing exceeds $150,000,000 in value.

We know only too well that many forms of bird life and animal life have entirely or practically disappeared from the continent because conservation was only a word—not a practice. Our present problem is therefore not merely to preserve what has remained but in many cases to replenish the wastage that has occurred in the past. Our duty is to make certain that not only we but those who follow us may enjoy a fair share of the natural riches of this continent.

The scope of conservation is wide enough to embrace every natural asset, such as oil, coal, and water power, and the wild life of the forest and prairie. Conservation implies a governmental policy with respect to each of them.

The first practical expression of the policy of conservation with respect to wild life was the action of the State of Maine in 1843 in appointing a number of official game protectors. To-day every State of the Union except Mississippi has a bureau charged with the duty of conserving its fish and game resources for the benefit of the people of the State.

The Federal Government began its conservation activities by establishing the Bureau of Fisheries in 1871. To-day we have, in addition to that bureau, three more actively engaged with the practical problems of conserving wild life. They are the Bureau of Biological Survey, the National Forest Service, and the National Park Service.

For the special protection of the migratory birds we have entered into a treaty with Canada. That problem has not, however, as yet been solved. All admit that there has been a diminishing supply of migratory waterfowl. Last year the situation had to be met by the drastic curtailment of the duck season. The controversy as to cause of the shrinkage in the number of these fine birds has not yet subsided. We have a great and valuable natural asset in these migratory birds, which should be preserved. I believe we should inaugurate a thoroughgoing study of the conditions surrounding their entire circuit from the breeding areas in Alaska down to Central America. Only by the use of facts can we properly solve the problem of the migratory waterfowl.

Another conservation problem that calls for the attention of the Federal Government is that of water pollution. Many of our inland and coastal waterways have been reduced to such a condition as practically to make impossible the continuance of any forms of aquatic life within them. The problem calls for further study and for stringent regulation, to the end that commerce may be accommodated and that the natural resources of the water systems of the United States may be preserved.

All of the objectives of conservation would be furthered by a closer coordination of the activities of the principal bureaus of the Federal Government engaged in fish and game preservation. The national forests and the national parks can be more intensively utilized than they have been for game replacement. It would also be well if the State conservation offices and the Federal bureaus engaged in conservation activities were more frequently brought into contact and into cooperation. One of the immediate essentials both for the States and the Federal Government is the provision of a larger personnel for the enforcement of the many salutary laws and regulations which have already been placed upon the statute books for the protection of wild life in America.

It is apparent that conservation is not only a policy of government—not only a specialized art and science—but that it must also become a habit of citizenship. The policy of conservation will not prevail unless it finds favor and support with the great body of American sportsmen and with the citizens generally.

It is for that reason that I hail the conservationists of America who are devoted to the cause of educating the public to the ideals and purposes of conservation, namely, the perpetuity of our wild life and the most economical use of our natural resources so that it may be reasonably certain that future generations will share with us in their enjoyment. I thank you.

DEBTS AND TAXES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask that there may be printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. C. T. Revere appearing in the Review of Reviews for May, 1932, entitled "Our Taxes: The Bills We Pay for Politics."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

OUR TAXES: THE BILLS WE PAY FOR POLITICS

By C. T. Revere

After the country begins to recover from the shock of seeing the United States Treasury faced by the threat of an unbalanced Budget, with its implication of a cloud upon national credit, it will be interesting to observe the public reactions, as well as the effect of those reactions upon our future policies.

In former fiscal crises the plight of an oppressed citizenry was portrayed in this burning epigram: "The power to tax is the power to destroy."

We have gone far since then, and our experience has taught us something. If we were to try to outline the present impasse, we would say: "The power to spend is the power to consume"—like a devastating fire. For in many respects the toll exacted from an energetic and resourceful people has found its vent in waste. It has gone up the economic smokestack in the form of outlays on farm relief, Shipping Board futilities, bonus payments to ex-service men, prohibition enforcement, and for other purposes, leaving no more trace upon our national landscape than a melting April snow.

Former President Coolidge, in his recent Saturday Evening Post article, Debts and Taxes, places the Nation still further under obligation to him by his exposition of this vexed problem. Surveying our flounderings from "the loopholes of retreat," his penetrating discussions and wise counsel give him the stature and dignity of the Marcus Aurelius of the American Republic.

Mr. Coolidge evidently regards some aspects of this question as rating higher in importance, if possible, than the balancing of our Budget by increased taxation. Chief among these is the mounting cost of government. The figures quoted by Mr. Coolidge are largely those prepared by the National Industrial Conference Board. It was pointed out that in 1903 the approximate total cost of government—including National, State, and local expenditures—was $1,570,000,000. That was one year less than 30 years ago.

In 1930 our governmental indebtedness—national, State, and municipal—had climbed to more than $30,000,000,000. Our taxes had mounted to $10,251,000,000. But even those levies, the most stupendous that ever faced any nation in history, fell short of what we spent, as total expenditures reached $13,058,000,000, thus implying an increased indebtedness to the extent by which expenditures exceeded taxes.

These figures are terrifying enough, but they do not tell the story as it stands to-day. As Mr. Coolidge pointed out, our tax bill of 1930, amounting to $10,251,000,000, consumed 14.4 per cent of our national income. It was about 3 per cent of our total national wealth, and as such it approached dangerously near to the proportions of a capital tax—a levy that points to the broad highway leading to progressive national collapse.

But what about 1932? Total national, State, and local taxes will far exceed the levies of two years ago. When the returns are all in, the combined tax bill—not tax collections—probably will exceed $12,000,000,000. On the other hand, our national income, all of us will agree, has shown a distressing shrinkage since the days of 1930. We are likely to find out that our tax bill of 1932 will approach 30 per cent of the Nation's income. What percentage of our diminished national wealth is represented by such a toll? It is perhaps just as well that we do not know. The mere conjecture is appalling.

These exhibits should show us that we have in the offing certain problems transcending in importance even the urgent necessity of balancing our Budget by unearthing new sources of governmental revenue. Supreme among these is the necessity for a reduction in expenditures. No nation, however energetic and resourceful, no matter how bountifully favored by natural conditions, can permanently stand such a burden.

The debt charges alone call for an impost that is staggering. One glance at the cost of State and municipal government will convince us of this. These expenses in 1930 had climbed to $9,116,000,000. Interest took $1,481,000,000, and debt reduction absorbed another $1,126,000,000. Here we have a total in excess of $2,600,000,000. In other words, in 1930 the charges for interest and debt reduction, merely overhead items, cost our States and cities over a billion more than it took to run Federal, State, and municipal Governments in 1903. This is a change that has taken place in 27 years.

All of us admit the need of meeting an emergency, and the imperative necessity of balancing the Budget when the Nation's credit is at stake. However, if one is to judge from the character of protests now coming from all sections of the country, the clear—though perhaps subconscious—conviction of the business community is that the supreme fiscal calamity would not be our failure to balance the Budget, but our success in balancing it by the levy of high taxes while sustaining the present scale of public expenditure. We might collect such taxes for one year, possibly two; but we would not carry the burden for any extended period of time.

Before we get through with problems involving revenues, outlays, appropriations, expenditures, excise duties, direct taxes, indirect taxes, sales taxes, etc., we are likely to be confronted by queries to which we never before have given practical attention.

Among the misgivings that will express themselves in interrogative form one might enumerate the following which will have to be developed into settled fiscal policies before we are through with our troubles:

1. Is not a large part of our present distress due to the tendency of our political leaders to formulate taxing policies that will lead to social and economic equalization? Inheritance and estate taxes, levies of a more onerous nature in the higher brackets of income-tax administration, may be given as examples.

2. When we look at the items that have thrown our fiscal system out of gear, do we not find that these huge outlays were made to placate politically powerful elements, and that our political leaders, in yielding to high-pressure propaganda, virtually have dipped their own hands into the Public Treasury to maintain their political existence and prestige?

3. In the last 20 years or so we have added enormously to the number of Government bureaus, many of which perform overlapping functions; and salaries have been advanced in keeping with the rising cost of living. Does the failure to dispense with superfluous agencies or to reduce the salaries of governmental employees in keeping with the lowered cost of living, mean that the country is now saddled with a bureaucracy that can scoff at the distress of the American taxpayer?

4. When we come to consider the sources of revenue, are we not likely to find that the Federal tax structure has marked elements of fundamental weakness, and that we have been relying too much upon sources of income that were uncertain and subject to dangerous and troublesome variations? The present form of administration of our income tax furnishes a case in point. Two years and more of depression have shown that we can not safely depend upon a levy obtained from such a relatively small group whose individual fortunes are subject to such appalling fluctuations.

5. If we broaden the base of our income-tax levy, will we not find at least three most salutary results ensuing therefrom: (a) A more stable source of revenue, subject to less sweeping variations; (b) a keener sense of responsibility among our citizens toward public expenditures; and (c) a consequent and most wholesome restraint upon Congress in respect to appropriations from the Public Treasury?

Undoubtedly there are many other queries that will arise in the public mind, and all should work eventually toward the development of a sounder fiscal program, less extravagance on the part of Nation, State, and city, and the formulation of taxation policies that will be more equitable and produce the minimum of unfavorable reactions upon our capital structure.

At the moment the interest of the Nation is concentrated upon the position of the United States Treasury. The formula setting forth both the misgivings and the amazement of the American people may be expressed largely as follows: What created the deficit? The answer is simple. Revenue sources broke down at a time when expenditures were exceeding all peace-time precedents.

Revenue proved to be disappointing because of the fluctuating character of its source. Only a year ago the official Treasury forecast saw a deficit in 1931 of approximately $180,000,000. It estimated that for 1932 there would be a surplus of $30,000,000, with no apprehension expressed that for 1933 the Treasury position would be anything but comfortable.

In order to show the unforeseen difficulties confronting the Treasury officials, it might be stated that the deficit for 1931 was nearly a billion dollars and that for 1932 it will be in the neighborhood of $2,150,000,000. It now appears that the estimate made a year ago of revenue from income taxes for the current fiscal year was about $1,140,000,000 more than will be obtained. This experience alone should demonstrate the fallacy of placing major reliance on a source of revenue that can dwindle with such disconcerting rapidity.

The items causing the deficit can be picked out of the second and third pages of the report of the House Ways and Means Committee on the revenue bill of 1932. Since the fiscal year 1930, when we last had a balanced Budget, there is an estimated decline in corporate and individual income taxes alone from approximately $2,200,000,000 to $850,000,000. This is a loss of $1,350,000,000. Total revenue from all sources shows a drop from $4,178,000,000 to $2,242,000,000, a decline of almost $2,000,000,000. The item of "miscellaneous receipts" shows a drop from $552,000,000 in 1930 to $265,000,000 in 1932. Most of this is explained by the current year's moratorium on foreign-debt payments.

If one is looking for extraordinary items of expense for 1932, he can find them in an extra appropriation of $200,000,000 for loans to veterans, $155,000,000 actual advances by the Federal Farm Board, a postal deficit of $195,000,000, and an item of $784,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration. This latter is in addition to the extra $200,000,000 in loans.

In connection with the allocation of the Veterans' Administration some interesting testimony was given by General Hines in the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill.

Up to the beginning of 1932, $1,284,000,000 actually had been loaned. Only a comparatively small portion of this shows up in the budgetary estimates, for the reason that since the adjusted-service certificate act was passed, in 1924, approximately $112,000,000 had been appropriated each year to this fund. The fiscal effect has been to retire the outstanding public debt by that amount and place it in the fund in the form of Government bonds bearing interest. When the loan legislation went through, these bonds (or, rather, marketable bonds as substitutes) were sold. Thus, while this $1,200,000,000 figure did not show up either in the public debt statement or in the Budget, except as already indicated, the Treasury had to borrow that much money.

In the official statement of the Ways and Means Committee report and elsewhere, on expenses for the current fiscal year, no mention is made of withdrawals from the Treasury by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or by the Farm Loan Board on the new $125,000,000 appropriation. The first quarterly report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shows that $238,000,000 of loans had been authorized up to March 31, of which $192,000,000 actually have been withdrawn from the Treasury.

Among the expenditures it is just as well to bear in mind the donation of the United States Government to the various States for road construction, included in the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture. The actual money available for this purpose during the fiscal year 1932 is around $160,000,000. The system employed in making these disbursements is interesting. It also may be confusing to the uninformed American taxpayer. For several years Congress appropriated $75,000,000 a year, and two years ago they raised the figure to $125,000,000. For the past two years the expedient has been adopted of "edging up" on future appropriations, granting in advance the money that the States might expect in future years. The actual expenditures for the current fiscal year thus approximate $160,000,000.

No business enterprise in a period of declining earnings and with an unfavorable outlook would think of following any other program than that of drastic retrenchment. There is little indication that such a course will be followed in respect to Government expenditures. Governmental economy presents our most baffling problem. There are plenty of protests against specific taxes, but there are few specific recommendations when it comes to instituting economies. The President has made a general appeal for the practice of economy, and this was met by a challenge by Congress to show where curtailment could be put into effect. The latest development has been a joint proposal for a slash amounting to $160,000,000 as a result of conferences between the Executive and House leaders.

Just why the salaries of Federal employees should be considered immune from downward revision, when practically every other element in the community has suffered radical curtailment of income, is one of the unsolved mysteries of politics. Another enigma that passes understanding is the immortality of bureaus that long since have outlived their stage of usefulness and still show no signs of disintegration.

Government could learn something from business in the matter of devising economies. Individual business would compare present with past expenses and endeavor to ferret out the items responsible for the increased outlay. The pruning knife would be applied to such increases unless it could be shown that they were productive or otherwise imperatively essential to the conduct of operations.

No better illustration of how well-managed private concerns would proceed can be furnished than to present a portion of the letter issued on April 8 by Lammot du Pont, president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. In this letter Mr. du Pont gave a tabulation, reproduced on next page, prepared from the latest annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, comparing governmental expenditures by main subdivisions for the fiscal years 1927 and 1932.

In offering this formidable exhibit President du Pont made the following comment:

"To finance these ever-increasing disbursements, Congress is now planning huge additional taxes to be paid for out of the already shrunken income of prostrate industry and individuals.

"Taxes levied upon corporations and other producers increase the cost of their products. Higher costs lessen sales, slow down industry, increase unemployment and want; all of which drive costs still higher and further increase distress. Taxes upon individuals have a similar effect by curtailing their capacity to purchase the products of industry.

"It is lower costs and higher purchasing power which we need to-day, perhaps more than ever in our history. Why are industries and individuals, which must reduce their expenditures to meet the depressed conditions, saddled with ever-mounting taxes to cover the ever-increasing expenditures of the National Government? Why should the confidence in the financial security of the Government itself be jeopardized by extravagance? Why does not Congress balance the Budget by reduction of expenditures through efficient operation and the curtailment of non-essential services and functions?"

Washington opinion, which perhaps is too close to the scene, is decidedly cynical on the subject of Government economies. In its April issue, the National Sphere (Washington) said: "The most pathetic thing in Washington at the moment is the movement to reduce Government expenditures. It is pathetic because it is making a loud noise and no progress. Were the matter not such an extremely serious one for the welfare of the American people, the situation would be little short of ridiculous. As it is, there is a lesson: The reduction of expenditures on projects and agencies once started is an impossibility. There is also a moral: Don't start new governmental projects or agencies."

Such cynicism is too tragic. If it has even a modicum of verity, it questions the fundamental validity of democracy. It makes a farce of Lincoln's noble panegyric at Gettysburg, and warns of our vanishing birthright—that this Republic is fast becoming a Government of the politicians, by the politicians, and for the politicians.

	1927	1932	Increase	Increase
				Per cent
Total expenditures	$3,493,600,000	$4,482,200,000	$988,600,000	28
Less interest and sinking-fund payments (statutory)	1,120,500,000	1,016,800,000	[1] 103,700,000	[1] 9
Less miscellaneous, not included in major departments	409,100,000	270,300,000	[1] 138,800,000	[1] 34
Balance which was expended by major departments, commissions, etc., as follows	1,964,000,000	3,195,100,000	1,231,100,000	63
Department of Agriculture	156,300,000	333,500,000	177,200,000	113
Agricultural marketing fund—not (Farm Board)		155,000,000	155,000,000
Post office deficit	27,300,000	195,000,000	167,700,000	614
Treasury Department	151,600,000	312,900,000	161,300,000	106
War Department	360,800,000	483,700,000	122,900,000	34
Navy Department	318,900,000	378,900,000	60,000,000	19
Shipping Board	19,000,000	60,800,000	41,800,000	220
Department of Justice	24,800,000	53,900,000	29,000,000	117
Department of Commerce	30,900,000	54,700,000	23,800,000	77
Other independent offices and commissions	35,400,000	57,600,000	22,200,000	63
Legislative establishment	19,700,000	32,400,000	12,700,000	64
Department of Labor	9,900,000	14,100,000	4,200,000	42
Adjusted-service certificate fund	115,200,000	200,000,000	84,800,000	74
Veterans' Bureau (Veterans' Administration since 1930)	391,500,000	784,400,000	[2] 392,900,000	100
Interior Department	302,700,000	78,300,000	[1][2] 224,400,000	[1] 74
Total of major departments, commissions, etc	1,964,000,000	3,195,100,000	1,231,100,000	63

[1] Indicates decrease.

[2] Since the Bureau of Pensions was transferred from the Interior Department to the Veterans' Bureau in 1931, in order to make a fair comparison with 1927 it is necessary to combine the expenditures of the Interior Department and the Veterans' Bureau for each period, which results in an increase in expenditures in those two divisions of $168,500,000 for 1932 as compared with 1927.

TAXES AND GOVERNMENTAL EXPENDITURES

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an article by Isaac F. Marcosson entitled "Bills for Billions," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post of April 30, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

BILLS FOR BILLIONS

By Isaac F. Marcosson

Here are three statements of significance for every American citizen, whether he pays taxes or not. The first was made by the then Secretary of the Treasury Mellon before the congressional Ways and Means Committee on January 13 last, when he said:

"As pointed out in my annual report to the Congress, we closed the fiscal year with a deficit of $903,000,000. Without making allowance for increased revenues through recommended legislation, we are confronted this year with a prospective deficit of $2,123,000,000, and it is estimated that expenditures will exceed receipts by no less than $1,417,000,000 in the fiscal year 1933. This situation is due, on the one hand, to increased expenditures, and, on the other, to a precipitous decline in receipts from taxation."

The second is an extract from the report of the committee on Federal expenditures of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which reads:

"Governmental expenditures in the United States are now estimated to be between thirteen and fourteen billion dollars annually. Compared with the pre-war year of 1913, these expenditures have increased 330 per cent. Those of the Federal Government increased about 475 per cent, of the States about 376 per cent, and of the local units about 270 per cent. Per capita expenditures have increased about 360 per cent for the Federal Government, 285 per cent for the States, and about 200 per cent for local units."

The third is part of a pronouncement by President Hoover at the biweekly press conference at the White House on January 8. It stated:

"I wish to emphasize to the fullest extent of my ability the necessity, as a fundamental to the country, for the utmost economy of Government expenditure of all kinds. Our people must realize that Government can not live in a depression upon the scale that was possible in times of great prosperity. * * * Our first duty as a Nation is to put our Government house in order—National, State, and local. With the return of prosperity the Government can undertake constructive projects both of social character and in public improvement. We can not squander ourselves into prosperity."

In the face of the fiscal conditions just enumerated, which so vitally affect the credit of the country, the new Congress plunged at once into the business of appropriation. Between the time that the gavel fell for the first session on December 7 and the adjournment for the holidays on December 22, hundreds of measures had poured into the hopper, carrying with them recommendations for expenditures that aggregated $32,230,700,000.

This compilation, based on an estimate made by the Washington Post and incorporated into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, only included bills carrying more than $1,000,000 each. These recommended expenditures, which are eight times the pared-to-the-bone Budget estimates of $4,000,000,000, represent just so much money which the authors of the various bills would like to spend over and above what the Government believes is necessary to spend in these parlous times.

The procedure has naturally provoked widespread protest among business men. Its inconsistency is shown by this episode: A certain Congressman, hotfoot for a slash in the pay of all Federal employees, is earnestly advocating the construction of a fish hatchery in his district.

Before we strike the stride of this serial of spending, however, it is important to make two statements which bear directly upon the appropriation situation. The first is by a high-placed Washingtonian, intimately familiar with the state of the Nation's finances. In discussing the glut of congressional money measures with me he said:

"For nearly 10 years there was little idea of the relation between taxation and appropriation in the mind of Congress. Apparently the sky was the limit. We boomed with prosperity. The fiscal and other resources of the United States appeared to be inexhaustible. Expansion was the watchword, and economy in public expenditures a lost art. Our national legislators could proceed with a free hand. There was no comeback at home because of drastic increase in taxation. We had a surplus of $184,000,000 in 1930; one of $185,000,000 in 1929; and one of $399,000,000 in 1928.

"Now we face a gross deficit for the 3-year period 1931–1933 of approximately $4,533,000,000. The relation between taxation and appropriation becomes a very vital matter. The spread widens as excessive outlay piles up. Increased taxation becomes the only way out. It means that the gap between Government revenue and expenditures must be closed."

DIMINISHING RETURNS FROM INCOMES

The second deals with the decline in national tax revenue. Due to the economic depression, both individual and corporate incomes have greatly shrunk. Current corporation income taxes declined from $1,118,000,000 in the fiscal year 1930 to $892,000,000 in 1931, and are estimated at $550,000,000 for the current fiscal year. Individual income-tax collections fell from $1,061,000,000 in 1930 to $730,000,000 in the fiscal year 1931, and at the time I write are estimated at $370,000,000 for 1932. Miscellaneous internal-revenue collections decreased from $628,000,000 in 1930 to $569,000,000 in 1931 and to an estimated $544,000,000 in 1932. Furthermore, customs receipts dropped from $587,000,000 in the fiscal year 1930 to an estimated $419,000,000 for 1932. The new $1,096,000,000 Federal tax bill, carrying a big increase in income levy, presented on March 5, is the answer.

Let us first look at the larger suggested appropriation picture. The purposes and the well-nigh staggering sums sought for them are: General welfare, $8,201,000,000; public roads, $8,525,000,000; public works, buildings, and parks, $7,933,000,000; aids to agriculture, $1,931,000,000; all veterans, $3,685,000,000; unemployment relief, $702,000,000; increased expenditures upon Federal employees, $514,000,000; Navy, $411,200,000; irrigation and reclamation, $275,000,000; Army, $25,500,000; and aids to Indians, $28,000,000. The grand total is $32,230,700,000. Remember that these sums are in bills carrying more than $1,000,000 each. Additional measures involving expenditures increase the total by not less than $5,000,000,000 and possibly more.

We can now analyze the bills in detail, beginning with the $7,933,000,000 total for public works, buildings, and parks. No feature of congressional expenditure lends itself more readily to criticism, because it involves the problem of the advisability of immense works projects as a form of relief in times of depression.

Heading the list of bills is that of Senator LA FOLLETTE for the flotation of a $5,500,000,000 prosperity bond issue for the construction of public Federal buildings, highways, bridges, grade-crossing elimination, water supply and sewage systems, flying fields, parks and playgrounds, and schools and housing. Under the terms of the bill loans to State and local authorities are made available up to $3,750,000,000.

The three next largest appropriation bills and the sums involved are: Representative CAMPBELL'S to conserve the run-off of flood waters, $750,000,000; Senator SHIPSTEAD'S for the early completion of river and harbor projects—it carries a 4 per cent bond issue—$500,000,000; and the Crisp-McKellar bill authorizing construction of post-office buildings on the basis of postal receipts, $300,000,000. Other public works bills include Representative

GARBER'S for the maintenance and stabilization of channels of navigable streams and the control of flood waters, $225,000,000; Senator MCKELLAR'S for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, $150,000,000; Senator NORRIS'S for the operation of Muscle Shoals, $126,000,000; Representative ALLGOOD'S for the construction of post-office buildings in all county seats, $60,000,000; Representative KELLY'S for the purchase or construction of post-office buildings, branches, and garages, $45,000,000; and Representative LOVETTE'S for flood control at Cove Creek Dam, Clinch River, Tennessee, $40,000,000. Fifteen other public-works measures for projects ranging from State parks to the erection of Spanish War memorials carry appropriations ranging from $1,000,000 to $25,000,000 each.

Linked with these proposed appropriations is another onslaught involving the same economic issue. I refer to the bills framed for irrigation and reclamation schemes which call for an aggregate of $275,000,000. Chief among them are Representative BURTNESS'S measure for loans to drainage and other districts, totaling $100,000,000; Representative BUCHANAN'S to establish a national reclamation policy, $100,000,000; and Representative SMITH'S for storage in public-land States, $50,000,000.

A THEORY THAT WORKS IN REVERSE

These measures are projected, in the main, on the familiar theory that vast expenditures for public works will offset the adverse swings of the business cycles.

In other words, as economists put it, "spend on a far greater scale when business is depressed than when business is flourishing." On paper this reads well. In practical operation the reverse obtains. No one doubts the advisability of spending when business morale is low, but the fact to be emphasized is that the spending, or rather the objectives of the spending, must be reproductive—in other words, revenue producing.

The launching of such a huge bond issue as is contemplated in the La Follette measure when the Treasury is hard put to raise revenue could easily have grave consequences on the national financial status. The President touched on this phase in a message to Congress on January 4, in which he said:

"The country must have confidence that the credit and stability of the Federal Government will be maintained by drastic economy in expenditure, by adequate increase in taxes, and by restriction of issues of Federal securities. The recent depreciation in prices of Government securities is a serious warning which reflects the fear of further large and unnecessary issues of such securities."

In the Budget estimates we have reached the limit of appropriation for public works. The amount spent by the Federal Government for this purpose in 1931 was nearly $437,000,000, while the authorized appropriation for the current fiscal year is $620,000,000. Expenditures for public construction in 1931 were more than $165,000,000 in excess of those of the preceding year.

PUTTING THE DOLE IN INDOLENCE

Let us next have a look at the bills involving funds for Federal aid to public roads. Six measures introduced seek a total of $8,525,000,000. Heading them is Representative HOLADAY'S bill for rural post roads, other than Federal aid to highway systems, $5,000,000,000. Second comes Senator NORRIS'S bill, which would set aside $3,000,000,000 for highway construction with Government money and without proportionate grants by the States. The other four are: Representative ALMON'S for a Federal highway system, $300,000,000; Representative OWEN'S measure to acquire toll bridges, $200,000,000; Representative LEAVITT'S for roads and trails in national parks, $15,000,000; and Senator WALSH'S for road building on the basis of drought conditions, $10,000,000.

For some years Washington has allocated considerable sums to the States for road construction under varying conditions, the chief of which was that the States should contribute a certain sum to the undertaking. The actual expenditure for highway purposes last year approximated $168,000,000, while the estimated expenditures for 1932 are $239,000,000. Many of the States paid their share. Under the proposed measures practically the entire new burden falls upon the Government.

Linked in purpose with all these works projects are the measures for out-and-out relief. They are: The La Follette-Costigan bill for cooperation with States to relieve unemployment, which asks for $375,000,000; Representative CELLER'S special Army reserve act to relieve unemployment, demanding $227,000,000; and Representative HUDDLESTON'S for the relief of the destitute, $100,000,000, making a total of $702,000,000.

The Celler bill represents a departure in relief measures. It provides that: "Immediately after the passage of this act, or as soon thereafter as the Secretary of War shall designate, men of good character, between the ages of 18 and 45 years, who are physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, but who in the present unemployment crisis are not gainfully employed, and who are not skilled in any trade or occupation, shall be permitted to enlist in the special Army reserve for active duty for a period of not to exceed one year."

The moment you touch the subject of Federal aid for the unemployed you pass the frontier between private, State, and community assistance, and the dole. Britain's costly experience with the dole has proved that national government aid to the idle fosters, in time, what becomes subsidized indolence. The dole is a drug that deadens the will to work.

In his testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures, of which Senator LA FOLLETTE is chairman, Walter S. Gifford, director of the President's organization on unemployment relief, stated the case against the intrusion of Federal aid in this all-important matter. Among other things, he said:

"Widespread acceptance of responsibility, community by community, county by county, and State by State, has not only worked for providing relief funds but likewise for their discriminating and effective expenditure. The principle underlying the relief activities throughout the country has been that first, if possible, the individual community would look after its own. Next, if necessary, the county would help, and then, if the county were unable to meet the needs, the State would help. It would seem that the combined efforts of communities, counties, and States can take care of the situation. Should such community and State responsibilities be lessened by Federal aid, the sincere and whole-hearted efforts of the hundreds of thousands of volunteers engaged both in raising and administering relief funds would doubtless be materially lessened. The effect of Federal aid on Federal Government credit should also be considered. If this were adversely affected, the real cure for unemployment, which is obviously the the restoration of normal business, would be retarded."

We now come to the group of bills massed under the head of general welfare. The total amount of appropriation asked in 21 measures is $8,201,500,000.

PROMOTING GENERAL WELFARE

The largest sum involved in a single measure is $5,000,000,000, which Representative LANKFORD fixes as necessary for the establishment of a department of general welfare to be headed by a secretary of welfare. As set forth in the bill, the purpose of the new department is to "aid, encourage, and promote" practically every organization in the country, whether school, lodge, farm, church, or veteran, "to secure better mental, physical, spiritual, moral, and patriotic development of the people and in order that the general welfare may be promoted and provided."

In many respects the Lankford bill is what seasoned legislators are accustomed to call a freak measure. One of its stipulations is to provide free motion-picture and radio service "in all schools, colleges, universities, churches, missions, lodges, clubs, unions, federations, public hospitals, orphans' homes, charitable organizations, community centers, patriotic organizations, and other organized gatherings." The United States Government is to pay for apparatus, service, and operation. Admission to all the shows is to be free. In addition to creating an unnecessary branch of the Government, the Lankford bill savors strongly of a paternalism hardly consistent with the American tradition.

Next in extent of appropriation is Representative CONNERY'S $3,000,000,000 measure to provide old-age pensions for citizens of the United States. The minimum assistance is to be $1 a day. Here again you have an instance of the intrusion of Federal aid in the functions of a State, because many of our States make old-age provision under what is called an old age security act. It is typical of a dozen more or less kindred measures calling for unwarranted institutions ranging from the establishment of commodity quantity units to a university of the United States.

THE BONUS LOOMS LARGER

With the additional aid asked for veterans of the World War, we reach the first group of measures influenced by organization pressure. Once more the bonus looms large, this time in bigger terms than ever before.

As most people know, the so-called adjusted-service certificate issued to veterans is practically a 20-year endowment-insurance policy. The total face value of certificates was $3,426,000,000, held by 3,397,000 veterans, or an average of about $1,000 each, when the bonus agitation broke out afresh in 1931.

At that time loans on the certificates were available up to 22½ per cent of the face value. The last Congress increased the loan rate to 50 per cent. President Hoover vetoed the measure, but it was passed over his objection. It increased the immediate gross-borrowing power of certificates to $1,711,500,000.

The first of the new veterans' bills is Representative PATMAN'S "to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted certificates." It is estimated by the Veterans' Administration that the first year's outlay under this legislation would be $2,444,000,000.

A bill offered by Representative GARBER to provide dependency allowances—they would really amount to pensions—involves a cost of $269,500,000. Other World War veteran measures call for an additional expenditure of $366,000,000.

Organization pressure is also evident in the bills affecting postal employees which would add $422,000,000 to governmental expenditures. They amend pay, increase leave periods, provide for study periods in work hours, and reduce night work.

In analyzing the bills for me a Washington spokesman, peculiarly equipped to speak, made the following statement:

"Without deprecating the service or loyalty of the army of postal employees, these facts must be considered: Clerks and carriers receive $1,700 a year at the beginning, and advance at the rate of $100 per annum until they reach $2,100. Night work carries a 10 per cent increase in pay. One out of every six clerks is a special clerk receiving $2,200. They have 15 working days' vacation annually and 10 days' sick leave, which is cumulative up to six months. Postal employees have suffered no lay-off and no reduction in pay, whereas millions of Americans are out of work or receiving reduced compensation. Living costs are down 20 per cent. Moreover, the volume of postal business has fallen off one-third during the past two years. The total postal deficit for the year ending June 30, 1930, was $98,215,987; for 1931, $146,066,189; while the estimated deficit for 1932 is $200,000,000."

No legislative program is complete without farm-relief measures. The bills for assistance to agriculture mount up a total of $1,931,000,000. The largest proposed expense is in Senator BROOKHART'S measure, the purpose of which is to give the American farmer a price for his product that will equal cost of production plus a 4 per cent profit. It appropriates $1,000,000,000 to be added to the revolving fund of the Federal Farm Board and imposes authority to handle agricultural products so as to bring about this result.

WHEN THE BUDGET IS UNBALANCED

The Federal Farm Board specified in its message to Congress that it was not making recommendations for any legislation. In a statement to me James C. Stone, chairman of the board, emphasized this point, saying:

"On a number of occasions I have said that the Farm Board had not contemplated asking Congress for an increase in the $500,000,000 revolving fund created in the agricultural marketing act. We do not now contemplate asking for more money. Unless Congress should impose new obligations on it, the present revolving fund is sufficient to take care of the supplemental financing needed by cooperatives in the expansion and development of their marketing program."

You need no diagram to point out that the welfare of the country and the return of a sound prosperity demand the strictest economy. The proposed appropriations, even if approved only in part, constitute a definite menace to national fiscal stability at this time. While the bills, save in a few isolated instances, are not legislative freaks, they can only be regarded as financial follies.

The final commentary on the congressional spirit of spending is made by the man best qualified to make it. In a speech before the Economic Club of New York in December last, Ogden L. Mills, then Under Secretary and now Secretary of the Treasury, said:

"If we are called upon to finance, through borrowing, another huge deficit in 1933, and all manner of unwise and uneconomic expenditures in the meanwhile, leaving aside for the moment the general effect on the credit of the Government, our difficulties become very serious indeed.

"I do not mean to suggest that the addition of $3,000,000,000 or even $4,000,000,000 to our national debt could conceivably impair the national credit. But I do say, with all the force at my command, that any temporizing with this situation, any failure to take the steps necessary to bring our Budget into balance within a reasonable time, any misuse of the public credit would furnish evidence of lack of sound financial principles as might well result in shaken confidence and in apprehension lest these conditions prevail long enough to result in real damage. In this period of deep uncertainty the unimpaired credit of the Federal Government is the most priceless possession of the people of the United States. We assume its existence as we assume the continuance of unlimited supplies of air and sunlight. It has been established through the pursuance of sound fiscal policy in the past, and so must it now be preserved."

THE ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL SITUATION

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Advertiser, of East Aurora, N. Y., on April 28 last, written by B. J. Hatmaker, entitled "Hysteria—A Liability."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

HYSTERIA—A LIABILITY

By B. J. Hatmaker

The unfolding of the drama of democracy fighting for its life against the forces inherent in the evolution in its own economic system based upon the development of the machine age is far more exciting than any imitation drama of the stage, more thrilling than any mystery story, with the dénouement of the plot still unrevealed but of vital personal significance to each of us, whatever it may be. Comedy, tragedy, pathos, and absurdity are blended in the play and an impending presidential election adds zest to the acting.

As we look back over the roaring twenties, comedy dominates. Greed, riches to be picked out of the air, something for nothing, all economic laws suspended, prosperity forever, in constantly accelerating ratio, a nation mad with the hysteria of optimism.

The curtain dropped in the autumn of 1929, and was raised upon the second act. Capital found itself deflated in the sum of some $60,000,000,000. Labor found itself losing a billion dollars a month through unemployment, wage reductions, and short-time jobs. The hysteria of tragedy swept over the country. The cold, black fog of deflation permeated every nook and corner of the country, causing the failure of banks by the hundreds, tying up available cash. The depths of this condition were reached about eight months ago.

The curtain rose on the third act with the scene in Washington. Congress was in session with no more partisan fighting proclivities than are shown by the wild denizens of the woods fleeing from a forest fire. Bill after bill, recommended by the administration, was passed with practical unanimity. There was a lull in popular hysteria.

Unemployment was not relieved, prices continued to sag, but bank failures ceased. Hoarded currency reappeared in circulation. Frozen bank credits were thawed by the financial remedies applied. Credit is now freely available for any legitimate business purpose. The famous corner has in fact been turned. The logical theory of beginning at the top to restore prosperity is beginning to show results. It has reached down to the ultimate small farmer with no credit except a crop he hopes to raise, and on that slender reed he may borrow of his Uncle Samuel for seed and fertilizer.

And unexpectedly and illogically, the country flares again with hysteria, this time expressing itself in a hundred thousand letters and telegrams a day, flooding into the offices of the Senators in Washington demanding elimination from any tax proposals affecting the writers and urging drastic reductions in governmental expenses.

Not many months ago the country hailed with approval appropriations for public works, designed to give work to idle men and aid in the restoration of prosperity. The newest attack of hysteria was induced by the realization that all these things had to be paid for, which meant new taxes. It sweeps through the Halls of Congress and over the departments and into the White House. Sane plans are in the making for effecting proper economies in public business, and a reasonably scientific tax system is being evolved in spite of the ravings which make life a burden to those in responsible places.

If the country would adjourn, Congress would be able to give it intelligent legislation!

THE TAX PROBLEM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DAVID I. WALSH

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I request that a speech delivered by my colleague the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], on the 2d instant, over the National Radio Forum, upon "The Tax Dilemma" be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

The present Congress has been called upon to deal with many questions, but none more vital and of greater urgency than the questions involved in the pending tax bill already passed by the House and soon to be reported by the Senate Finance Committee to the Senate.

The world-wide economic depression, the extent of which our modern world has never known, has had manifold repercussions. In our own land we have widespread unemployment, wage reductions; a fearful decline in security prices, commodity prices, and property values; stagnation of business, bankruptcies, and bank failures.

Social problems arising from unemployment, want, and suffering are exceedingly pressing, and economic and business problems, relating to trade, the banks, and the railroads, we have sought and are seeking to alleviate and to remedy. It ought to be obvious that with respect to the social and economic questions the aid which the Federal Government may extend is circumscribed. In many cases the remedies lie not with the Government but with society or with circumstances beyond the control of either.

The phase of the present situation, however, with which we treat to-night is wholly within the purview and control of the Federal Government. It is the question of governmental finances and what we popularly describe as "balancing the Budget."

At no point have the consequences of our vanished prosperity been so quickly reflected and so graphically shown as in the swift decline of the Federal tax revenues. Our Federal revenues in the main are dependent on the incomes of our citizens, the profits of our corporations, and the volume of our foreign trade, particularly the volume of our imports. Imports have steadily declined, profits vanished, and incomes slumped; hence our tax receipts have dwindled, until to-day they are approximately half what they were in normal times. Furthermore, they are still pointing downward, while governmental expenditures continue as large as ever. As with private enterprise, so with the governmental agencies, extravagance and luxuries were indulged during the recent era of prosperity.

To-day the Treasury is paying out $2 for every dollar received. That condition can not long continue. It is the road to national bankruptcy. The merchant on Main Street, who day after day paid out $2 for every dollar that came over the counter would soon be in the hands of the sheriff. Many of them are. Why is there a widespread fallacy that Government finances are immune in the matter of matching receipts and expenditures and that, unlike private business, governments may go ahead indefinitely paying their bills in I O U notes? There never was a more mistaken belief.

We do not have to accept this proposition on faith. We have only to look to Europe and see what has happened to prosperous nations whose expenditures continued to outrun their income.

When the Treasury balanced its books on June 30, 1930, it discovered a deficit for the preceding 12 months of approximately $1,000,000,000. The deficit was represented by notes, Uncle Sam's I O U's given to banks and individuals in exchange for cash, with which the Treasury paid its bills.

The Treasury started a new account at the beginning of the new fiscal year last July, just as a private merchant each year starts a new page in his ledger. We are now dealing with this new deficit. It is the largest ever incurred by any nation in peace time in the history of the world. At the moment this year's deficit stands at about two and one-half billion dollars. That means that twenty-five hundred million dollars of additional notes have been issued by the Treasury in the past 10 months to raise cash to meet Government bills. While the expenses of the Federal Government have continued to run along at the annual rate of $4,000,000,000, the Government's revenues have now declined below $2,000,000,000, and are still declining.

This state of the Federal finances must be corrected and remedied at once if the financial integrity of the Government is to be maintained. The solvency and financial security of the Federal Government is the very foundation stone upon which the recovery of private business rests.

As yet there has been no essential loss of national credit, not because the accumulating Treasury deficit is not serious but simply because the world has been given explicit assurances from both the executive and legislative branches of the Government that steps were to be taken in the present Congress—heroic measures, if need be—to balance the Budget, to curtail Government expenses wherever possible, and to levy new taxes to raise new revenue. This is the task to which the President and Congress are giving their attention. As I said at the outset, it is the most vital, the most urgent problem before the Congress.

Leaders in both the House and Senate have been cooperating with the administration in working out a nonpartisan program. Unfortunately, the nonpartisan program of the leaders in the House was rejected, and practically a new bill was enacted on the floor of the House.

What course the Senate will take in following a nonpartisan program remains to be seen. There is apparently no rivalry between the political party leaders as to which shall receive credit or which shall be blamed for the tax bill. There is, however, a wide difference of personal opinion as to where the burdens of taxation should be placed; also, as to the particular rates which are to be levied in the taxing of incomes, inheritances, luxuries, theater and athletic game admissions, stamps, etc. Naturally, too, sectional influences and environment are a factor in the shaping of a tax bill. It is my view that Congress should approach its task in the nonpartisan and patriotic spirit with which it approached the problem of levying taxes during the World War. This does not mean that Congress should be frightened by the resentment of clamorous and selfish groups that have been selected to bear some of the substantial burdens of the increased taxes. The public, however, has the right to expect Members of Congress, regardless of differences of opinion, to proceed promptly and with determination to remove the spirit of uncertainty and apply that degree of justice and equality that a public servant is expected to apply, especially in this period of distress and emergency.

Let me now state what, in my judgment, should be the primary considerations in balancing the Government Budget. Time and the subject allotted me do not permit of the discussion of the economy side of the question of balancing the Budget in my address to-night. Suffice to say there should be almost a unanimous agreement in principle, first, that we should retrench wherever possible without jeopardy to essential Government activities and without interposing new obstacles in the pathway of business recovery; second, that the fixed charges and the fixed obligations of the Government comprise so large a proportion of our total expenditures that economies, however drastic, can not save the Treasury more than two or three hundred million dollars at most of its two to three billion dollar deficit.

Hence we must solve the question of finding ways and means of raising new revenues, which involves a revision of present taxes and the imposition of new taxes. We have no choice in the matter. There is no alternative.

In my judgment, taxes should be spread as widely and applied as lightly as possible. In framing a tax bill we should recognize and apply the principle of ability to pay, which means taxing at a higher proportionate rate those who claim the larger portion of the income and wealth of the country, yet avoiding as far as possible the placing of barriers and impediments that will discourage capital from contributing to the resuscitation of business by employing itself in business enterprise. This principle is not an easy one to apply and do exact justice to all concerned.

All are agreed that in the new bill the bulk of revenues should come from taxes on the incomes of individuals and upon the profits of corporations, as it has in the past. Under the present law single persons pay a tax upon individual incomes in excess of $1,500 per year and married persons upon incomes in excess of $3,500, subject to some additional exemptions for minor dependent children. The Treasury recommended and the House adopted a provision lowering these exemptions to $1,000 and $2,500, respectively. The Senate Finance Committee has voted to retain this lowered exemption. This is what is usually referred to as broadening the base of the income tax. This will increase tremendously the number of taxpayers, but no married person will pay a Federal tax until he has a net income of $3,000, and his tax will then be $3.25; if $4,000 net income, $30; and thereafter rapidly increasing. The net income of $10,000 will pay $295.

But in recognition of the proposition that an income tax ought to be graduated in accordance with capacity to pay and that persons of large income may justly be called upon to contribute a larger percentage of their income in the support of their Government, we have long had a surtax imposed on the large incomes. Under existing law the surtax, starting at 1 per cent and stepping upward to 20 per cent, applies to all net taxable income above $10,000. In the House tax bill the surtax starts at $6,000 and steps up to 47 per cent. The Senate committee will recommend increasing this rate on incomes above $100,000 up to 54 per cent. Even these high rates are below the war-time rates of 1918. A strenuous effort, however, is to be made on the floor of the Senate to apply these war-time rates that begin with a normal tax rate of 6 per cent, instead of 1½ as now and 3 per cent as proposed by the Senate committee, and reach a maximum of 65 per cent surtax on the highest incomes plus the normal tax of 12 per cent, making the maximum 77 per cent on the highest incomes.

Even with the sharp increase in income-tax rates, both normal and surtax, over the present law, made by the House, and still further slightly increased by the Senate, the lot of the American taxpayer of moderate means will be a happy one as compared with that of the citizen of Great Britain. Under this bill and the Senate committee proposal a married person drawing $2,000 would pay no tax, whereas a citizen of Great Britain would pay $106.25 in English money, or $80.75 if paid in American dollars. One example will suffice: On a net income of $5,000, under the House bill an American citizen would pay $37.50. Under the Senate committee proposal, $56.25. If he were a British citizen with this income his tax would be $703.33. On a $10,000 a year income the American citizen would pay $610 or $295, depending on whether the House or the Senate committee rate is adopted. A British citizen pays on this income $1,628.33. Americans with very large incomes would pay a tax much more nearly approaching the level required of the British citizen in commensurate circumstances. This is because of the high surtax rates on large incomes in both the House and Senate proposals.

Corporations at present are required to pay a Federal income tax on their net profits at the rate of 12 per cent. The Treasury recommended that this rate be increased to 13 per cent. The House bill fixed the rate at 13½ per cent. The Senate Finance Committee has voted to recommend a rate of 14 per cent, but in doing this it removes the tax on the dividends of corporations which are exempt now because the corporations pay a tax on this income before it is distributed in dividends. The House, however, has voted to tax these dividends.

The taxes levied by the Federal Government on gifts (many of them made to escape inheritance taxes) and upon estates over $50,000, passing by inheritance, have been sharply increased. They are the largest ever imposed. The question of the rates to be levied on inheritances is complicated by the fact that so many of the States have their own inheritance laws and derive varying but substantial revenues from that source. That there is an increasing sentiment that the unequal distribution of wealth can be in part relieved by heavy taxes on large inheritances is becoming generally recognized and accepted. There is another defense, more convincing and meritorious, to these big taxes on inheritances than other taxes proposed, namely, the necessities from which the Government can not escape.

Despite the sharp increases in individual income tax rates, especially on the large incomes, and despite the increases in the tax on corporate profits, and upon estates and inheritances, it has been perfectly obvious and universally conceded that the maximum which these taxes will yield will still fall far short of providing for the revenue needs of the Government. That is because incomes, large and small, have so shrunk, and corporate profits so declined that the revenue yield, even at the high rates, is correspondingly reduced. During the war profits were huge and incomes swollen and the revenue yield correspondingly large. It is a very different situation to-day.

It was to meet this gap in the revenues of the Government, which the income and profits taxes could not be made to fill, that brought the proposal of a manufacturers' excise tax, popularly and inaccurately labeled the sales tax.

A real sales tax is a tax levied on the retail price paid by the purchaser, in addition to the regular purchase price of the article. The manufacturers' excise tax is a tax (percentage of the value) levied on the producer against the wholesale value of the product. It is proposed by all who advocate this tax to exempt food and clothing from the manufacturers' excise tax, but to levy it universally against all other goods at a low rate, between 1 and 2 per cent. It admittedly would have yielded large revenues. It would have avoided the imposition of the luxury and nuisance taxes on a few industries, at relatively high rates, which seemed to be the only alternative to raise the revenue. It would have rested lightly and equitably upon all manufacturers in all lines alike.

In the present emergency, and faced with the stern necessity of finding revenues, it has seemed to me that the manufacturers' excise tax was the lesser of the evils and was greatly preferable to the special nuisance taxes to which we are now obliged to resort because of the House rejection of the manufacturers' sales tax.

The inequalities that luxury and nuisance taxes provoke also lead me to prefer a small manufacturers' sales tax spread over a large field. Let me illustrate: The candy industry claims that pastry and cake manufacturers sell large quantities of goods which compete with candy and go untaxed though candy is taxed. The chewing-gum manufacturers say that they compete with candy and that if candy goes untaxed gum should be untaxed. These various contentions, which have more or less merit, arise whenever attempts are made to pick out certain industries for a so-called luxury tax and omit other industries.

Furthermore, if footballs, baseballs, and other athletic goods are to be taxed as a luxury, why not tax expensive office furniture, tables and chairs made of expensive woods used in the homes of the well-to-do? Why not tax rugs, carpets, expensive wood paneling, hardwood floors, statuary, paintings, if we are to tax the 5-cent candy bar, the 10-cent jewelry pin, and admission to movie theaters or baseball parks? Yet none of these "luxuries" is taxed in the pending tax bill.

You will doubtless recall that the manufacturers' excise tax was recommended by the House Ways and Means Committee and supported by Democratic and Republican leaders alike but was rejected by the House after acrimonious debate in a roll call in which party lines were entirely obliterated.

I have little hope that the Senate can be induced to vote the manufacturers' excise tax back into the bill unless it receives assurances that the House will change its position.

Before leaving the subject of a choice between the manufacturers' sales tax and the nuisance and luxury taxes, let me call attention to this striking fact: Industry and business, in addition to an increased tax on their net earnings, in the pending tax bill, are to be burdened with an increased tax of 50 per cent on their postage, a new tax of over 10 per cent on their telegrams and telephones, and a new tax on their checks. The imposition of these many business nuisance taxes is, to my mind, far from being the essential prelude that business vitally needs for its recovery. The adoption of a manufacturers' sales tax of 1 per cent or 2 per cent would eliminate all these so-called nuisance taxes.

To make up for the rejection of the manufacturers' sales tax, the House hastily resorted to heavy nuisance and luxury taxes. Among these, the House bill provided for increasing the rate of letter postage from 2 cents to 3 cents. Whether the Senate will approve this proposition is an open question.

The House bill carried a considerable list of so-called and frequently miscalled luxury taxes, taxes on furs and jewelry, on motor boats and radios, sporting goods, fire arms, toilet articles, candy, chewing gum, soft drinks, and many other articles, which had proved sources of revenue in the war days. The Senate Finance Committee has proposed some changes in these items with a view to more equitable application of these taxes.

It seems certain that the new tax bill will carry high taxes on some of the popular products of our prohibition era: Brewers' wort and malt syrup, from which comes home brew; on grape concentrates and on the bottled waters so frequently called for in hotels and restaurants, accompanied by a tall glass and some ice.

An effort will probably be made on the floor of the Senate to raise as much as $350,000,000—the amount required by the authorization of the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer, with a tax upon it.

I am in sympathy with this proposal. I believe it would help to remove many of the iniquities of prohibition and lessen the untaxed income of the bootlegging profession. Unfortunately, there is little probability that this movement will succeed, because more than two-thirds of the membership of the Senate and House is still opposed to any modification of prohibition. In addition to the evils which prohibition is inflicting upon us, it is depriving us also of an enormous revenue. If the American people insist upon keeping prohibition, they must be prepared to pay the price.

The Treasury proposed, and the House and Senate committees approved, the reimposition of the war-time tax on automobiles, trucks, and auto accessories. It proposed rates of 5, 3, and 2½ per cent, respectively. The House bill carried these taxes at rates of 3, 2, and 1 per cent, and these rates have been approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

The Treasury proposed a tax of 2 cents on bank checks, estimated to produce $95,000,000 in revenue. This tax was not in the House bill. The Senate Finance Committee has recommended this tax, exempting, however, all checks under $5, thereby reducing the income to $40,000,000. This tax is substituted in the Senate bill to replace the revenues lost by the exemption of dividends from normal tax.

The Treasury proposed a tax of 1 per cent on all theater admissions over 10 cents. The House and Senate committee raised the exemption to 45 cents, which means a 5-cent tax on a 50-cent admission ticket.

There is one political issue involved in connection with the tax problem. It is the tariff issue. Democratic leaders, with few exceptions, are opposed to tariff duties. Most Republicans in the Senate favor including tariff duties.

Considerable agitation prevails throughout the country also in favor of incorporating certain tariff duties in the pending measure. Personally, I am opposed to incorporating tariff legislation in a bill designedly planned to raise internal revenue. Whatever the merits or demerits of the case for a tariff on oil, coal, copper, and lumber may be, the injection of these things into the tax bill are delaying the measure, jeopardizing it, and are opening the door to the vicious logrolling and trading which are ever accompaniment of tariff legislation.

Furthermore, foreign governments, not any too friendly at the present time because of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill, will consider our action in levying these particular tariff duties decidedly unfriendly.

That some steps may have to be taken in the near future to adjust our tariff to the new conditions throughout the world, caused by the depreciation of the currencies in many foreign countries, may become necessary. This subject is now being studied by the Tariff Commission. If action to this end is attempted at this time, it will delay for months, if not a year or more, the passage of the tax bill. Furthermore, the net effect of the proposed tariff taxes on coal, lumber, copper, and oil would be to place further burdens on the consumers—not at all commensurate with the limited revenue which the Government might receive.

The object of the pending tax bill is to raise revenue. The object of the tariff tax proposal is to prevent imports. Those who are proposing a tax on oil, coal, copper, and lumber insist that the tax apply only to the importation of such articles. Should they agree, which, of course, they do not, that the same tax be applied to the domestic production of oil, coal, copper, and lumber, we would need to look nowhere else for revenue. The taxes that the revenue bill proposes to lay on toilet preparations, furs, candy, gum jewelry, automobiles, is a tax on the domestic producer as well as the importer.

Take the case of oil, for instance. The domestic producers have 93 per cent of the domestic market. What they are proposing to do, therefore, is to try and corral the remaining 7 per cent that is imported and consumed in this country. In 1931, we exported petroleum products of three times as great a value as our imports. The position of those advocating the oil tax, therefore, is one of seeking to monopolize the American market and to hold their own in the world markets as well. This, of course, is an impossible undertaking.

Many of the Members of the Senate who favor a tariff on copper and lumber appear to have made common cause with Senators who are fighting for the oil and coal tariffs disguised as excise taxes.

We are in the midst of that fight at the moment. The final outcome is still uncertain. In a series of roll calls within the Senate committee a week ago, the oil and coal taxes in the House bill were sustained by a narrow margin and a motion was carried to include in the bill a tax of indeterminate amount on imported copper. Motions to include tariff taxes on lumber and other wood products were rejected. In a second series of roll calls, later in the week, the coal and oil tax items were eliminated from the bill and a copper tariff tax proposal rejected by equally close votes.

This fight will be renewed when the bill comes before the Senate itself. Either in or out of the bill so determined are the proponents to use the tax bill as a vehicle for their tariff demands, that other considerations seem to be subordinate to that single objective.

In conclusion let me urge that in dealing with the tax bill Congress confine its efforts and direct its energies to raising revenues, to the revision of our tax laws, to the enactment of a new tax law as promptly as possible, instead of being drawn into a tariff battle.

To all the other adverse business factors the very pendency of the tax bill adds a still further paralyzing hand on business recovery. Our duty to the Treasury and the public is to get the revenues from the new taxes started as soon as possible. It is estimated that it makes a difference of $100,000,000 a month, every month we delay. Our duty to the country is to get the tax question settled, so that industry may know where it stands with respect to tax levies just as speedily as possible.

LEGALIZATION OF BEER

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I understand that to-day there will be submitted from the Committee on Manufactures of the Senate a majority report and the views of the minority in regard to the so-called beer bill, and in this connection I ask unanimous consent that there may be read at the desk a brief poem which ought to furnish great relief to those who are struggling over the tax bill and dreading its arrival.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the poem being read, although I did not know what kind of a poem it was when I yielded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TO CONGRESS

Beer will balance the Budget;
Beer will bring bacon and bread;
Beer will brighten the beggar;
Beer will bring him a bed;
Beer will banish the bigot;
Bereft of balance and blind;
Beer will benefit body;
Beer ever befriended mankind.

Beer will balance the Budget;
Beer will boost our best bond;
Beer will bedevil the broker
"Bear" ing us into despond;
Beer will be balm to the banker
By bringing big balances back;
Beer will belch smoke from our buildings;
Beer will mean billions in "jack."

Beer will balance the Budget;
Beer will be welcomed with glee;
Beer will help millions now idle—
Beer with a tax of cents three.
So why wait, O Congress! O Senate!
The Nation sits helpless and numb;
Tax beer and rout the bootlegger,
The bandit, kidnaper, and bum!

Better have bread for the babies;
Beef to stem misery's flood;
Better face facts than a theory;
Better have work than have blood!

—Forrest Rutherford.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I merely wish to inquire who called what has just been read poetry? [Laughter.]

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in regard to the so-called poem which was just read from the desk, I desire to say that I think undoubtedly there are a great many people throughout the United States who would like to drown their troubles, but I am afraid that under a proposition such as is suggested in this poem the remedy might be worse than the disease, although the disease is bad enough, causing unemployment and many to go broke; but it is not because of the prohibition question.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to proceed to consider the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, last night before the recess was taken I was trying to depict the present situation of the farmers throughout the Nation, who are in the hardest condition in which they have ever been. Last week before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate hearings were held for three consecutive days. At those hearings the leaders of the great farm organizations of this country—the Farmers' Union, the Grange, and the Farm Bureau—appeared and testified. Those great farm organizations recommended an amendment to the farm marketing act. That amendment in the form of a bill has been introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and I am assured by him that this measure and other agriculture measures will be taken up at the first opportunity, just as soon as the hearings shall be printed, which I hope will be within the next few days.

Mr. President, in view of the present situation of the farmers throughout the Nation it seems to me it is absolutely necessary that this session of Congress shall not adjourn until some worth-while action shall be taken to relieve the agricultural emergency in which we find ourselves. The amendment to the farm marketing act embodied in the bill that has been introduced by the Senator from Oregon, at the request of the farm organizations, designed to stabilize the prices of farm products, will be a long step in the right direction. I also have a bill pending, which is known as Senate bill 1197, providing for refinancing the farmer. These two measures are, in my opinion—and I believe that opinion is shared by those interested in agriculture and, I am sure, by the farmers themselves—would put agriculture on a paying basis, on a business basis, and that is what is necessary at the present time.

Mr. President, I am not going to take more time. I merely wish to say in conclusion that it seems to me that Senate bill 51, a motion to take up which is pending, would be entirely out of place at this time, authorizing, as the bill does, a program for the building up of our already great Navy. The program would involve an expenditure, as was admitted by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, of from $700,000,000 to $2,000,000,000, according to the period of time within which it would be consummated. In view of the fact that the disarmament conference is in session at Geneva and that all the nations of the world have gone on record in the Kellogg peace pact to refrain from war, I believe it would be a mistake at this time to pass a measure of this kind, and I hope the motion to proceed to its consideration will be voted down.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, at least one lesson is to be learned from the devastating depression which has swept over the land with such blighting effect, and that is that industry in this country can not continue prosperous without a prosperous agriculture.

A few years ago, when industry was reveling in its heyday of prosperity and agriculture was wallowing in the slough of despond, there were many of our business leaders who fell into the delusion that industry in this country could continue to be prosperous regardless of whether agriculture prospered or not. Some were even so blinded that they said there was no farm problem; that agriculture was as prosperous as it deserved to be; that we had too many farmers anyway, and all that was necessary was to let things alone and they would work out all right.

But there were some of us who were unwilling to accept this counsel of despair, this do-nothing policy for agriculture. We warned the country of the folly of allowing agriculture to become decadent and we insisted that the welfare of industry and city workers was involved in the prosperity or decadence of agriculture as our basic industry. Congress came to recognize this situation and twice passed the McNary-Haugen bill, which sought to put agriculture within the protective system and restore it to a parity with industry; but, unfortunately, the measure was vetoed on both occasions by the President, and not enough Members of Congress sufficiently realized the gravity of the situation or the importance of that measure to pass it over the President's veto.

What happened? How did things work? Did they cure themselves as predicted by the false prophets of big business? Though deferred for a time, the day of reckoning finally came, the day when industry paid its penalty for allowing agriculture, the basic industry of this country, to become decadent. In 1929, explosion of the bubble came with stunning, paralyzing suddenness and with devastating, demoralizing effect. The stock-market debacle merely ignited the train. Prices crashed; factories closed; banks failed; investments were wiped out; farms and businesses were sold under the hammer; millions of unemployed walked the streets searching vainly for work while they and their families were hungry, ragged, destitute, and in many cases, homeless. Despair and fear were everywhere.

What had happened? The buying power of the Nation had collapsed. For 10 years the buying power of agriculture had been drying up, due to continued depression. Slowly this undermined the stability of industry. Its effects were largely concealed by the building boom which followed the war and by the speculation orgy of 1928 and 1929, which gave the country a false sense of security and prosperity. When the building boom and the speculation spree collapsed by the contraction of credits in 1929, industry took the cumulative effects of a decade of shriveling buying power with unabated force.

Mr. President, the factories are idle because the people have lost their buying power. When the ruralists of the country, constituting 44 per cent of our population, lose their buying power, it destroys the markets for the products of industry, and this in turn destroys another large block of buying power by throwing out of employment the workers in the factories which are producing commodities sold to farmers. So, when agriculture stops buying it throws millions out of work in the cities, and this in turn stops more factories and throws more people out of work, and again the buying power of the public is further reduced.

Some of our industrial and financial leaders have seen the light and are pleading that something be done to restore prosperity to agriculture. Charles E. Hearst, vice president of the American Farm Bureau Federation and president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation, testifying before the Senate Agricultural Committee last week, stated that he had been asked by representatives of some of the great insurance companies to speak for them also in urging Congress to act swiftly in enacting legislation to raise the prices of farm products and restore prosperity to agriculture. They have loaned vast sums of money on the security of farm lands. The terrific slump in farm prices has forced the farmers operating these farms to the point of giving them up because of inability to pay even the interest and taxes. The insurance companies for a while took over the farms; they now have found out that it is a losing proposition to try to operate these farms under present prices. It is useless to try to sell them, because even if buyers can be found, the values of farm land have sunk so low that the properties in a great many cases would not bring enough to pay the mortgages against them. Unless relief is afforded to agriculture, the superstructure of finance and industry resting upon our agriculture is in danger of crashing to ruin.

If something is not done to relieve the situation, we have not yet seen the worst of the depression. Industry has not yet felt the full cumulative effects of the deflation. It has not yet reached the level of agriculture. Labor has not yet touched the depths of suffering from the deflation. While industry and labor have suffered severely, they have not suffered as severely as agriculture.

Agriculture thus far has suffered more from the depression than any other of our great industries. A recent study by Frederick C. Mills, published in the New Bulletin of the National Bureau of Economic Research, December 23, 1931, showed that the purchasing power of the raw products of American farms declined 24.8 per cent between July, 1929, and October, 1931, whereas the purchasing power of all other products, including processed farm products, actually increased 6 per cent during the same period. In other words, so far as prices are concerned, the purchasing power of industrial products really profited during this period at the expense of agriculture. I wish to insert in the RECORD a table from this publication showing how agriculture has been hit harder than any other great industry in the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Changes in purchasing power, per unit, between July, 1929, and October, 1931, selected commodity groups [1]

Number of price quotations	Commodity group	Degree of change in purchasing power—decrease (−), or increase (+)
		Per cent
140	Raw materials	−13.4
338	Manufactured goods	+6.1
163	Foods	−12.9
315	Nonfoods	+7.3
81	Products of American farms, raw	−24.8
397	All other products (including processed farm products)	+6.0
285	Producers' goods	−1.9
193	Consumers' goods	+2.8

[1] These measurements are based upon index numbers constructed by the National Bureau of Economic Research, from price quotations compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. The index numbers are unweighted geometric means of relative prices.

Mr. HOWELL. Unless the buying power of agriculture is restored and the deflation halted other industries surely will be dragged down to the low estate to which agriculture has fallen. Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, in a recent statement to the special subcommittee on money stabilization of the House Banking and Currency Committee, called attention to this fact and cited estimates to the effect that if other income groups have to come down to the level of agriculture it will mean reductions of 40 per cent in transporting, processing, and distributing costs; 25 to 50 per cent in doctors' and nurses' fees; 60 to 65 per cent in the dollar capitalization of industrial concerns; one-third in school-teachers' salaries; 50 per cent in wages of union labor; and so on all along the line.

Mr. President, this, indeed, is a gloomy picture that confronts us unless something is done and done quickly.

What shall be our policy? Shall we allow industry, labor, banking, and all other groups to sink to the low economic level at which agriculture now stands, or shall we raise agriculture to its proper level of equality with industry and thus raise them all to the level of prosperity which this great Nation of ours with its abundance of resources should enjoy?

Organized agriculture has already answered this question so far as it is concerned. It is not taking a selfish attitude, so far at least. It is not demanding now that all other industries be deflated to the level of agriculture. It takes a much sounder course; namely, that agriculture be brought up to the level of the others, and that all be advanced in prosperity. By way of illustration of the stand of organized agriculture, I cite a recent statement made by Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, before the special subcommittee on money stabilization of the House Banking and Currency Committee.

That is part of the picture of what will happen if the rest of this country is brought down to a level with agriculture. It is much more important that agriculture be brought up and the general level raised.

This shows the broad, constructive viewpoint of organized agriculture. It does not want to destroy its market for its produce in the cities and towns. It wants a prosperous industry, a sound banking system, and employment for labor; but unless agriculture can be brought up to equality with industry, then all other industries in this Nation ultimately must sink to the level with agriculture. Agriculture can not longer endure the existing inequality, whereby its products are worth only 50 cents on the dollar in exchange for products of industry.

Mr. President, agriculture must have equality with industry. Either we must raise agriculture to the level of industry, or we must bring industry down to the level of agriculture by erasing from the statute books the special tariff privileges of industry, the special immigration laws for labor, the price-fixing mechanism for railroads and for banks in the Federal reserve act, and all other special privileges whereby industry, commerce, and labor are given special advantages. I do not think we want that to happen. Far better to bring agriculture up to a prosperous level.

Remedy this inequality between agriculture and industry by raising farm prices and you immediately start the wheels of industry in motion and put the unemployed back to work. Restore the farm purchasing power, and you will thereby provide an enormous market here for the products of industry—paint, lumber, nails, cement, and other materials for those long-neglected farm buildings; fencing materials, trucks, tractors, silos, binders, plows, and other farm machinery to replace worn or inefficient equipment; new dresses, shoes, hats, and clothing for more than 50,000,000 people in our rural areas; radios, electric irons, new stoves, and other household conveniences which large numbers of farm women are now denied through lack of income to purchase them; and a host of luxury articles which farmers, by reason of their low incomes, are now unable to buy. The reopening of factories and the expansion of industrial production that will be made possible by this restoration of farm purchasing power will add still further purchasing power through the large number of laborers who will resume employment and become purchasers both of industrial goods and farm products. This in turn will help agriculture by increasing the demand for its products, and this again will be reflected in a further expansion of industrial activity. In other words, instead of continuing on the downward course of deflation, destruction, and despair we will start upward on the path of prosperity.

Shall we do this? If so, there is not a day we can afford to lose. Not more than 40 days of this session remain. The eyes of farmers are turned toward Congress as never before.

It is urged that effort is useless because the President will veto any measure of the character which agriculture is demanding. I do not believe this; but even so, Congress is not excused from action. Moreover, it has the power to render its policies effective notwithstanding a veto.

If we do not send to the President a constructive measure for the farmer, what are we to say to our constituents when we return home? There will be but one thing to say—"Congress has not the will to act for agriculture."

Mr. President, it is an unfortunate fact that there is no bill upon the calendar of the Senate providing constructive relief for the farmer, and yet we have been in session here more than five months. True, we have loaned him some money; we have given him some wheat; but he does not want to borrow money. He is not asking for charity. What he wants is the equality to which he is entitled. Is Congress going to act, or are we going to adjourn without doing anything for the farmer? As I have asked, are we to go home and tell him that Congress has not the will to act; that his case is hopeless; that he must look to other remedies? If so, to what can the farmer turn?

As I have stated before upon this floor, we have varied the distribution of wealth for different industries in this country through the tariff, through the price fixing of the Interstate Commerce Commission, through the price fixing of the public-service commissions throughout the country; and there are two bills now pending in Congress that propose further price fixing—price fixing for vessels in intercoastal commerce; price fixing in connection with busses; and there are those who would fix prices for trucks upon the highways. But, Mr. President, when we talk about price fixing for the farmer, directly or indirectly, we are told that it is impossible; that nothing can be done; and we are not even willing to make an experiment.

It is pointed out that we did experiment with the Farm Board. Yes; and the results are already evident. We provided $500,000,000 as a loan fund for that experiment.

But, Mr. President, in the last 10 years the postal deficit, which constitutes nothing more nor less than a subsidy, and largely to business, has amounted to more than $600,000,000. No loan about that; it is gone. What we have done for the farmer is but a drop in the bucket. As I have pointed out before on the floor of the Senate, the Farm Board did not have a chance to bring back equality for the farmer. The Farm Board was nothing but a finance corporation for the agricultural industry. We gave the Farm Board no power that an ordinary corporation that might have been provided by the farmers could not have exercised. All we did was to provide for the payment of its expenses and to afford it $500,000,000 to loan to the agricultural industry; for what purpose? For the purpose of returning equality to agriculture.

Mr. President, at that time it would have required an increase of $4,000,000,000 a year in agriculture's annual income to have brought back equality. Therefore, what we actually proposed was that the farmer should be loaned $500,000,000, and that he himself, with his training and his experience, should bring back equality to himself. What would he have accomplished had equality been reestablished? On that borrowed money he would have had to make 800 per cent annually for his industry. It was hopeless from the outset. It was not what the farmer asked. It was not what the representatives of the farmers asked. It was not what the Congress initially proposed.

Within the next 40 days are we going to consider what the farmer wants, what he needs, what is demanded to meet the situation; or are we going to adjourn about the 10th of June and go home and tell the farmer, "Congress has not the will to aid you, has not the will even to make an experiment for your benefit; it has not passed one constructive measure during the recent session that might enable you, if possible, to achieve equality with other industries"?

GIFT OF SILVER SERVICE TO MONTANA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VANDENBERG in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1047) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Historical Society of Montana, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was in use on the gunboat, No. 9, Helena, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "deliver to the custody of" and insert "loan to," and on the same page, line 7, after "Helena," to insert a comma and "until such time as he may order its return to the Navy."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF PUBLIC LANDS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2396) to amend section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), relating to the admission into the Union of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, which was, on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after "other" down to and including "State" in line 4 and insert "lands, public or private, of equal value and as near as may be of equal area, but if any of the said lands are exchanged with the United States such exchange shall be limited to surveyed, nonmineral, unreserved public lands of the United States within the State."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

STATUES OF GEORGE WASHINGTON AND ROBERT E. LEE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 24) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of this Congress be presented to the governor and through him to the people of the State of Virginia for the statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee, whose names are so honorably identified with the history of our country; that these works of art are accepted in the name of the Nation and assigned to places in the old Hall of Representatives already set aside by Congress for the statues of eminent citizens; and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the Governor of Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I ask that the Senate concur in the House resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the motion proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the Senate proceed to consider the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Maine, but he does not appear to be in the Chamber at this moment.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kean	Schall
Austin	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smith
Blaine	Fletcher	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	George	Long	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Metcalf	Trammell
Capper	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Howell	Pittman	Waterman
Costigan	Hull	Reed	Watson
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	White
Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the debate on the motion of the Senator from Maine has developed a state of mind on the part of Senators which I think may well be taken into consideration by the Senator submitting the motion.

Unless the Geneva conference shall reach an agreement which will make unnecessary that course I shall favor building our Navy to the standard contemplated by the London treaty. But it is the thought of many Senators that the present is an inopportune time to make the authorization carried in the bill of the Senator from Maine.

In the first place, the Geneva conference is attempting to provide for the reduction of both land and naval armaments. Events have transpired which disclose that the task of the conference is exceedingly difficult, and its efforts may not result in signal success. Whether it is prudent to anticipate the conclusions of the Geneva conference and proceed at once with the authorization of the construction program, considered apart from other related questions, will, of course, be determined by each Senator.

Early in the present year what is called an armament truce was entered into by the leading nations participating in the Geneva conference. I do not assert that to proceed now with construction as contemplated by the bill would constitute a violation of the letter of that truce; it certainly might be construed as interfering with the spirit of the arrangement.

If it were proposed to proceed promptly with the execution of the program I would not make the suggestion about to be submitted to the Senator from Maine, namely, that action on the subject be postponed for, say, a period of 30 days. Everyone here would wish to see the very heavy expense which this bill will finally entail lightened, if it is possible and practicable to do so.

The Senator from Maine has announced that there is no intention of proceeding at an early date with construction. It is entirely true that plans might be in preparation. A delay pending further developments of the Geneva conference could not impair in any sense the national defense as contemplated by the program.

What I am thinking is that the Senate may vote to proceed to the consideration of this bill, debate it indefinitely, and then reach the conclusion that the time is inopportune for the recognition of the financial obligations in the bill. This thought is given some emphasis by the financial condition of the country, as well as the prevailing business condition.

I do not see that any harm will result to the United States from a postponement of this issue for a reasonable period. I can see how it is possible that other nations who have entered into the truce referred to and who are participating in the conference mentioned might question the good faith of our proceeding now to authorize a program which shall not be immediately begun and which in any event is not expected to be carried out within a few years.

So I am suggesting to the Senator from Maine that the motion and the subject be deferred for a period of, say, 30 days.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas has suggested that my motion be deferred for a period of 30 days. If the motion is deferred, would the result be that we would get a vote on the motion and on the bill before the adjournment of this session of Congress? If I were sure that could be done, I should be entirely willing to accept the suggestion of the learned Senator from Arkansas; but I do not want to lose the position that my bill now has in the Senate.

The bill has been on the calendar for nearly two months. It is a bill which is very vital to the national defense of the country. I have been trying my best during the whole of these two months to bring up the bill. The steering committee has awarded me a preferred place on its program and we have come now to the time when the bill has a chance of consideration. Unless I can have some assurance that my bill will be acted upon at this session of Congress, I do not think I should be called upon to give way now. Of course, if the Senator from Arkansas takes this attitude against bringing it up now and if Members of the Senate on his side of the Chamber follow him, as they may, in all likelihood the bill will not be taken up; but I would rather have the Senate vote on it than withdraw it now unless I may have some assurance that I will get action on it at this session of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas rose.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator wait just a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator spoke about the Geneva conference and what may or may not be done at that conference. No one knows what will be done. In any event this bill does not in any way interfere with what may be done at the conference. There is a special clause in the bill which reads:

> In the event of an international agreement for the further limitation of naval armament to which the United States is signatory, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend, in whole or in part, the naval construction authorized by this act in order to bring the naval armament of the United States within the limitations so agreed upon.

The Senator from Arkansas has also spoken of the effect of the passage of the bill on other nations, and has said it might in some way be construed as not being in accord with the spirit of the armistice truce. This question was brought up yesterday in the Senate, and I read to the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State in which he stated in so many words that we have a perfect right under the terms of the truce to replace any of the existing vessels in our Navy. Furthermore, he stated that there was nothing in the bill that would contravene the truce in any way.

Therefore, Mr. President, much as I regret to do so, I shall have to go ahead with my motion. If the Senate votes it down, very well; but if the Senator from Arkansas can give me the assurance that I will get action on my bill, which is absolutely necessary if we are going to keep up our Navy, I am willing to accept his suggestion.

I think that on yesterday I showed the imperative need for its passage, which is that unless we pass the bill or the Vinson bill, which is before the House of Representatives, we will find ourselves next year in the same situation in which we find ourselves now. The Budget will not be able to make any recommendations for appropriations, and until it does so, and until authority for building has been granted by Congress, no appropriations can be made.

The very determined opposition which has been made to bringing up my motion, which is most unusual in the Senate—I do not recall having seen anything of the sort happen during this session of Congress—indicates that whenever we try to bring up any motion or measure to build up and keep up our Navy we are going to meet with determined opposition on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I would like to ask the Senator from Maine, in view of the fact that we are taxing the taxpayers of the United States $750,000,000 this year for foreign governments, and in view of present economic conditions in the United States, if he thinks we can afford to build a navy involving such an enormous expenditure this year?

Mr. HALE. I will reply to the Senator by asking him if, in view of the world situation, he thinks we can afford to give up our Navy? This bill is not principally for the purpose of adding to our Navy by building new ships that do not replace ships which we have now. It is principally to replace ships which we now have and which are wearing out and becoming obsolete.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. It is principally to carry out the program outlined by the naval conference at London, and will, as I understand it, involve an expenditure of over $1,000,000,000.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but there were no definite figures given.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The figures that were given out at the time by the Navy Department were in excess of $1,000,000,000, as I understood them. I voted against that treaty myself because of the fact that it put the blessing of the Congress of the United States upon a large naval program for every country in the world.

Mr. HALE. But in the treaty of London and in the treaty of Washington a ratio was agreed upon among the various nations which took part. The understanding of the Congress and of the people of the United States when that ratio was determined upon was that we were going to live up to it. We have not lived up to it. While we have let our Navy drift behind other countries have kept theirs up, so we find ourselves now far below the ratio figures that were adopted in the treaty. I maintain that is not a proper situation into which we should permit the United States to drift.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In view of the fact that we ratified that treaty, the logical step is for the Government of the United States, if we can afford it, to build up our Navy to the naval strength which the Treaty of London agreed was a proper limitation.

Mr. HALE. I quite agree with the Senator, and that is what I am trying to bring about.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. If I had voted for the treaty I would vote for this bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, can the Senator from Arkansas give me any assurance that I will get action on my bill at this session of Congress?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was trying to assist the Senator from Maine. I am not able to give him assurance that the Senate would vote on the bill. I am pointing out to the Senator the fact that I am in sympathy with building up to the standard of the London Treaty unless that standard is reduced by a subsequent treaty; that I think if he forces the issue now he is going to lose, and that there is no such emergency with respect to this program as makes it imperative that the bill be voted on immediately.

Of course I could not bind the Senate to vote on either the motion or the bill itself. The Senator well understands that. My thought is that during the course of the next 30 days events may transpire which will reflect further light on the necessity of proceeding with the program.

The Senator has said it is necessary to pass the bill right now or during this session in order to secure recognition in the Budget for next year. The Senator well knows that there is another session of Congress to be held this fall. The Senator well knows that a deficiency appropriation may be estimated for and sent to the Congress at any time after an authorization is made. Many Senators who sympathize with the purpose to maintain a Navy in due and fair proportions to other navies feel that no wholesome end will be accomplished by passing the bill at this juncture, and they do not care to be committed to opposing the program of construction which the bill contemplates, provided that program is not modified.

It has been said by others that owing to the state of the Treasury and to the demand for emergency appropriations, only some of which have been authorized and others of which probably will be authorized, the Congress might very well defer action until it knows whether the Geneva conference is going to accomplish anything substantial in the way of reducing armament.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I take it whatever the Geneva conference accomplishes, the Senator would not want to have this country tie itself up to any weakening of the ratios already established with Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy in the Washington treaty. Am I not correct?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly; but it does not follow that adherence to the ratio implies or makes unavoidable the execution of the plan in the treaty heretofore agreed to. If there is anything in the suggestion that world conditions will prompt other nations to coordinate their efforts with a view to reducing the burdens of militarism, I do not care to take a course which might embarrass those efforts. I do not express an opinion as to prospects for the success of the Geneva conference.

If I thought the question of national defense were really involved here, I would waive the consideration which I am urging upon the Senator from Maine. He has referred to what we may do on this side. I was prompted to make this suggestion by a number of Senators who feel about it as I do. I hope the Senate will not take up the bill, debate it for a week, and then reject it, as I must say to the Senator I think is probable, from the discussion that has proceeded here, and the considerations that will prompt its rejection, in the main, are not related to questions of national defense or the adequacy of the Navy. They are related to the subject pertaining to the conference at Geneva and the efforts there to reduce the standard of armament and to the truce into which this Government entered.

I said in the beginning that there was no intention to assert that to go forward with this program would be a violation of that truce; but, after all, I am wondering what an armament truce means if it implies that this Government is entirely free to observe the truce and at the same time commit itself to appropriations approximating $1,000,000,000 for naval construction.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, under the terms of the truce to which the Senator from Arkansas refers any country party to the truce has the right of replacement. This was not our original idea; it was not the original Italian idea; but the other countries in their acceptance of the truce made that express reservation. It was acting on that reservation that the Secretary of State took the matter up with the Army and the Navy and got their approval of the truce before it was finally agreed to by this Government. Furthermore——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. The Senator will excuse me for a moment. Furthermore, Mr. President, as I pointed out yesterday, two of the countries parties to the truce have already started building replacements.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think, under all the circumstances, the Senator from Maine is entitled sometime during this session to test his bill on its merits. So far as I am concerned, whatever my views might be as to the merits of the bill I should not stand in opposition to the Senator having a right to be heard upon it and having a vote upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas in just a moment. However, I would prefer to debate this bill after the Geneva conference is through. So far as any doubts that I have to express are concerned, I would prefer to express them after the Geneva conference is through.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Idaho have any idea when the Geneva conference will get through?

Mr. BORAH. I have an idea; but, of course, I do not know.

Mr. HALE. Will it be this year, or this decade, or when will it be?

Mr. BORAH. The Geneva conference is about through now, in my opinion; but I would prefer to discuss the bill after it is realized that the Geneva conference, whether through or not, is not going to accomplish anything along the lines in which I am interested. For that reason, I should prefer that the consideration of the bill be deferred, and although I am opposed to taking it up at this time, I shall not interpose any objection to the Senator from Maine having his bill taken up at the end of 30 days.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am impressed, of course, by the attitude taken by these older and more distinguished Senators in this body, and if I could act with them I should like to do so. I am wondering, however, if it would not be possible to enter into an agreement by unanimous consent to take up the bill at a later period, possibly after 30 days, and agree to have a vote within a certain time thereafter?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I thought I made clear in suggesting the postponement of the motion that while no assurance could be given the Senator from Maine on my part that a vote would be had, for reasons that are perfectly clear—having no authority to bind the Senate—I have no objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill. I did not myself propose a time for a vote, because it was clear to my own mind that such an agreement could not be secured at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not want to take the able Senator off his feet.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have concluded what I had to say.

Mr. McNARY. I listened to the Senator's proposal. Of course, in order to make this bill a special order for some time during the session of Congress, would require a unanimous-consent agreement. I think we all agree that Congress will probably be in session on the 3d day of June, but that we shall adjourn by the 12th of June.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the language of the Senator from Maine, if the Senator from Oregon can give me some assurance to that effect I shall be both astonished and gratified.

Mr. McNARY. I was merely suggesting to the Senator from Arkansas whether it would be possible to come to an agreement to vote on the bill or to make it a special order for June 2.

Mr. BORAH. We should have to have an agreement to take the bill up at some time.

Mr. McNARY. I was suggesting the possibility at this time of entering into an agreement—and I am assuming that June 2 might be agreeable all around—to make the bill a special order for that day.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am concerned, I would agree that the bill be taken up on a certain day.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has said that he thought I was entitled to a vote on my measure.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator knows that I do not filibuster.

Mr. HALE. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. But if we take the bill up on a certain day, I should like to have a reasonable time in which to discuss it; that is all. I do not know that I should want 10 minutes; possibly I should not, I do not know, but I might. The trouble is that if we consent to vote upon a certain day we do not know whether or not the bill will be laid before the Senate prior to that time.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what I should like to do would be to secure unanimous consent to make the bill a special order for a certain date and then agree that so much time shall be taken for its consideration before a final vote.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not desire my silence to imply that I agree to the theory of disposing of this bill either by avoiding its consideration now or defeating it by a vote in the future. I do not agree with many of my colleagues on this side, able and eminent as I know them to be, nor eminent Senators on the other side as to the question particularly at stake, that is, in assuming that the conference at Geneva will reach any conclusion that should divert the United States of America from taking whatever course its natural sense of defense and preservation would indicate to the agents of the people sitting as Members of Congress.

I wish to say that if the Geneva conference is hoped for to work out any solution or conclusion which would gratify the desire of those who look for disarmament or limitation of armaments, nothing would bring that action more quickly than the observation that the United States has proceeded to consider its part of the treaty at once and proceeded to meet the displacement of ships so far as it is privileged to do and has given indication that, if it is not duly provided in the Geneva conference that protection inures to this Government along the lines of a convention consistent with the interests of America, the United States will proceed for itself.

The very action here in considering the bill, based on the theory that it is in compliance with the conventions of the past, will do much to bring to a focus the present convention, that seems to be playing with the fate of politics, as it ejects and rejects the propositions of the distinguished Secretary of State, if the public press be correct. In such an atmosphere nothing would more stimulate it to a sincere action and to a definite end as the entry now of the Senate upon the consideration of this bill, provided that we are complying with the convention and neither play with its purpose nor postpone its consideration.

Therefore for myself I heartily favor either course, the entering upon the consideration of the bill now that we may prove what its object is, or, second, the reaching of some agreement that will give us opportunity to present to the country the views of the Senate upon its national defense and its righteous position in the international relations of the world——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I desire the floor in my own right as soon as I can get it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to put a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate set this bill as a special order for June 3, and that thereafter the bill shall come to a vote within two days' time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maine, who is so ardently pressing the consideration of the bill, which I think ought not to be taken up at this time because of the reaction and the repercussions, which would be disastrous, I think, to the proper consideration of the problems of the Geneva conference, would separate his proposition, I am not so sure but I would not assent to it.

If, however, he intends to couple with the request that the Senate take up the bill on a certain day the further request that the discussion shall be limited to one or two days, I am opposed to that. If the Senator will ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill or to make it a special order at some date early in June, speaking for myself only I shall not object.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am afraid if we simply agree to take up the bill on June 3, that date being so near the possible end of the session, the same tactics would be adopted at that time that are now being employed against my motion to take up the bill, and it would be a very easy matter to carry the bill over and take no action whatever.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would it be agreeable to the Senator to take the bill up at a certain day and agree that there shall be a vote on it before adjournment?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I would agree to that.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I should like to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement that the bill now under consideration be made a special order of the Senate for June 2 and be kept before the Senate thereafter until a final vote is reached. Such an agreement will impose no limitation of time in the consideration of the measure but will assure a vote after a full hearing.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I would not want to agree to that proposal, because the date would be so near the probable end of the session that other legislation of extreme importance that should be enacted might be crowded out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington objects to the request of the Senator from Oregon. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho would be entirely fair, that the bill be made a special order for June 3, and that final action be taken on the bill before the close of the session. I should be entirely willing to accept that. The bill then would not have to be before the Senate between those dates unless the Senate saw fit to consider it.

Mr. DILL. Do I understand that the Senator proposes to have a vote on the bill on that day?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no!

Mr. DILL. Then, it might keep us in session all summer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington knows perfectly well that it would be impossible to keep a concurrent resolution for adjournment from being passed this summer. This seems to me to be a fair proposition, because it does not necessarily keep the bill before the Senate continuously. Other matters may be taken up. It is simply an agreement that we shall have a vote before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think that should be satisfactory to everyone.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may the proposed agreement be stated specifically again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered by unanimous consent, That the bill (S. 51) be made a special order for Friday, June 3, 1932, and that final action be taken on the bill before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, would not that require a quorum?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, do I understand that that would not interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not think a request of this kind requires a quorum, because it does not fix a specific day for a vote.

Mr. DILL. It seems to me it is a matter for which there ought to be a quorum here. Senators who have been very much interested in this matter did not know it was coming up. I think there ought to be a quorum; and I make the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kean	Schall
Austin	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Shortridge
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smith
Blaine	Fletcher	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	George	Long	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Metcalf	Trammell
Capper	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hawes	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hayden	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Howell	Pittman	Waterman
Costigan	Hull	Reed	Watson
Couzens	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.	White
Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this agreement should be entered into, but we should desire to take up an appropriation bill, and it should be necessary to take it up by motion, would such a motion be out of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion would not be out of order, inasmuch as the agreement does not provide that the bill shall be kept continuously before the Senate, and the appropriation bill could be taken up by a majority vote.

Mr. JONES. This agreement would not interfere with it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not interfere with it if a majority of the Senate should vote to take up the other measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, after the proposition is stated, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered by unanimous consent, That the bill (S. 51) be made a special order for Friday, June 3, 1932, and that final action be taken on the bill before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Should the Senate accept the unanimous-consent agreement, would unanimous consent be required to adjourn the session of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate, by a majority vote, could agree to a concurrent resolution for a final adjournment of the two Houses; but, under the agreement, the Chair believes that Senate bill 51 would have to be submitted to a vote before the adjournment of the Senate was had.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I do not see why the unanimous-consent agreement can not be agreed to without the last section, with respect to passing the bill before the adjournment of this session of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no agreement to pass it. There is an agreement to vote on it.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to have the last section of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let it be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

And that final action be taken on the bill before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

Mr. COUZENS. If that means what it says, we are going to stay here until we take final action on the bill, and that is what I object to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the question I propounded was this: Suppose it was the desire of Congress to adjourn, seeing the futility of attempting to reach a final vote. Would it require unanimous consent, or can the Congress at any time adjourn by two-thirds vote, irrespective of the language of the unanimous-consent agreement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the judgment of the Chair, an adjournment of the two Houses can be brought about by a majority vote of the Senate and a majority vote of the House.

Mr. COUZENS. The agreement is misleading, then.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have great respect for the opinion of the Chair; but it seems to me perfectly plain that if we agree to this unanimous-consent proposal we must finally dispose of this bill, unless we change the agreement by unanimous consent, before we adjourn without day, and that it would be impossible for the Senate to adjourn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the agreement should be entered into, clearly, to my mind, the two Houses could adopt a concurrent resolution, say, to adjourn on the 12th of June. The effect of this agreement is to require a vote on the bill prior to adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair stated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But the adjournment would be brought about by exactly the same process that is customary. In other words, if we voted to adjourn on the 4th of June we would have to vote on this bill either on the 3d after it was taken up or on the 4th before adjourning. Of course, that is just by way of illustration.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to ask how a vote would be forced if some Senator had the floor and would not surrender it before the time of adjournment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Chair would hold, before declaring the Senate adjourned, that the Senate had obligated itself to vote; and before putting the adjournment resolution into execution he would put the question.

Mr. COUZENS. How would he take off the floor a Senator who was occupying it up to the time of adjournment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. He would hold that further discussion was out of order; that the unanimous-consent agreement precluded further discussion.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FESS. If this unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, and the House passes a concurrent resolution saying that the House will adjourn on the 10th of June, for example, at 12 o'clock, and the concurrent resolution comes over here and we pass it, and we have not yet voted on this bill, and I get the floor just before 12 o'clock and hold it, and the hour of 12 o'clock arrives—the time fixed for adjournment under the concurrent resolution—what would be the decision of the Chair?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would hold that the Senator could be taken from the floor by the point being made, and a vote taken on the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. FESS. And adjournment would be enforced by virtue of the preceding vote on the concurrent resolution? I think that is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the case the Senator puts, suppose we had agreed with the House to a concurrent resolution that we would adjourn at 3 o'clock p. m. on a certain day, and the Senator had the floor at that time. At 3 o'clock the Chair, if it was in order for him to do so, would announce that the Senate was adjourned without date; and if the Senator had the floor he could keep it until 3 o'clock.

What the Chair would have to do, if he complied with this unanimous-consent agreement, would be, at some time before 3 o'clock that he judged would be long enough, to call for a vote on the bill; and there might be a dozen amendments offered, and roll calls held. I do not see how it could be determined.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am inclined to agree with the Senator from Nebraska that a Senator can not be taken off the floor by an agreement to vote on something at an indefinite hour. But would it not meet the proposition if we should agree that if this matter had not been voted on prior thereto, one hour before the time set for adjournment we should vote on it?

Mr. NORRIS. Even that might get us into a predicament where it would be physically impossible to carry out the agreement, it seems to me.

I do not understand why Senators who are in favor of this bill want to compel the Senate to vote on it before a certain time if the Senate does not want to. If there were to be no proposition for adjournment, we could carry this agreement out, of course; at a certain time we could commence to vote, and keep on until we got through. But why fix any time?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. We have not had a vote in the Senate as to whether we want to take the bill up or not. Suppose a majority of the Senate does not want to take it up; under this we might have to do it any way. It would give to the bill a preferential status, it seems to me, to which it has not been shown to be entitled.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator was not in the Chamber, I believe, when the Senator from Arkansas asked me to postpone my motion for a period of 30 days.

Mr. NORRIS. I was here, and heard what was said. Suppose the Senator did want to lay it aside for 30 days; why not do so?

Mr. HALE. I replied to the Senator from Arkansas that I would be very glad to do so, if I knew I could get action on the bill at this session of the Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not understand why the Senator has to know in advance that he is to have action on it at this session of Congress. There may be enough Senators to prevent that.

Mr. HALE. I was trying to comply with the wishes of Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that. Personally, I am opposed to taking any action on the bill at this session of Congress, and I dislike to bind myself so that I will have to. If I agree to this unanimous consent, I will have foreclosed myself, and can not help myself.

Mr. President, unless the unanimous-consent proposal is modified by striking out the last clause, I shall have to object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I can not agree to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NORRIS. I am willing, if the Senator will change his unanimous-consent request, to agree to take the bill up at the time suggested. I will not go any farther than that.

Mr. HALE. I do not think I can agree to that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What is the matter pending before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 51.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I note that this bill—Senate bill 51—has preference, as the same is contained in a letter from the chairman of the committee on order of business of date April 25. I note in the first paragraph of the letter the following:

> At a meeting to-day of the committee on order of business it was decided, in response to numerous requests, that S. 4412 should be given early consideration because of its emergency nature. The committee therefore respectfully amends its recommendations of April 2 in this one particular and suggests that the following bills be made the unfinished business in the following order:
>
> Calendar No. 298. S. 51. A bill to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. President, I have before me Senate bill 51, and I want to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs just what this bill proposes to do, if anything, or to have done?

Mr. HALE. Senate bill 51?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I think I have explained that. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the President to build the Navy up to the limits of the Washington and London treaties.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will ask the question again: How many ships does the bill propose to authorize to be constructed?

Mr. HALE. Enough ships to bring the Navy up to the limits of the Washington and London treaties.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. How many would that be?

Mr. HALE. That would depend entirely upon when action should be taken. If we were going to build up to the limits of the treaty in four years, a certain number of ships would have to be built. If we were going to build the Navy up within 10 years, after a lot of other ships have become over age, it would mean more ships.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. What does the Senator hope to accomplish under this bill, if the bill shall be enacted?

Mr. HALE. I hope to get the authorization to build up so that when our ships become over age they can be replaced.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am trying to find out how many ships the Senator thinks would have to be built.

Mr. HALE. I say it depends on when we reach the limits defined by the treaty.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. How much money would it take to build this indefinite number of ships the Senator hopes to have built under this bill?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have already explained these matters to the Senate. It would depend entirely on when it was done. If we built up to the limits of the treaties by the close of the year 1936, it would cost about $786,000,000. If we did not build up to the limits of the treaties until 1942, it would cost about $980,000,000. If we did not build up for 20 years, by which time the whole Navy would have to be replaced, and it would cost just under $2,000,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in the committee report I find this significant paragraph:

> We believe it is imperative that the United States authorize a building program at this time and thus give notice to the world that we intend to maintain the ratios established by the Washington and London treaties.

We have now spent two days debating whether or not we will take up this bill, and yet do not know how many ships it will be necessary to build.

Mr. HALE. I can give the Senator the exact number of ships we will have to build.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have asked that question two or three times, and I will be very glad to yield for an answer.

Mr. HALE. If we do not build up for 20 years, we will have to build 200 ships, which would mean the whole Navy. If we build up by the end of 1936, we will have to build 118 ships. If we do not build up until 1942, it would mean 140 ships.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Then we have spent two days in deciding, or trying to decide, whether or not we will enact legislation authorizing the construction of 150 to 180 ships, at a cost of something like $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. Is that a fair statement of the proposition?

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not take into consideration the fact that to replace our present Navy, whether we add the few ships to bring us up to treaty strength or not, will cost very nearly $2,000,000,000. If we do not build ships, the Navy will simply go on the rocks. There is very little under the provisions of this bill that we would not have to do just to keep up the Navy that we have now.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the suggested legislation. I did not object to the unanimous-consent agreement being made for its future consideration.

Mr. HALE. That is all I ask.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. But apparently the Senate is not willing at this time to take up this bill for further consideration; and until those who are managing the affairs of the Senate can get together and come to some agreement I make this motion: That the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 604, the same being Senate bill 4412, introduced by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], a bill to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of Federal reserve banks and of national banking associations, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is not in order while another motion is pending.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I offer my motion as a substitute for the pending motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending motion is not amendable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine. Does the Senator from Oklahoma want to debate that?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is a proposal to consider S. 51, a bill relating to the construction of ships. I do not agree with the committee which arranged this order of business. There is a situation in this country that is unprecedented. Our banking system has collapsed. Not only has the country banking system collapsed, but the Federal reserve system has likewise collapsed. I am not blaming either the national or the several State banking systems for such collapse. The banks are being condemned for the condition before us, and the charge is made that they are not cooperating because they will not lend money. I do not join in this criticism of the banks. The banks have money, but I ask, Mr. President, what is there in the country on which the banks could safely lend their money? There is no longer much security that is good for loans, save Liberty bonds and gold. Liberty bonds are selling at a premium. There is no reason why anybody should borrow money on Liberty bonds. Farm lands, city property, livestock, commodities, and even corporate and industrial properties have ceased to have loan values. With the present conditions confronting the country, with eight or nine million unemployed, with cities in need of money to pay the salaries of their officials, with the teachers and policemen and State and county officials without money, here we are spending two days debating whether or not we will take up a bill to authorize the construction of 150 to 180 ships to cost $750,000,000 to a billion dollars.

Mr. President, a few days ago the papers carried the statement that the barometer of national business, the stock market, has already taken its ninth downward swing. We have had panics before, we have had depressions before, but this is the first panic or depression in this country when the downward swings have numbered more than five. Already there have been four downward swings in excess of any panic this Nation has ever experienced.

There is pending upon the calendar and next in order the bill which was the subject of my motion, which motion was just held out of order, and that bill has to do with the banking situation. I make the statement again that the banking system as it was intended to operate has failed, not because of what the banks are not doing but because of conditions in the country. The people who need money can not get it; those who can get it do not want it.

I am not blaming the national banks; I am not blaming the State banks. It is not their money they have in their vaults. Perhaps some of it is theirs, but only a meager, small portion. The capital stock is the property of the stockholders; the surplus is theirs, but the balance of the moneys the banks have on deposit is not theirs. It belongs to their depositors. The banks are nothing more than the trustees for those depositors. Those of our fellow countrymen who are condemning and criticizing the country banks for not making loans are doing them an injustice. The country banks are not in control of the economic policy of the Republic. The Federal reserve system is, and I am coming to that system in a moment.

I want to differentiate between the State and the national banks on the one side and the Federal reserve system on the other. I am not condemning the national banks, neither am I condemning the State banks of the Nation. They are not to blame for the laws that are passed or for the laws that are not passed. They are not to blame for the economic conditions which confront the country. The Federal reserve system may be blamed for those things, but certainly not the national banks and not the State banks of the Nation. The country banks are being blamed for not loaning money.

The statement is made in the public press and upon the floor of the Senate that the banks' vaults are full and running over with money, and then some people can not understand why it is that the banks with these large sums of money—deposited money though it is—are unwilling to make loans to the people who need and who want loans. The people who need and want the money have no way to get it. They have no collateral that is acceptable as a basis of safe loaning. I am not blaming the banks, the trustees of the people's money, for not making loans upon collateral that has no loanable value.

What have we to-day in this Nation that has value? Farm lands have no loanable value. They have not sufficient value to pay the taxes, much less the interest. City property has no loanable value. Manufacturing plants have no such value. Railroads have no such value. But two things have acknowledged value, one of which is gold and the other Government bonds. Those who have gold do not need to borrow. Those who have Government bonds do not need to borrow. They can sell most of their Government bonds to-day at above par. Until something is done to place value back of the commodities and back of the property, the banks can not make safe loans.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States, in section 7 of Article I, provides that the Congress shall have the power "to coin money" and to "regulate the value thereof." There is no power that can coin money save the Congress. The responsibility rests upon the Congress and the Congress can not escape the responsibility and the duty of coining money and of regulating the value of money.

Yesterday the House of Representatives passed a bill in an effort to exercise this power of regulating the value of money. At this time I invite attention to H. R. 11499. It is very short. It is now before the Senate. I send a copy of the bill to the desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read the bill (H. R. 11499) for restoring and maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Federal reserve act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 31. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency."

SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

SEC. 3. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that bill was passed by the House of Representatives on yesterday by a vote of almost 5 to 1, there being 289 votes for it and 60 votes against it; so a bill directing the Federal reserve system to regulate the value of money was passed by one branch of the Congress on yesterday and the bill is now pending before this body, having been referred to the Banking and Currency Committee.

During the past few weeks the question of the value or the buying power of the dollar has been discussed not only in Washington but in every part of the country. The American dollar has become the standard of value not only in the United States but in all parts of the world. Gold alone is not the standard. It is the American dollar that is the standard. It is the standard here. It is the standard in Europe. It is the standard every place where values are measured. During the past few weeks the country has come to a general conviction that the buying power of the dollar is too high. When the dollar buys 3 bushels of wheat, it buys too much wheat. The dollar, when it buys 5 bushels of corn, buys too much corn. When the dollar buys 15 to 18 pounds of cotton, it buys too much cotton. The country has realized that the buying power of the dollar is too high. I think now I am safe in saying that the demand of the country is to have the buying power of the dollar brought down, and to the extent that the buying power of the dollar is brought down the selling price of commodities will be raised.

That was the purpose of the bill passed by the House on yesterday to direct the Federal Reserve Board to take steps to bring down the high buying power of the dollar, thereby raising the value of agricultural commodities, thereby raising the value of land, thereby raising the value of city property, and thereby reinvesting the public of the country with some buying power. Inasmuch as this bill will be the subject of much discussion, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with my remarks the committee report submitted by Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH in support of his bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[House Report No. 1103, Seventy-second Congress, first session]

RESTORING AND MAINTAINING THE PURCHASING POWER OF THE DOLLAR

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 11499):

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11499) to amend the Federal reserve act by adding at the end thereof a new section, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

Within the scope of a committee report it is not possible to discuss in detail the technical economic principles involved in H. R. 11499, but it is possible to determine the anticipated workings of the action of the principle if it is crystalized into legislation.

The bill has two features—an emergency feature and a permanent feature. The emergency feature contemplates a rise in the general commodity price level to the average existing between 1921 and 1929, inclusive, and the substantial maintenance of that price level.

As to the emergency feature, all authorities agree, first, that is is impossible for the debts of the country to be paid at the present price level, and that unless the price level is raised the business of the country is headed for inevitable bankruptcy; and, second, that the present price level is unjust to debtors.

Speaking roughly, but with substantial accuracy, the dollar will purchase about $1.60 more of commodities than in the 1921–1929 period, and about $1.56 more of commodities than it would purchase between the period of 1918–1931 and the first quarter of 1932, inclusive. It would purchase now what it would have taken $1.25 to purchase about a year ago, which means that the producer—that is, the debtor—is being confronted with an ever-increasing burden. His debts, principal and interest, remain fixed. The commodities he sells and which would have purchased a given number of dollars when he borrowed them have decreased in their purchasing power.

To go one step farther, unemployment is constantly increasing, because on a constantly declining market business can't go on. It is impossible to produce below the cost of production.

The Committee on Banking and Currency, after a most painstaking and careful investigation by a subcommittee, reached two conclusions: First, that the average price level from 1921 to 1929 would reestablish substantial justice, between debtor and creditor; and, second, that a rise to the price level of 1921–1929 would make lower standards of living unnecessary, would justify salaries and wages at the predepression level; in short, would make unnecessary the process of painful economic readjustment which will have to be consummated if the price level is not raised.

The committee also reached the conclusion that unless the price level were raised substantially to the point above indicated the burden of debt would not only seriously hamper production and destroy the producing class as now constituted but that the creditor class, being unable to collect their fixed obligations, would also go down in the crash.

Then the question arose as to what could be done.

The Federal reserve system under the leadership of Benjamin Strong, former governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, measurably stabilized for several years the price level by open-market operations and by adjustment of the rediscount rates of the Federal reserve banks. The Federal reserve system has been accumulating gold at the average rate of $200,000,000 a year for about six years and is now in a much stronger position than it was at the time of the open-market operations just referred to.

It is in a position to put into the market $4,000,000,000 in Federal reserve notes and still maintain its 40 per cent reserve requirements. By utilizing its power to lower reserve requirements of the Federal reserve banks the system could put into the market nearly $9,000,000,000 of Federal reserve notes. Either sum, if the country knew that because of a congressional mandate the Federal reserve system was going to raise the price level to the point indicated, would be much more than sufficient to raise it, because as soon as the country understood what the policy of the Federal reserve system, as provided by law, was, confidence among banks and business men would be restored, bank loans would expand, the retailer would buy from the wholesaler, the wholesaler would buy from the manufacturer, the manufacturer from the producer of raw materials, and the masses of the people would find employment, so that through buying of securities by the Federal reserve banks and through the restoration of confidence as above indicated the normal business activity of the country would very speedily be reestablished.

Even more important than its emergency feature the committee deems the stabilizing feature of the bill. It would be the duty of the Federal reserve system under the bill, if enacted into legislation, to control the credit and currency of the country in a manner to satisfy the legitimate needs of business, and prevent unwholesome and unjustified expansion. If unjustified and unwholesome expansion were controlled, periods of inflation and depression would also be controlled, because periods of deflation and depression always follow periods of unwholesome overexpansion and speculation.

In conformity with section 2a of Rule XIII of the House, there is herewith printed the proposed new section (sec. 31) to be added as an amendment to the Federal reserve act:

"'SEC. 31. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the average purchasing power of the dollar as ascertained by the Department of Labor in the wholesale commodity markets for the period covering the years 1921 to 1929, inclusive, shall be restored and maintained by the control of the volume of credit and currency.'

"SEC. 2. The Federal Reserve Board, the Federal reserve banks, and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby charged with the duty of making effective this policy.

"SEC. 3. Acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this morning's Washington Herald on the front page contained a news story, under the name of Arthur Hachten, which gives a very definite, concise, and illuminating interpretation of the purposes of the Goldsborough bill and what is intended to be accomplished by it. I ask unanimous consent that the article may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Tuesday, May 3, 1932]

HOUSE VOTES TO STABILIZE BUYING POWER OF THE DOLLAR—GOLDSBOROUGH "REFLATION" BILL PASSED BY 229 TO 59 VOTE; AIMED TO INCREASE PRICES—G. O. P. SPLIT BY MEASURE—PLAN IS MANDATE TO FEDERAL RESERVE TO USE FORCES FOR RESTORING 1921–1929 LEVEL

By Arthur Hachten

Designed to raise commodity prices and restore prosperity, the House yesterday passed the so-called Goldsborough "reflation" bill by a roll-call vote of 289 to 59. It now goes to the Senate.

Moving for speedy action, Speaker GARNER permitted the bill to come up under suspension of the usual procedure. Debate was limited to an hour and a half on the bill, which has been before Congress in varying form for 10 years.

MANDATE TO RESERVE

Congress lays down a mandate in the bill to the Federal Reserve Board to use its board powers to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar and restore commodities to the average price level for the years 1921 to 1929.

The policy of the United States is declared to be that the board and Secretary of the Treasury shall restore the price level and maintain it through control of the volume of credit and currency.

Democrats voted almost solidly for the bill, but the Republican ranks were split with most of the old guard Republicans voting "no."

In adopting the bill the House was believed to have embarked upon a policy of credit control likely to be far-reaching in its consequences, should the Federal Reserve Board press to the limit the powers it has to carry it out.

During debate on the measure several speakers contended the board already had embarked on a "reflation" policy, having started buying Government bonds in the open market, with a view to increasing the credit resources of banks and thereby encourage them to be more liberal in their loans to business.

DOUBLE PURPOSE

Representative T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, Democrat, of Maryland, sponsor of the bill, said it has the double purpose of restoring commodity prices and to maintain that normal price level once it is attained.

Devices at command of the board to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar and lift commodity prices were said to include the authority to buy Government bonds in the open market and through adjustment of the Federal reserve rediscount rate.

These same devices can be used to maintain a general price level. Bonds would be sold and the rediscount rate increased when normality has been attained, it was explained by GOLDSBOROUGH and other Banking and Currency Committee members.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I observed in the press this morning that there was criticism passed upon the bill because it was not given consideration by the Treasury and that the Secretary of the Treasury was not invited before the committee to present his views. Can the Senator tell us whether the Treasury did pass upon the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill has not been considered by this body. It has been considered only by the other House of the Congress.

Mr. COPELAND. I referred to that other body.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. As to whether the Secretary of the Treasury was invited to testify in relation to the merits of the bill, I am not advised.

Mr. COPELAND. The criticism which I saw was that he was not invited to be heard and the intimation of the argument was that he was in disapproval of the bill. I was hopeful that the Senator might perhaps pass judgment upon the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That brings up the question and causes me to advert to another proposition, and it is an answer to the question submitted by the distinguished Senator from New York.

The Federal Reserve Board made reply to the bill in this way. They said, "We are now doing the exact thing that the Goldsborough bill seeks to direct us to do." The Goldsborough bill seeks to direct the Federal Reserve Board to stabilize the buying power of the dollar at a lower level. The Federal Reserve Board answers, "We are now doing that identical thing." Therefore the Federal Reserve Board said, and I presume it was the opinion of Mr. Mills, though I can not speak for him, that inasmuch as the Federal Reserve Board is now busy in the program of doing the same thing that the Goldsborough bill seeks to direct to have done, there is no occasion for the passage of the Goldsborough bill.

It is an accepted principle of economics that when a commodity is plentiful it is cheap. When a commodity is scarce it is high. That applies to wheat. When wheat is plentiful it is cheap. It is plentiful now. Wheat is selling for 30 cents a bushel to the farmer. When corn is plentiful it is cheap. When cotton is scarce it is high. When cotton is plentiful cotton is cheap. Now, we have millions of bales of surplus cotton, and cotton is selling at 5 cents a pound. The purpose of the Goldsborough bill is to direct the Federal reserve system as the agent of the Congress, the Congress having the power to coin money and regulate its value, to do the thing suggested in the bill, and that is to reduce the value of the dollar and to regulate the value by bringing its value down.

The Federal Reserve Board suggest and try to tell the country that they are now engaged in that identical program, that they are bringing down the buying power of the dollar. What is the result of their program? In the first place, how is their program operating? How do they propose to make money scarce or how do they propose to make money dear? When money is scarce it is dear. When it is plentiful it is cheap. I have only to remind the Senate that in 1920, when we had the largest amount of circulation this Nation ever saw—$6,500,000,000—dollars were plentiful, dollars were cheap. At that time when there was this great volume of money in circulation wheat was selling at $2.50 a bushel, livestock in proportion, cotton at 38 to 40 cents a pound. When money was plentiful, commodity prices were high; but now, when money is scarce, money is high and commodities are cheap.

The Federal Reserve Board, following that economic principle of making money plentiful to make it cheap and making it scarce to make it high, are now proposing to make money more plentiful. They tell the country "If we make money plentiful and put more dollars into circulation, money will be cheaper." Every week the Federal Reserve Board issues a statement advising the country of its operations, but apparently the country does not understand that statement. The country thinks, evidently, that the Federal Reserve Board is now engaged in a program of making money more plentiful, actually placing money in circulation.

But that is not the case. It is true that the Federal Reserve Board is buying bonds and paying for those bonds with Federal reserve money. They started out about three or four weeks ago buying bonds at the rate of $25,000,000 per week, buying Liberty bonds and Treasury issues of Government bonds. When the Federal Reserve Board buys a bond, say, for $1,000 and pays for it with Federal reserve money, thereby a thousand dollars of new money goes into circulation. For two or three weeks the Federal Reserve Board pursued this policy of buying bonds at the rate of $25,000,000 a week, but it was found that that was not fast enough. Although they were placing $25,000,000 in circulation each week, as soon as the banks got the money thus placed in circulation—and it all goes to the banks—the banks were bundling the money up and sending it back to the Federal reserve system and paying off their loans.

During the month of March the Federal reserve banks bought a very large amount of bonds, and during this month the total amount of money in circulation decreased $147,000,000. At the identical time the Federal reserve system was boasting to the world that it was engaged in a program of the expansion of the currency and credit, it was taking out of circulation $147,000,000. The rule is that when a dollar of money is taken out of circulation, there are taken out $10 of credit. So, when they took out of circulation in the month of March $147,000,000 of money, they also destroyed during that same month $1,500,000,000 of credit, the credit being based upon the money at the ratio of 10 to 1.

Week before last the Federal reserve banks bought $93,000,000 of bonds. The Federal reserve banks under the direction of the Federal Reserve Board took $93,000,000 worth of new crisp Federal reserve notes from their vaults and purchased $93,000,000 of bonds. During that same week the member banks which sold the bonds took the money which they received from the Federal reserve banks and sent it back to the Federal reserve banks to apply upon their indebtedness. Week before last the member banks paid back $91,000,000.

I want to repeat that statement. Week before last the Federal reserve banks bought $93,000,000 of bonds, paying $93,000,000 in money for them, and the member banks that received the money sent it right back to the Federal reserve banks to the extent of $91,000,000. So the net result of that week's transaction was $2,000,000 added to the circulation. In March they had taken out $147,000,000; and two weeks ago, in one week, they put $2,000,000 into circulation.

During the week, which closed on the 27th of April, the Federal reserve banks bought $113,000,000 of bonds, paying for those bonds $113,000,000 of new crisp Federal reserve notes. One would naturally think that this money would go into circulation. Did it go into circulation? No. Their records show that last week the banks paid back to the Federal reserve system on their loans $27,000,000 more than had been paid out for the purchase of bonds.

Mr. President, at this rate how long will we have to go until we will have our currency sufficiently expanded to help the country?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, the contention of the Senator is founded on the fact he has stated to us that the claim that the Federal reserve system is doing exactly what the bill under discussion is intended to bring about is not true?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is absolutely not true. At this point I submit my proof of the statement just made. I hold in my hand a statement from the Treasury Department, dated December 31, 1931. It is Form No. 10283, Department Public Debt Service. On this sheet I find that on December 31, 1931, there was in circulation $5,646,772,888. On the 27th of April—just last week—the Federal Reserve Board issued a statement showing that at that time they had in circulation $5,398,000,000. Subtract the amount of money in circulation last Thursday from the amount of money in circulation on the first day of this year, and we find a difference of $248,000,000. In other words, during the time the Federal Reserve Board has been advertising to the country that it has been taking steps to expand the currency and to expand credit, it has actually taken out of circulation $248,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Could they take refuge in the claim that the banks have not cooperated with their efforts? The Senator has stated that the banks when they receive this currency from the Federal reserve system take it back to the Federal reserve banks in order to redeem their notes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that charge has been made upon this floor. The distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in the discussion of the Glass-Steagall bill, made the statement that the banks were not cooperating with the administration and with the Federal reserve system in making money available to the people of the country; but, Mr. President, I opened my remarks with the statement that the banks could not pass this money on to the public for this reason: The folk who have security to pledge for loans do not want and do not need loans, while the millions who need and want money have no security to pledge in order to get money, and this money not being the property of banks—they are merely trustees for the sums on deposit—the banks are not justified, in my judgment, in making loans, for the reason that there is little property left, save gold and Government bonds, that has admitted value.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, does it not go back, however, to the question of what is the function of a bank? I am told—and I see the criticism very frequently in print as well as in my correspondence—that even legitimate business concerns are not permitted at this time to get any money from the banks. The banks are priding themselves that they are 85 per cent liquid. If that is the case, and there are actually legitimate requests for loans, it seems as if the criticism were well founded that the banks are not cooperating. I speak of this merely to throw out the suggestion to the Senator, because I am anxious to have his reaction to it and an answer to it if there is one.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Of course, I am not prepared to say that the banks are making no loans. The banks are making some loans, but they are not performing the functions which they were organized and are presumed to perform. They are not refusing loans because of any fault of theirs. The conditions are not such as to justify the banks in making loans. If the banks were making loans, what excuse would there have been for this Congress to have created a supernational bank and to have given that supernational bank $2,000,000,000 and set it up in business down on Pennsylvania Avenue to make loans to banks themselves?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will permit me, suppose there were a lot more money made available, what would be its fate? Would it not find its way back into the Federal reserve bank unless there were some definite means of putting it into circulation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will answer that question, Mr. President, by following through a suggestion I made a moment ago. At the present time the Federal reserve system is authorizing and having the Federal reserve banks buy around $100,000,000 of bonds a week. The records show that these bonds are largely held by the banks or by corporations which own banks, or by individuals which own the banks, so that when the Federal reserve system buys bonds, the money is not scattered broadcast, but such money goes immediately into the vaults of the banks. When the member bank gets this money, what does it do with it? It immediately sends this money back to the Federal reserve system and liquidates its notes. That is what the banks are doing now.

How much more will have to be put into circulation in order to bring the banks to the point where they will have no more loans to liquidate? The national banks and other member banks of the Federal reserve system at this time owe the Federal reserve system about $600,000,000. So if this procedure is followed, the Federal reserve system must buy at least $600,000,000 more of Government bonds before the banks will stop sending money back in liquidation of their loans. So if the Federal reserve system goes ahead with its program for six more weeks, and buys a hundred million dollars of bonds each week, and the banks which receive this money send it back to pay off their loans, at the end of six weeks' time the various national banks of the country will have liquidated their loans with the Federal reserve system. However, that is not all the banks owe.

Many of the banks of the West do not borrow from the Federal reserve system; many of the banks when they need money do not send to the Federal reserve bank and ask for loans; but they send to a correspondent bank in some large city and borrow from the correspondent bank. So they must first pay off their loans to the Federal reserve system, and then, secondly, perhaps, they will pay off their loans to their corresponding banks. How much the banks of the Nation owe their correspondent banks I do not know; the Comptroller of the Currency knows, but I have not that information.

So the present plan of the Federal reserve system in making money plentiful through the purchase of bonds is not working, Mr. President, and it can not work within any reasonable length of time.

If there is any question about the statements I am making, as I proceed I will be very glad to yield. I may not be able to answer them, but perhaps I can.

I make the statement that our banking system has failed us; I make the further statement that the Federal reserve system has failed us. I call attention to how many banking systems there are right here in the city of Washington loaning money to-day. We have first the Federal reserve system; that is a congressional system; that is No. 1. Then we have the superbank, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with $2,000,000,000 of capital, which is making loans. So there are two Government banks in the city to-day making loans. Then we have the Farm Board. The Farm Board has $500,000,000 for making loans to cooperatives. So there are now three national banking organizations making loans in this city. Then we have the Department of Agriculture making loans from Government funds to the farmers of the country. We have the Federal land bank in this city making loans. We just recently gave that institution $125,000,000 of additional capital. Then we have the Shipping Board making loans to the shipping interests. So there are six national or Federal banking systems in this city controlled—or they should be controlled—by the Government, and created assuredly by Congress, making loans. The banks would not lend the people money, which fact made it necessary to create these several institutions.

The report from my State shows that 28 loans have been made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to banks. The banks are not making loans, although many of them have ample funds. Why are they not making loans? As stated there is nothing safe for them to loan money on.

There was a time when individuals could go to the banks and sign notes, and their standing and ability for repayment and stability in the community were such that they could get loans. They can not do that to-day. There may be exceptions, but that is the rule. There was a time when you could take property and pledge it as collateral and get money. That is not being done to-day, and the reason is there is no property that is making money, and when property is not making money it is not a good risk as collateral, and it makes no difference what the intrinsic value of the property is.

Take the Pennsylvania Railroad, or the Santa Fe, or the Frisco, or the Rock Island; if they are not making money, their obligations are not considered absolutely safe. Banks would not loan them money; and they had to come to Washington, to a specially created bank, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to borrow money to pay their obligations to the banks.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. It seems to me there must be a further step. After the banks have paid their obligations to the Federal reserve system, and then have money to pay their loans from their correspondent banks through the country, the Senator has not yet shown us how the money is to be put in circulation after it gets back to the local banks. That is the thing that troubles me. We can have all the money in the world, but it does not do us any good, because we can not eat it. How are we going to get it into the hands of the people?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that brings me to another phase of this question.

When this Congress convened in December I took occasion in my feeble way to try to express some convictions upon this identical question. Before the holidays I made the statement that we had a stringency of money in circulation, too little money in circulation, that the dollar was too high, that commodity prices were too low, and that the only way the dollar could be brought down in its buying power and the only way commodity prices could be increased was to make the dollar more plentiful, thereby making it cheaper. I took occasion more than once to try to express these convictions, but I found that when I undertook to discuss the money question, the Chamber immediately was vacated. I knew I was making no progress. I gained a very decided impression that financial legislation was not written in the Congress, with all deference to my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I gained a conviction that financial legislation and financial policies were not formulated in Washington, but that they were formulated somewhere else.

Acting upon that conviction, I sought out the place from whence such legislation originates. I went to New York City, the great city so well represented in this body by the two distinguished Senators from that great State.

I had often heard of Wall Street. In the west, Wall Street is very largely a myth. We have heard about Wall Street. We have heard about its control of New York City and the State of New York. We have likewise heard of its control of the Federal Government here at Washington. Having heard so much of this short, crooked street that starts at the river and ends at the graveyard, I went down in the caverns of that area. I had heard that there were some individuals on that street who knew a lot about money. I fortunately had facilities to meet those gentlemen. I will not mention the names of the private parties, but I will mention the names of the public officials.

I went first to the Federal reserve bank in Wall Street. The highest-paid official in the Federal reserve system is the governor of the Federal reserve bank in New York City, Governor Harrison. Governor Harrison receives a salary of $50,000 per year. He has a banking institution which is the last word in banking architecture. The vault of the Federal reserve bank in New York, so I was advised, extends 80 feet into the solid rock. In that vault underneath the Federal reserve bank they now have something like $3,000,000,000 of gold impounded. There is nothing to be suggested in the way of improvement of that gigantic, expensive banking structure known as the Federal reserve bank in New York City.

I conferred with Governor Harrison. I conferred with the agent of the Federal reserve bank, Mr. Case. I was glad to confer with the economist of the Federal reserve bank in New York, Doctor Burgess.

From that point I went to the two largest banking institutions of New York City, each of them a $2,000,000,000 concern. I met the men who manage and run those banks. I met their attorneys and I met their economists. I have no complaint regarding my reception there. The men who dominate and control and manage the financial affairs of America conceded that the dollar was too high. They agreed that the dollar must be reduced in buying power. They agreed that the country can not continue to live on 5-cent cotton, 30-cent wheat, 17-cent corn, livestock in proportion, with 8,000,000 people unemployed, taxes not being paid, interest in default, and bonds in default. They agreed to those policies, and agreed that the dollar would have to be reduced in buying power.

Then the question was, What means can be taken to accomplish and effectuate this desirable end?

These bankers in New York understand the situation. They know that the dollar must be decreased in buying power, and they know that the only way to increase commodity prices is to bring down the buying power of the dollar. They claim they have a plan by which that can be done. They said their plan was to have the Federal reserve system begin buying bonds, taking new money from the vaults of the Federal reserve system, exchanging it with the holders of bonds, letting the money get out in the hands of the folks who now hold bonds, and bringing the bonds in from the country and placing them in the Federal reserve vaults.

At that time they were putting out only $25,000,000 a week. They admitted that that was not fast enough. They were making no progress with their program; and about that time the hearings started to be held in the House of Representatives, before the Ways and Means Committee, in favor of the so-called bonus bill.

When the hearings started on that bill it was laid down as a condition precedent that unless the proponents of the so-called bonus bill could convince the Ways and Means Committee and the Congress that the payment of this money would be of as much benefit to the people of the country who are not soldiers as to the soldiers themselves the bill should fail. Those hearings have progressed now for three weeks. They were closed at 12.30 to-day. In this three weeks' time the Federal Reserve Board, realizing the demand that is being made for a cheaper dollar and a higher price for commodities, have increased the number of bonds they are buying per week from $25,000,000 to $113,000,000, as I said, last week. But last week, while they bought $113,000,000 of bonds, that $113,000,000 and $27,000,000 more was paid back to the system and canceled. So, as a result of the policy of the banking system of New York, as a result of the policy of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and as a result of the policy of the Federal Reserve Board in Washington of buying bonds, money in circulation is actually becoming scarcer rather than more plentiful.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator if the process that he mentions of banks using the proceeds of bonds to pay off their obligations has not a limit to it. Is not the time coming when the banks will settle their obligations, and there will be money which can not be used in that way?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I stated a moment ago that if the Federal Reserve Board will keep on buying bonds for six more weeks at the present rate, and pay out six hundred millions more of Federal reserve notes, and buy that many more bonds, the banks will have enough money to liquidate their loans to the Federal reserve system, but it will take $600,000,000 to do it. When that time comes, however, if conditions are no better, and the board still keeps on buying bonds and paying for them with money, the banks will take the money and pay their private obligations to their correspondents. I am advised that the banks have a very large amount of money borrowed from correspondent banks, not Federal reserve banks themselves. So, under the present plan, it will take at least six weeks; and if they follow out the policy of paying their correspondents' loans, no one knows how long it is going to take to liquidate the banks' indebtedness to other banks.

But I began my statement, Mr. President, with the assertion that the Federal reserve's plan and policy of making money more plentiful, and thereby making it cheaper, has failed. Last week they did not put out enough money to meet the money coming back by $27,000,000. I do not know how many bonds they are going to buy this week, but I will venture the assertion that whatever they buy this week, perhaps $100,000,000, the banks in turn will pay back to the system $100,000,000 of their loans. The banks are paying back now more than the bond sales amount to, because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is loaning the banks money, and when a bank borrows from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation it turns right around and sends the money to the Federal reserve bank to liquidate its loans.

Mr. President, this whole thing came up, as I said a moment ago, over the so-called bonus bill for the payment of the balance due on the adjusted-service certificates. Many of the bankers contend that the soldier should not be paid any more. Many bankers contend that a great mistake was made when the bill was passed to pay the soldiers anything, that they had not earned anything, that they did not deserve anything, and that they should not be paid anything. With that view I most emphatically disagree. But I was surprised to find some banks taking that attitude, and not alone is that attitude confined to the banks, it is entertained by others of our citizens, who contend that Congress made a mistake in passing the first so-called bonus bill, that they made a mistake last year in proposing to authorize loans to the extent of one-half of the amount of the certificates, and they cite, to prove that a mistake was made, the fact that the billion dollars that was loaned by the Government last year to the soldiers did not help business conditions.

Mr. President, in some sections of the country that billion dollars did some good. I know of sections where the money loaned to the soldiers was the means of saving the economic lives of communities, and saving banks and other institutions of the country. But last year, when we loaned the veterans money, we loaned them credit money. Not a single dollar of real money from the Federal reserve system was loaned a single soldier in the Nation. There is just as much difference between money—gold, silver, and paper, the kind with which we pay for a railroad ticket—and this credit money as there is between day and night.

The banks of New York do not object to the Government issuing bonds and selling those bonds to the people, and then taking the money received from the sale of the bonds and spending it. They do not object to that policy. They favor that policy. Such a policy puts no extra money into circulation. The United States Government could issue $10,000,000,000 worth of bonds to-day, sell those bonds to-morrow to the people, and that process would not increase the circulation a single red copper. It would increase the number of bonds. It would give the Government more money. But the circulation of gold, silver, and paper, the thing that controls, would not thereby be increased a single penny.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose the bonus were paid and the money given to the soldiers; would not that money very speedily return to the banks, then be absorbed there with the rest of the useless money which is now on deposit? I am asking the question, as the Senator will know, because I want to know the answer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. One of the bills pending in the House, and upon which hearings have been held for three weeks and more, provides for the payment of the balance due on these certificates, and one of the bills proposes that the Government print Treasury notes, exactly as was done during the Civil War to finance the war on behalf of the North.

Another bill proposes that the Government issue 2 per cent bonds, but instead of selling those bonds to the people, have the Treasury Department deposit those bonds directly with the Federal reserve banks; then direct the Federal reserve banks to transfer the bonds to the Federal reserve agents as the agents of the Government; then further direct the Federal reserve agents to pay for those bonds with Federal reserve money, either Federal reserve notes or Federal reserve bank notes. When that is done we have not sold the bonds; the public does not own the bonds. The bonds have been issued, but they have been placed directly in the hands of the Federal reserve bank, and thereby those bonds become the basis of money.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have not been here the last few minutes during the delivery of the Senator's address. As a matter of fact, what is the objection to issuing legal tender direct? Why is it necessary to have any bonds if the Government will issue legal tender?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have no objection to that system. The system worked so well that in the sixties the Government authorized the issuance of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 of greenbacks. They worked so well and did such a good service that the Congress authorized the issuance of more of the greenbacks, and the first thing the country knew there were four or five hundred million dollars of Treasury notes in circulation, greenbacks, with no bonds back of them, with no gold back of them, with no silver back of them, nothing back of them but the credit of the United States of America, at that time threatened with division. No wonder that in the early days of the life of those greenbacks they did sink below the value of gold. They got down to 30 or 40 cents, based upon gold. But when the war was over, when the two great sections of this country came back together, those greenbacks began to climb, and it was not long before the greenback was just as good as the gold itself.

Mr. LONG. Have we not in the United States, still, the same legal tender?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, those greenbacks are so good that although they were issued back in the sixties we have them with us still. They are so good that we have in circulation to-day more than $356,000,000 of greenbacks, and I have never heard of anyone who objected to taking the greenback in payment of any obligation due him.

What is back of those greenbacks to-day? There is gold to the amount of $156,000,000 back of the $350,000,000 worth of greenbacks. But that gold, in addition to being back of the greenbacks, is likewise back of the 1890 Treasury notes. They have dollar-for-dollar silver back of them and they have part of this $156,000,000 of gold back of them. So, Mr. President, the greenbacks issued back in the sixties have been kept in circulation until to-day, and there is no plan to-day to retire a single dollar of circulating greenbacks.

There is objection now to the policy of issuing additional greenbacks. Every time somebody suggests that we issue additional greenbacks, exactly as we did back in the sixties, the objection is raised, "That kind of money is fiat money."

When those greenbacks were issued we had little gold, were almost a divided country; but now, with half the gold in the world, and being the strongest and richest and most powerful country on earth, the contention is still made that if we issue some greenbacks those greenbacks will be fiat money.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who are urging the issuance of more greenbacks. The bill I am standing sponsor for proposes to follow the plan of existing law. When we wanted to resume specie payment, in the seventies, Congress passed a law providing for the issuance of 2 per cent consols. A consol is a United States bond drawing 2 per cent interest and given the circulation privilege. National banks can get possession of such bonds and send same to the Treasury and have issued against them national-bank notes to the full amount of the bond, less 5 per cent, and that 5 per cent is held in the Treasury as a redemption fund. So the national-bank notes Senators have in their pockets, issued by their banks back home, are not based upon gold. The national-bank money is based upon United States 2 per cent bonds, and there may not be a single penny's worth of gold back of the $700,000,000 worth of national-bank notes. Under the law they are backed by only 2 per cent bonds and 5 per cent redemption funds, which can be in lawful money. It can be in greenbacks.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator had not quite answered my question before he turned to reply to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was about to follow that up.

Mr. COPELAND. So that the RECORD may have the question clearly, may I repeat it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. My question was, What assurance have we that the two billion paid to the veterans would not suffer the same fate, and perhaps speedily, that has been suffered by other money, that the money would find its way quickly into the banks through the merchants who might sell goods to the veterans, in the many ways that money would be spent, and ultimately go back to the banks? Then would it not be absorbed by the banks and lost in the same way that the funds of the banks are now more or less useless to the country?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was trying to explain, just before I came to that portion of the answer, how it was proposed to raise the money, through the issuance of 2 per cent bonds, depositing those bonds in the Federal reserve banks, issuing against those bonds Federal reserve bank notes, as can now be done, under existing law, and it takes no amendment whatever to accomplish the purpose, except an authorization and a determination so to do.

After the bonds are issued and the money is made available, then the Veterans' Administration is directed, under all the proposed bills, to take the money thus secured, adjusting with the several veterans of the Nation, 4,000,000 of them, scattered in every State, in every city, and in every county.

The Veterans' Administration may take applications from these soldier boys, receive their certificates, and adjust with them. Some have borrowed 50 per cent upon their certificates, and are obligated to pay some interest. The Veterans' Administration would adjust those matters, and find, for instance, that John Doe, of New York City, is entitled to $350. The boys who have not made loans on the certificates would submit their certificates and be entitled to receive the full amount. But, of course, that is a detail.

When the money is paid to the soldiers it is new money; it is real money, not credit. It is in no sense credit, because it has been issued by some Federal reserve bank. When a Federal reserve bank issues this new money that much new money goes immediately into circulation. It is not deposit money. It is not credit money, and that is why the banks object. If we should issue bonds and sell them to the people and get the money from the people to pay the soldiers, the banks would not object so much. But when we propose to put a few extra dollars into circulation, to increase the circulation, to bring down the buying power of the dollar—and all admit that the proposed action would do that—then the banks rebel and say we are tinkering with the currency.

Mr. President, if the bill passes the House of Representatives and comes to this body, it will be before the Senate for consideration. I am referring to the so-called bonus bill, which proposes to pay the veterans of the United States the amount due them on the face of their certificates. If that is done under the plan proposed, new money to the extent of the payments will be issued, and to that extent the circulation will be thereby increased. The veterans will secure the money and will either spend the money or deposit it. If they invest it that is spending it. They may buy something that they want. It is their money. I shall not criticize them in any way as to the method in which they expend their money. The record shows they did not squander the money they received last year. I think the record is 3 per cent of the money Congress loaned the veterans last year was spent for what was held to be nonessentials; in other words, by some claimed to be wasted.

But the veterans will take the money and spend it. They will invest it or they will deposit it. If they spend it they will pay their grocery bills. Some of them will have a square meal for the first time, perhaps, in months. Some, perhaps, will have a decent suit of clothes or garments for the first time in months, though, perhaps, limited to a pair of overalls. It is true they will spend the money. They will make a payment on a home, perhaps, or, perchance, they will deposit the money like others might do who have occupations at this time. But all the time the money is in circulation. It is outside of the Treasury.

The distinguished Senator from New York suggests that the local banks may take this money and send it back to the Federal reserve system in payment of their obligations. Perhaps that would happen, but that would only take $600,000,000 of the more than $2,000,000,000. If that should happen and the banks should continue that policy, there would still be more than $1,500,000,000 of that money remaining in circulation. The banks would not send it to the Federal reserve system, because they would not owe it. They might send it there for deposit, but it would still be in circulation. They could get it at any time they needed it.

Those who oppose the payment make the statement that if the money is placed in circulation the dollar will be driven down and destroyed, and commodity prices will be raised out of all proportion to value. Well, Mr. President, would that policy be abhorrent to the millions of people of the United States if it enabled them to get double the present price for their wheat? They would then only be getting 60 cents a bushel for their wheat. If we doubled the price of corn, they would then be getting only 40 cents a bushel for their corn. If we doubled the price of cotton, they would then only be getting 10 cents a pound for their cotton. Would that be abhorrent to the 30,000,000 farmers of the Nation?

It is claimed that such a plan would break down the buying power of the dollar and raise commodity prices. That is the purpose of the legislation. That was the announced purpose of the Federal Reserve Board in buying $100,000,000 of bonds each week, but their policy to date has failed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure I speak the truth when I say that if the Senate were convinced that the things would happen which the Senator says would follow the payment of the bonus, I believe every Member would vote for the bill. Certainly, for my part, I should be happy to do so. In 1924 I submitted an amendment to the then pending bill proposing to pay the bonus in full and to make full adjustment. I think I succeeded in getting 35 or 36 votes for it in the Senate. Of course, conditions were different then. We had then prosperity in the country instead of the depression of the moment. On that account, because of changed economic conditions, those of us who have this kindly feeling toward the veterans must be able to produce all the proof possible that the benefits suggested by the Senator would actually follow the payment.

This is my fear, and I voice it in order that it may be swept aside. I fear that if we were to issue the money—that is, issue the bonds and pay the bonus according to the plan which the Senator proposes—we would put into circulation $2,000,000,000, which would be used as the Senator suggests, but without a recovery of activity, of business generally. The fate of those $2,000,000,000 would be merely to return to the banks. Even if they have paid their notes at the Federal reserve bank, and perhaps paid their obligations to correspondent banks, they would still be in possession of the money. There would be no demand for its use for manufacturing purposes, for the operation of factories, and for other purposes of industry, and consequently it would go back into the banks and would be a dead thing, all without any recovery of business generally and without having served as anything more—and I say this not in any spirit of comparison but simply to bring out the answer—than a dole for the time being. This would happen unless, by some magic, which I hope the Senator may summon, there would be, through the circulation of $2,000,000,000, a recovery of business, a restoration of agriculture and of the prosperity which the Senator mentions. But it is upon the shoulders of the Senator that the responsibility rests to tell us how the mere circulation for a short period of time of $2,000,000,000 of new money would start us on our way toward recovery. Have I made the question clear?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Entirely so. The Senator places the responsibility upon my shoulders.

Mr. COPELAND. That was not fair.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. My shoulders are not broader than the shoulders of the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I should have said upon our shoulders. I want to join in this movement, but I want all the argument possible in order that I may go back to New York and answer these questions which come from Oklahoma and Missouri and other parts of the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if the money were issued and paid out to the veterans we can all vision what would happen. They will begin to buy clothing. They will begin to buy shoes. They will begin to buy meat. They will begin to buy flour. They will begin to buy the things that they do not have and have not had perhaps for months. When they begin to buy shoes and clothing they will soon deplete the stocks on the shelves of the stores in their communities. As the orders come in for shoes and clothing and the shelves begin to look rather bare, the merchants will immediately place orders to restock those shelves. Those orders go to the wholesale houses. Such orders will come from stores all over the United States. Every wholesale house in the country will immediately be flooded with orders for more shoes, more hats, more overalls, and all over the country the shelves of the wholesale houses will become depleted, and the wholesale houses will begin to telephone and wire orders to the factories, "Make us some shoes. Make us some hats. Make us some clothing."

The demand will finally reach the factory that produces meats, which is the farmer. The demand will finally reach the factories which produce bread, and that is the farmer. The demand will finally reach the factories which produce things the veterans want. That will stimulate the business of the local merchant. It will stimulate the business of the wholesaler. It will stimulate the business of the factory. It will make business for the railroads. The railroads have no chance to revive until and unless they get more tonnage to haul and more passengers to carry. If the time does not soon come when the tonnage of the railroads has increased, their hard times will continue and very shortly the United States will find on its hands these webs of railroad lines covering the entire country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I see that, of course, but exactly the same thing would happen, would it not——

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me go ahead with my answer, and then the Senator perhaps can ask another question.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, what plan is now before the Congress or the country submitted by the administration, by the banks, or by the best brains of the Nation to help out in this situation save the one which the veterans have suggested? The bond-buying plan was submitted, and I have shown that the bond-buying plan has failed. Since the bond-buying plan has been initiated the Federal Reserve Board has bought $400,000,000 of bonds, and now we have $248,000,000 less money in circulation than we had when they started to buy the bonds. The plan being followed by the Federal reserve system to make money more plentiful is actually making money scarcer. Since the first of the year a quarter of a billion of dollars of money has been withdrawn from circulation and canceled. The bankers' plan failed and there is no other plan proposed.

The distinguished Senator from New York suggests that the plan of placing $2,000,000,000 in circulation among 4,000,000 people will not work, because the boys will let the money get back into the banks.

Mr. COPELAND. O Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not wish to misquote me.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will withdraw the statement, because it is not accurate. He suggests a doubt that the plan will work.

Mr. COPELAND. A doubt held by many that the plan might not work.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The two plans are identical in purpose. The plan of the veterans of putting $2,000,000,000 in circulation to increase the money supply and the plan of the Federal reserve system to put money in circulation through the buying of bonds are identical. The end to be attained is identical. More money, plentiful money, cheap money means high commodity prices. That is the plan of the veterans. The plan of the Federal reserve system has failed. It has not worked. It will not work.

I submit a question to the distinguished Senator from New York: Under the plan of buying bonds, how long will we have to wait until we will have more money in circulation?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the soldiers are entitled to have this adjustment at the earliest possible moment. I have held to that view for years. But if we are going to use the economic argument it is incumbent upon us to show how the plan of paying the soldiers' bonus would help the country, any more than to issue $2,000,000,000 of money to give to people who are now in distress and starving throughout the country, to the 8,000,000 people who are out of work. If we are going to accomplish all these things by the payment of the soldiers' bonus, why might we not accomplish twice as much by paying it to them and also taking care of those who are in hunger and distress in the cities and on the farms throughout the country? That is the thing I have in mind.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall not argue against the latter suggestion of the distinguished Senator from New York. It may come to that, Mr. President. At this point, in answer to the Senator's suggested if not actual question, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a news story appearing in the Washington Herald of May 1—last Sunday. The news story is entitled—

Hoover agrees United States must aid cities, States—but President can't determine whether to admit it now or after election, advisers say.

This news story is by Carlisle Bargeron, copyright 1932, by the Washington Herald. I ask unanimous consent to have it appear in the RECORD in my remarks at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HOOVER AGREES UNITED STATES MUST AID CITIES, STATES—BUT PRESIDENT CAN'T DETERMINE WHETHER TO ADMIT IT NOW OR AFTER ELECTION, ADVISERS SAY

By Carlisle Bargeron

President Hoover has been virtually convinced there must be some form of Federal unemployment relief, but he can't determine whether he should wait until after the elections.

Some of his closest advisers have told him it is foolhardy to expect that municipalities and States can continue to take care of their distressed situations without Federal assistance. These governmental units, he has been convinced, have come to the limit of their endurance.

The President is understood to accept the representations made to him and reluctantly to agree that sooner or later it will be necessary for some such system as the issuance of bonds by the States and municipalities guaranteed by the Federal Government, and probably floated through the medium of the Federal reserve banks. It would, it is agreed, be a form of inflation more direct than the present operations under the Reconstruction Corporation and Glass-Steagall Acts.

INFLATION DELAYED

The inflation under these latter measures is yet to have its effect, because the banks have used it to pay off their obligations to the reserve banks instead of easing credit.

Unemployed relief as proposed, it is agreed, would be a more direct inflation in that the beginning would be at the bottom of the economic structure instead of at the top, thus differing from previous relief measures.

While it is understood the President fully believes Federal unemployment relief is inevitable, the understanding is that he is reluctant to sponsor it because of the feared political effect. He took a determined stand against the dole at the outset of these troublesome times, and there are those of his advisers now who say that were he to countenance Federal assistance to the unemployed he would be criticised for back-tracking and giving ground on his professed principles.

MUST DO SOMETHING

Yet there is the conviction among some of his advisers that something must be done, that the municipalities and States have come to the end of their rope and that, principles or no principles, people can not be permitted to starve. The issuance by these municipalities and States of bonds guaranteed by the Federal Government, it is contended, would be far different from the original dole proposal.

Strangely enough, there is no indication that in this dilemma Mr. Hoover has given any consideration to the proposed $5,000,000,000 building program, to be taken care of by a Federal bond issue. Such a bond issue would, of course, be no different from municipal or State issues guaranteed by the Federal Government. Both would have the Federal Government behind them, and would ultimately, if not immediately, find their way into the Federal reserve system and form the basis of new currency.

Those who have found Mr. Hoover reluctant to take what is considered the inevitable step until after the elections are insisting that politically he had better admit that he originally was wrong and act now.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if, under the veterans' plan, money is issued and placed in circulation it will do the identical thing which the Federal reserve system is now apparently trying to accomplish. It says it is trying to bring about an expansion of the currency by placing money in circulation. Everyone who opposes the issuance of this $2,000,000,000 makes the statement, as an argument against it, that if we issue $2,000,000,000 in new money it will drive us from the gold standard. What does that mean? It means that money will become so plentiful, will become so cheap—and when money becomes plentiful and cheap that means that commodity prices will go up in proportion—that paper money will leave the gold; there will be a difference between the value of gold and the value of paper. That is what it means to leave the gold standard. As long as paper money circulates on a parity with gold we are still on the gold standard if we want to be. We can voluntarily leave the gold standard by legislation, but if we do not care to do that, we will still be on the gold standard until such time as the paper dollar is not worth a gold dollar. When they separate, then paper is at a discount; it is at a disparity with gold.

Mr. President, the bankers who oppose this plan charge it will drive us off the gold standard and that it will make money so plentiful and so cheap that the paper dollar will not be worth as much as the gold dollar. Well, admit for the sake of the argument that that might happen, that destroys the argument of the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, if the bankers' plan of bringing back prosperity will bring results, no one can foretell how long we must wait. We must assuredly wait until the Federal reserve banks buy $600,000,000 more of bonds, and then wait still further until the member banks that get the money see fit to loan it. When will that be, Mr. President? It will not be soon, because the bankers' plan does not put a single dollar in circulation among the millions of the people of the country; and until the millions of our people have some money with which to buy the things they need, the necessities of life—food, clothing, shoes, and articles of that character—times can not improve.

There is no time possible in the near future when the bankers' plan can put money into the hands of the millions of people of the country. The soldiers' plan will do that very quickly. It will distribute $2,400,000,000 immediately among 4,000,000 veterans located throughout the United States. If the bankers' plan is good, if it will make money more plentiful eventually, then why is not the veterans' plan much better, because it will do the same thing immediately.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am with the Senator 100 per cent when he talks about the bankers. I think he has been entirely too considerate of them. I am not referring now to the ordinary bankers, those at the head of small banks or those who operate the banks with which we ordinarily come in contact, but I do think that the oligarchy of bankers, the invisible government back of the banks, the men I call the "banksters," will never solve the problem. In my opinion, everything they do makes the situation worse. So I am with the Senator when he says we can not wait for them to solve the problem. They are well enough off as they are; and because of the policies which they impose upon the country and their unwillingness to lend funds to individuals and to States and municipalities, in order to enable them to carry on works of mercy, if we wait for them to solve the problem it never will be solved. That is my judgment.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I will not take issue with the statement made by the distinguished Senator from New York. His statement was that if we wait for the "banksters"—that is a newly coined word, "banksters"—to solve this problem, it will never be solved. I join in the opinion just expressed by my distinguished colleague from New York.

Mr. President, I could suggest, I think, a more appropriate term than "bankster." I think I should suggest "banketeer" as being a more appropriate designation of the identical people that the distinguished Senator from New York has in mind.

Mr. President, we hear much in these days about international banks and international bankers. I do not know of any international bankers that we have in this country, although I hear the term mentioned frequently. We do have a great number of international bond salesmen who parade under the pretense of being international bankers; and the sooner the people of the country understand that these international bankers are nothing more than international bond salesmen and the sooner they understand that these "banksters" or "banketeers" that are now in control of this Government are not going to solve the problem in behalf of the one hundred and twenty-odd million people of this Republic, perhaps the quicker the Congress will give some time to consideration of the effect of the control of money upon the business of the country.

The bankers' plan will not work; the "banksters" have no plan to suggest; the "banketeers" have no plan, and neither have the international bond salesmen a plan to submit save the cancellation of the debts due this country by foreign nations.

The only plan that is before the Congress is the veterans' plan. It is admitted that it will do the work. The money can be provided under existing law. It does not require a single amendment to existing law in order to get the money. Bonds can be issued under the old law authorizing consols. The law says the Federal reserve banks may now buy the outstanding consols; they can buy the consols and deposit them in the Federal reserve bank, and issue currency against them. They can do it to-day. Then, if Congress authorizes the creation of more consols and directs the Federal reserve system to acquire and assimilate the consols and issue money against them, we will have the same kind of money that we now have, namely, Federal reserve bank notes backed up by 2 per cent bonds; and they, in turn, backed by the credit of the richest and the strongest Government of the earth. There is no other available plan.

Mr. President, we have heard much about the bonus in connection with this bill. These "banksters" or these "banketeers" are complaining that the veterans are to be given a bonus. Well, Mr. President, since this discussion commenced only two or three months ago the bankers of the country have already received a bonus. The discussions in the Congress have made it possible for the banks of the country, the corporations of the country, the wealthy individuals of the country who hold Liberty bonds and Treasury bonds to receive a bonus as the direct result of this suggested legislation. When the "banksters" saw that the veterans had some chance to pass their bill, they immediately got up a competing plan. Their competing plan was to place money in circulation through the buying of outstanding Liberty bonds. When that plan was inaugurated Liberty bonds were not worth par. I have here a clipping from the New York Times of Sunday, which shows that since the first of the year Liberty bonds and Treasury notes have been as low as the figures I will now read: One issue, 94.2; another issue, 97.22; another issue, 98.8; another issue, 98.30; another issue, 100.1; another issue, 94; another issue, 89.16; another issue, 87.20; another issue, 87.24; another issue, 88.1; another issue, 83; another issue, 83.3.

When the Federal reserve system decided to put into existence the competing plan to make money more plentiful—and their plan was to buy bonds and pay money for those bonds—these bonds were being discounted as low as 82. Then when the Federal reserve system decided to use the powers that they had, to use the money that they had in their vaults to buy these bonds, the bonds began to rise; and, Mr. President, these bonds in the hands of the wealthy people of the United States, in the hands of corporations, in the hands of banks, and in the hands of whomsoever may have held them, have gone up as a result of the demand for such bonds by the Federal reserve system, until to-day these bonds are selling at par, and some are above par.

The bond that was as low as 94.2 has gone up 7 points, the bond that was as low as 97 has gone up 5 points, the bond that was 98 has gone up 4 points, the bond that was 100 has gone up 6 points, the bond that was 94 has gone up 9 points, the bond that was 89 has gone up 12 points, the bond that was 87 has gone up 12 points, another bond that was 87 has gone up 12 points, the bond that was 83 has gone up 13 points, the bond that was 82 has gone up 13 points. So the policy adopted by the Federal reserve system has already produced a bonus to those who hold Government bonds of from 3 to 13 per cent—$3 to $13 on every $100 worth of bonds these fortunate people may have held. So, Mr. President, instead of this bill being a bonus bill to pay the soldiers, it has already been a bonus bill to pay the men, the corporations, and the banks that happen to be so fortunate as to hold Liberty bonds and Treasury bonds.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Oklahoma allow me to suggest to him what occurs to me to be a very great dilemma, which I think explains why there is not more money for the ordinary citizen as the result of the purchase of bonds by the Federal reserve banks? When the Federal reserve proceeds to buy bonds it must buy them from those who have been able to purchase them and possess them. The money obtained from those who have sold their bonds is not distributed among those who may have need for a dollar or two; but probably more Liberty bonds are bought, because as they begin rising in the market the suggestion comes that they are a good investment. So, unless I am in error, far from the buying of these bonds adding to the circulation, it merely gives another opportunity for speculation upon the part of those who hold Liberty bonds.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. It is very illuminating in connection with the remarks I myself was trying to make.

Mr. LEWIS. I am delighted that the view of the Senator conforms with mine.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, when the Federal Reserve Board stops buying Liberty bonds and other Government issues what will happen? They will go down in price again. Here they are, with one issue selling for 106.4, another issue selling for 106.13, another issue selling for 102.26. When the Federal reserve system gets the bonds that it wants, and stops buying bonds, there will be no market for bonds then, or virtually none. There will be practically no one to purchase bonds under the present system. Then these bonds will fall; and the Federal reserve banking system, now having more than a billion dollars of bonds in its vaults, will perhaps have $2,000,000,000 of bonds in its vaults purchased above par. When they start to sell these bonds they must sell them to the public. They must take what they can get for them. The market will control. So the Federal reserve system is in for a gigantic loss through the purchase of bonds above their value, and then, later on, being forced to sell them for what it can get for them.

So, Mr. President, instead of this matter being a bonus bill for 4,000,000 veterans, it has already been a bonus bill for holders of bonds. Perhaps that is not to be wondered at, however. Every financial bill that has been passed by this Congress has been a bondholder's bill. I have reference to the moratorium. I have reference to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. I have reference to the $125,000,000 voted to the Federal land banks. I have reference to the Glass-Steagall bill. Every one of those measures was dictated and passed for the interest of the fortunate few who have their wealth in fixed investments.

Mr. President, I do not care at this time to take more of the time of the Senate. The Goldsborough stabilization bill is now before the Banking and Currency Committee. I trust that it will be reported promptly by that committee and considered by the Senate. But even if that bill should pass, it is nothing more than an instruction. It would have no more effect than a concurrent resolution. While it may direct the Federal reserve system to cheapen the dollar, yet there is no power we can exercise that can make them cheapen the dollar. They claim that they are cheapening the dollar now; but while they claim that they are cheapening the dollar, the stocks upon the exchanges are going lower and lower, and the commodities on the commodity exchanges are going lower and lower, until yesterday—I can not speak about to-day—the stocks upon the markets and the commodities upon the exchanges were the lowest ever. That is easily explained, because the Federal reserve system has taken out of circulation a quarter of a billion dollars since the first of the year, when they are trying to have the country believe that they are placing money in circulation.

Mr. President, if the House of Representatives passes the so-called bonus bill and sends it to this body, that bill, if it follows precedent, will go to the Finance Committee. I am hopeful that the House will pass the bill and send it to this body, and give the veterans a chance to have a hearing before the Finance Committee before this session adjourns.

Mr. President, the opponents of this legislation admit all that the proponents claim. When the proponents of the bonus bill claim that it will cheapen money, they admit, it, but they say it will cheapen it too much. When those who support the legislation claim that it will reduce debts, the opponents say, "Yes; it will reduce them too much." When the proponents of the legislation claim that it will make money more plentiful, easier to get, the opponents say, "Yes; it will make money so cheap and so plentiful that it will be worthless."

Mr. President, in my section of the country, where one-half the farms are now under foreclosure, where city property is not having its taxes paid, where thousands and tens of thousands of unemployed have no jobs because no one who has work to do has money with which to hire the labor, where bonds are in default, when taxes are not being paid, our citizens are not being scared or alarmed at the threat of too much money, or too much Federal reserve money, or too much national-bank money, or too much greenback money being placed in circulation.

AMENDMENT OF ACT TO REGULATE NAVIGATION ON THE GREAT LAKES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATFIELD in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3908) to amend title 33, chapter 4, section 252, paragraph (a), of the Navigation Rules for the Great Lakes and Their Connecting and Tributary Waters, which were, on page 1, to strike out lines 3 to 7, inclusive, and insert "That the first two paragraphs of rule 3 under the heading 'Lights' in the first section of the act entitled 'An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters,' approved February 8, 1895 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 252), are amended to read as follows"; and to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters,' approved February 8, 1895."

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the amendments be acceded to by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Austin	Dale	Kean	Schall
Bankhead	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Bingham	Dill	King	Shortridge
Blaine	Fess	La Follette	Smith
Borah	Fletcher	Lewis	Smoot
Bratton	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Broussard	Glass	Long	Stephens
Bulkley	Glenn	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	McKellar	Tydings
Byrnes	Gore	McNary	Vandenberg
Capper	Hale	Metcalf	Wagner
Caraway	Hastings	Moses	Walsh, Mass.
Cohen	Hatfield	Neely	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hawes	Norris	Watson
Copeland	Hayden	Oddie	White
Costigan	Howell	Pittman
Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

COMMITTEE SERVICE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I shall take but a moment or two of the time of the Senate.

Following the convening of the Senate to-day the committees which had been assigned to me, and from which I resigned some days ago, were reassigned, and I think it well for me to state that I shall expect the Democratic caucus at the proper time to make proper assignments on committees of the Senate, with the caucus understanding exactly my position as I have expressed it.

I undertook to secure the attendance of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but he could not be reached. I tried to get the floor this morning, and I hesitate to say anything now about the Senator from Arkansas in his absence. However, I feel that I owe it to the Senator from Arkansas to reciprocate the very kind compliments he paid my sundry qualifications the other day by stating that I know him to be a man of great standing in our section of the country, in proof of which I send to the desk and ask the clerk to read an extract from Martindale's Legal Directory, so that it will appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Extracts from Martindale's Legal Directory, 1930]

ROBINSON, HOUSE & MOSES

J. T. R., '72 '94 a v l g U. S. Sen.; J. W. H., jr., '86 '11 a v l g; C. H. M., '87 '10 a v l g.

Associates: Harry E. Meek, W. H. Holmes, J. F. McClerkin, Raymond Roddy, Frank Bird.

Attorneys for Arkansas Power & Light Co.; Louisiana Power & Light Co.; Mississippi Power & Light Co.; Southern Power & Light Co.; Southern Ice & Utilities Co.; Little Rock Gas & Fuel Co.; Southwest Dairies Products Co.; Southwest Ice & Cold Storage Co.; Southwest Joint Stock Land Bank; Pioneer Reserve Life Insurance Co.; Southwest Telephone; Graysonia, Nashville & Ashdown Railway; Louisiana & Arkansas Railway Co.; Hollenberg Music Co.; Arkansas Portland Cement Co.; Terminal Warehouse Co.; the Texas Co.; Twin City Bank; Guaranty Savings & Loan Co.; the Gus Blass Co.; Kempner Realty Co.; American Building & Loan Association; Boyle-Farrell Land Co.; Cox Cash Stores Co.; Equitable Surety Co.; Associated Employers Liability Co.; Columbian

Mutual Life; Southern Surety Co.; Marion Hotel; Lafayette Hotel; Capital Hotel; Merchants Transfer & Storage Co.; Arkansas Transfer Co.; Union Bond & Mortgage Co.; Southern Securities Co.; Southern Mutual Savings Co.; Southern Investors (Inc.); Smith Arkansas Traveller Co.; City Delivery Co.; H. L. Doherty & Co.; Chas. E. Gibson & Sons (Inc.); American Surety Co.; Ocean Insurance Co.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 51.

Mr. NORRIS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DICKINSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and in his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HATFIELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. I am informed that that Senator would vote as I intend to vote, and therefore I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I do not know how he would vote on the pending motion, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is necessarily absent. On this question he is paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]. If my colleague [Mr. NYE] were present, he would vote "nay." I understand the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] would vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted, but I understand that my pair, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], is not present and has not voted. Therefore I transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES. I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and vote "yea."

Mr. NORRIS. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] is paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If the senior Senator from Iowa were present, he would vote "nay." I understand the senior Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea."

Mr. HAYDEN. My colleague, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], is necessarily absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]; and

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business: The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—46

Austin	Bulkley	Copeland	Fletcher
Barbour	Byrnes	Dale	Glass
Bingham	Caraway	Davis	Glenn
Broussard	Cohen	Fess	Goldsborough
Hale	Kendrick	Reed	Tydings
Hastings	Keyes	Robinson, Ind.	Vandenberg
Hatfield	Lewis	Schall	Wagner
Hawes	Long	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Hayden	McNary	Shortridge	Watson
Johnson	Metcalf	Smith	White
Jones	Moses	Smoot
Kean	Oddie	Steiwer

NAYS—25

Bankhead	Costigan	King	Pittman
Blaine	Couzens	La Follette	Shipstead
Borah	Cutting	Logan	Stephens
Bratton	Dill	McGill	Walsh, Mont.
Bulow	Frazier	McKellar
Capper	Gore	Neely
Connally	Howell	Norris

NOT VOTING—25

Ashurst	Dickinson	Nye	Trammell
Bailey	George	Patterson	Walcott
Barkley	Harrison	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Black	Hebert	Swanson	Wheeler
Brookhart	Hull	Thomas, Idaho
Carey	Morrison	Thomas, Okla.
Coolidge	Norbeck	Townsend

So Mr. HALE's motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaty, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the other day I voted in favor of Senate Resolution 197 directing the Committee on Appropriations to make a 10 per cent reduction in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill. Evidence has accumulated to the effect that there is danger in that move if carried out as directed by the Senate, that there may be serious disruption in both departments and the dismissal of many mail carriers and many customhouse and revenue employees. Therefore I ask unanimous consent at this time to introduce a resolution, that it may be read at the desk and lie over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 206) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with a view to making the 10 per cent reductions referred to in Senate Resolution 197, should not reduce the appropriations for the Postal and Customs Services to a point where such services would be seriously disrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator has a right to introduce the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not at this time without unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to its introduction, but I have very serious objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the resolution will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has expressed a desire for an executive session at this time. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the calendar. If there are no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order.

TREATY WITH TURKEY

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider Executive F (72d Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty of establishment and sojourn signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and the Republic of Turkey at Ankara on October 28, 1931, which was read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of establishment and sojourn signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and the Republic of Turkey at Ankara on October 28, 1931.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1932.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of establishment and sojourn between the United States and the Republic of Turkey, signed at Ankara on October 28, 1931.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY L. STIMSON.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 24, 1932.

The United States of America and the Republic of Turkey, being desirous of prescribing, in accordance with modern international law, the conditions under which the nationals and corporations of each of the High Contracting Parties may settle and carry on business in the territory of the other Party, and with a view to regulating accordingly questions relating to jurisdiction and fiscal charges, have decided to conclude a treaty for that purpose and have appointed their plenipotentiaries:

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA:

Joseph C. Grew, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to the Turkish Republic; and

THE PRESIDENT OF THE TURKISH REPUBLIC:

Zekâi Bey, Minister for National Defence who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following provisions:

ARTICLE 1

With reference to the conditions of establishment and sojourn which shall be applicable to the nationals and corporations of either country in the territories of the other, as well as to fiscal charges and judicial competence, the United States of America will accord to Turkey and Turkey will accord to the United States of America the same treatment in all cases as that which is accorded or shall be accorded to the most favored third country.

Nothing contained in this treaty shall be construed to affect existing statutes and regulations of either country in relation to the immigration of aliens or the right of either country to enact such statutes.

ARTICLE 2

The present Treaty shall be ratified and the ratifications thereof shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

It shall take effect at the instant of the exchange of ratifications and shall remain in effect for three years. After this date it shall remain in effect until the expiration of twelve months from the date on which notice of its termination shall have been given by either High Constracting Party to the other.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed their seals thereto.

Done in duplicate in the English and Turkish languages at Ankara this 28the day of October nineteen hundred and thirty one.

JOSEPH C. GREW
ZEKÂI

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is a treaty with Turkey, to which reference was made during the last executive session, and to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] called attention and asked to have passed over. I understand at the present time the Senator from Utah has no further objection to offer in regard to the treaty.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution of ratification, which will be read.

The resolution of ratification was read, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive F, Seventy-second Congress, first session, a treaty of establishment and sojourn with Turkey, signed at Ankara on October 28, 1931.

The resolution was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there is one nomination which I ask may be passed over. I have reference to Order of Business No. 4197, the nomination of Earnest E. Correll to be postmaster at Hebron, Nebr.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That nomination will be passed over, and, without objection, the other nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That completes the calendar.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate adjourn, the adjournment being until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 4, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 3 (legislative day of April 29), 1932

POSTMASTERS

IDAHO

Amanda O. Holmes, Plummer.

INDIANA

Samuel I. Parker, Howe.
Paul R. Reece, Spiceland.
James C. Stott, Westport.

LOUISIANA

John A. Moody, Cotton Valley.
Lillian P. Gross, Lake Providence.

MARYLAND

Fred W. Kubler, Cordova.
Richard M. Canady, Fort Washington.

NORTH DAKOTA

Jessie L. Kinsey, Beach.
Marie Siverts, Dodge.

OHIO

Jerome H. C. Goodhart, Brewster.
Hugh M. Hay, Coshocton.
Edwin H. Garver, Navarre.
Henrietta Bennett, Tippecanoe City.

OKLAHOMA

Roy Patton, Ames.
Albert B. Deselms, Edmond.

Hubbard Ross, Fort Gibson.
Chester P. Keil, Fort Towson.
Thomas H. Gillentine, Hollis.
Isaac W. Linton, Jones.
William H. Jones, Kiefer.
John H. Durnil, Picher.
Leslie C. Mendenhall, Seiling.
Louis G. Scott, Stroud.
Howard E. Sowle, Vici.
Fred Godard, Wellston.

PENNSYLVANIA

Bennett H. Light, Avon.
John M. Kotch, Beaver Meadows.
Laura M. Peacock, Houston.
Isaiah M. Stauffer, Millersville.
Abram M. Lichty, Paradise.
Cleo W. Callaway, Shawnee on Delaware.
William A. Bailey, Southwest.

WISCONSIN

Henry F. Roehrig, Arpin.
John C. Chapple, Ashland.
George Ketz, Clayton.
Beatrice Ring, Osseo.
Charles E. Sage, Wild Rose.

WYOMING

Frank Breitenstein, Parco.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 3, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in this sacred quietness dedicated to Thee as our Heavenly Father we would say: "Holy, holy, holy." Thou alone hath the first and lasting claim to our deepest reverence. Thou canst inspire us with the existence of moral power in our breasts. It does not inhere in things external but in the eternal truth that comes from Thee and has to do with our divine natures. Permit nothing, blessed Father, to weaken this quality of soul which belongs to our immortal beings, but make it forever fresh in whom it dwells. Above all things, quicken with an ambition that reaches to the highest pinnacle of statesmanship. Such an exaltation will lead us to remember things for the sake of our country, which we love. O make us really great with nobleness by enduing us with a great affection that shall be sovereign, expelling all pride, all sensitiveness, and all of self. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESENTATION OF BUST OF WASHINGTON

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert an address which I delivered at Madison, Wis., on July 17, 1931, at the presentation of a bust of George Washington to the State of Wisconsin; also the speech of acceptance on behalf of the State of Wisconsin by His Excellency Gov. Philip F. La Follette:

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN M. NELSON, OF WISCONSIN, AT THE PRESENTATION OF A BUST OF GEORGE WASHINGTON TO THE STATE OF WISCONSIN

Governor La Follette, for the purpose of directing your attention to the coming George Washington bicenntenial celebration, I have the honor of presenting to you a bust of the man and statesman whom it is the Nation's will to commemorate. This memorial gift is presented to you by the national commission composed of the President and representative men and women of our country as a token of the confident expectation that at the proper time you will lead the citizenship of this great Commonwealth in the patriotic appreciation of the life and character of the Father of our Country.

It was the hope of the Congress of the United States that by pointing out and inculcating the essential principles that molded and formed his splendid life and noble character, imperishable standards of conduct, this commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of his birth might be productive of inestimable public good.

During the coming year, from the 22d day of February to our Thanksgiving Day, the limits of the festivities set by Congress, many pilgrimages will be made to his earthly shrine on the beautiful banks of the Potomac. The celebration, however, is not to be localized; it is to be nation-wide. From the great cities to the smallest hamlets the American people will extol the life and services of one whose name symbolizes that which is noblest in our national history.

This celebration is not only fitting and timely, it is also necessary. Were Washington with us to-day, what deplorable and disheartening national evils he would witness, to his great grief—evils that disrupt our homes, deteriorate our schools, destroy our faith in God, disturb our national prosperity, and endanger our peace at home while entangling us in wars abroad. Washington knew that history consists of a chain of causes and effects, and therefore would have realized that the problems that vex and perplex us to-day are the inevitable results of the violation of the principles which he made the guiding forces of his own life and which he commended earnestly to his countrymen in his Farewell Address.

While Washington was in every way a human being with all the inherent infirmities of our race of mankind, he nevertheless became a standard or pattern that we would do well to point out for the emulation of his fellow men. We may very profitably urge the study of the material and spiritual factors that united to make him the man he was. The abstract study of principles calls for the highest type of the trained mind. Only very few can attain to such high degree of mental efficiency. But we can all study with profit the principles of George Washington as we find them exemplified in his long career and illustrious character.

No matter in what institution we study him, be it in his home, at school, as a member of his church, in his business, or as a citizen and statesman of his country, we find him steadily adhering to principles which he clothed with deeds and words that speak eloquently to the world for all time.

May I first remind you of his beautiful home life, the primary institution for development of human character? Here we see him carefully fostered by human factors in an atmosphere of love. His father was the first of these human agencies. He laid the foundation of the code of rightful living for the boy, but died when George was only 11 years old. Becoming thus early the head of the family brought him to realize his individuality and responsibility.

But it was chiefly his mother, Mary Ball Washington, and later his wife, Martha Custis Washington, who laid the foundation in love for his successful career. His mother from the shelves of her own library took books of wise maxims and precepts and read them to her child, explaining the deep principles they expressed with illustrations from nature, history, and Holy Writ until he had grasped the essence of their rich and profound truths. At her knee and by her side in the atmosphere of a mother's love were thus sown as seeds or implanted the eternal principles that mold life and condition success. To his mother's influence he testified in these words, "All I am I owe to my mother."

His wife's influence began when he was 27 and continued to his death. No visitor at Mount Vernon can fail to be impressed with an atmosphere filled with the fragrance of love between Washington, the husband; Martha, his wife; and his adopted children—it still seems to linger there. In this long and happy home life was thus instilled the principle that made him the human criterion he was of a lover par excellence of country and mankind. What is patriotism but love of country? What is love of country but love of fellow men? Can there be love of country unless there first appears in the human heart this spiritual essence called love, and where can it come into being better than in the homes of America, at a mother's knee, subsequently to be nourished and cherished in the family life and companionship with wife and children?

It may be most pertinent to this celebration to inquire, Can we feel that our country is our homeland where there is no true feeling of home life? Can a tree blossom and bear fruit without roots? And is it not true that before there can be genuine citizenship there must first be true manhood and womanhood? Therefore, before we consider Washington, the statesman, let us point out Washington, the man, the model son, and exemplary husband. Let us drive home the truth that if we are to save our country we must first preserve our homes.

Let me next point out to you another institution that helped form our first President—that of his schooling or educational development. Here his mind was brought into contact with truth. A teacher, we know, is the usual human factor, and a process called education—the mental operation, the drawing out and discipling of the mental faculties of the human soul by direct contact with science or knowledge—the sum total of developed, organized, and systematized truth.

It must be remembered that Washington lived when Harvard and Yale were in their infancy and State universities like Wisconsin not yet established. In his day men of means sent their sons to European schools of higher learning. Because of his father's death his mother could not afford this, so he was denied the advantages given to his older stepbrothers. He did, however, for a time have a private tutor, an "indentured" servant, who was a man of education.

Before he was 15 he attended Williams School, where he became familiar with elementary mathematics and surveying. It is clearly evident that he did not have the advantages of university training under learned leaders, but was chiefly self-educated. Nevertheless, Washington became one of the best-educated men of his day because he was educated in many ways by study, experience, travel, and associations with cultivated and educated persons of the old and the new world.

Greatly interested was he in learning for others. Besides providing education for his own kindred, he paid for the tuition of other boys. Washington believed in education, advised it, and practiced it. He was a patron of schools. He instituted the first free schooling in Alexandria, Va., and, by his will, left funds for an American university.

Country and school, like country and home, are interdependent. This is a fact well brought out by Washington himself in these words:

"I have greatly wished to see a plan adopted by which the arts, sciences, and belles lettres could be taught in their fullest extent, thereby embracing all the advantages of European tuition, with the means of acquiring the liberal knowledge, which is necessary to qualify our citizens for the exigencies of public as well as private life.

"The best means of forming a manly, virtuous, and happy people will be found in the right education of youth—without this foundation, every other means, in my opinion, must fail."

And

"Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

Washington may well be an educational standard for the youth of America. His life illustrates the fact that while universities are very useful, they are not absolutely necessary for high mental training and attainments of solid and practical learning.

If love of country is dependent upon the cultivation of this sentiment in the human soul in our homes, and if our country is dependent upon the light of truth illuminating the minds of men, much more, I affirm, is it dependent upon that faith in the truth of God that has revealed to mankind the eternal spiritual principles, and set before us a code of laws of the whole moral order together with the eternal sanctions that enforce them.

No land can long enjoy the fruits of prosperity, peace, liberty, and happiness when committed to the rule of Godless government.

Indeed, the life of the Nation varies directly with the spiritual life of its people. Contrast the blessings of liberty that we enjoy under a Government that acknowledges the existence of God in many ways, by opening its legislative and congressional sessions with prayer, by setting aside a day of thanksgiving and by freely permitting all men to worship according to the dictates of conscience, with the oppressions of the people in the lands of Italy under Mussolini, and of Russia under Stalin, dictators who neither reverence God nor respect the rights of man.

What a contrast with these rulers was our God-fearing Washington, born of Christian parents, and baptized as a member of the Episcopalian Church. From infancy his training was deeply spiritual. When his father died he took his place at the head of the table and said grace at meals. He always established a church home wherever he lived—first, the old Popes Creek Church, where he was baptized; later, in Fredericksburg; old Pohick Church in the earlier days at Mount Vernon; St. Paul's Chapel, which afterwards became Trinity Church, New York City; Christ Church, in Philadelphia; and, in his later years at Mount Vernon, Christ Church, at Alexandria. Although his church was the Episcopal, he worshiped in churches of other denominations when away from home.

Washington was without bigotry and without intolerance. On religious freedom he expressed himself thus:

"Of all the animosities which have existed among mankind, those that are caused by difference of sentiment in religion appear to be most inveterate and distressing and ought most to be deprecated."

And—

"While we are contending for our own liberty, we should be very cautious of violating the rights of conscience in others, ever considering God alone is the judge of the hearts of men."

His diaries and letters contain many expressions of his reverence for God and his respect for religion. Through these writings, he has revealed his abiding faith in the divine power, giving grateful thanks for his victories and for his deliverances from danger. Listen to the following:

"I shall always strive to prove a faithful and impartial patron of genuine, vital religion.

"It is impossible to reason without arriving at a Supreme Being.

"True religion affords government its surest support.

"Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports."

And—

"When I contemplate the interposition of Providence, as it was manifested in guiding us through the Revolution, in preparing us for the reception of a general government, and in conciliating the good will of the people of America toward one another after its adoption, I feel myself oppressed and almost overwhelmed with a sense of divine munificence."

And at the close his life ebbed out with these words:

"I am going. 'Tis well. Father of Mercies, take me to Thyself."

Country and faith in God, as inculcated by the church, are interdependent. With the evidence of the French Revolution before him, he declared in solemn words in his Farewell Address this sentiment:

"Morality is the necessary spring of popular government" * * * "reason and experience both forbid us to expect that the national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Let us next behold Washington the business man. Here, too, he is a standard that we may well copy. In this institution he does not seem to have had any special leader; he was essentially self-made. He was guided by the highest business principle, industry, knowledge, and integrity. He was always at work; he studied everything scientifically. Quoting from memory from one of his account books now in the Treasury Department, I once read this simple statement in his own handwriting:

"I desire neither to wrong nor to be wronged."

Adhering strictly to these business principles, he became one of the wealthiest men of his time. He was a farmer, a surveyor, and a landowner. Washington started his profession as a surveyor at the age of 16. He pursued this calling for four years. It was also at the age of 16 when he bought his first land, consisting of 550 acres of wild land in Virginia, that he began laying the foundation for a career which was his greatest ambition and pleasure—a successful farmer. Before he was 21, out of his earnings as a surveyor he had purchased 1,558 acres of land and had previously, through the death of his brother Lawrence, came into possession of the estate at Mount Vernon.

Through his marriage with the wealthy widow, Martha Custis, considerable property came under his management. To farming and the ownership of land and property Washington gave what we would say of any other man, his "whole-souled" interest. He acquired more land—8,000 acres in all—in this "bustling village," 150 "slaves and white servants besides weavers, brickmakers, * * * shoemakers, blacksmiths"; 3,200 acres of his estate was under cultivation at one time. He rode over his property, advised with his overseers, and as diligently studied to perfect his methods of agriculture, shipping, and livestock breeding as previously he had concentrated on efforts to master school books, surveying, or warfare.

Although a scientific farmer, it required business acumen to control 63,000 acres of land, much of it scattered in far sections of the country. He traveled to these distant points, and as he traveled he thought. He saw with his keen surveyor's vision this West united with the East by roads serving as arteries of communication; he saw new waterways serving as market channels to bring the rich produce of the West to Atlantic ports.

He managed his property in a systematic manner; he kept carefully a set of account books; required his men to make regular, detailed reports of crops planted and harvested and of the labor employed.

Washington's standard of conduct as a business man, if applied to-day, would solve most of the industrial and business problems now before Congress pressing for solution. No country can prosper without industry on the part of its citizenship. Agriculture can not be successful that is not scientific; and farmers must neither do wrong themselves nor suffer themselves to be wronged; and if "Keeping government out of business" is a good slogan, no less excellent would be "Keeping business out of government." In the simple statement from his account book, above quoted, that he wished neither to wrong nor to be wronged, he gave us the criterion of all good government—equal and exact justice to all alike.

As the Father of our Country, soldier, and statesman he is best known to us and to the world. He followed no leader, and from the beginning he summed up in himself the views of all sections of the country and of all patriots of the day. He was more of a counselor than agitator or orator. Throughout his entire life as a citizen and as a statesman he stood for the principles of righteousness and liberty. He was in himself the exponent and standards of these ideals.

Washington's military career began at the age of 19 years, when he was appointed adjutant general of the Virginia Militia. His missions to the French, his frontier commands, as volunteer on the disastrous expedition with General Braddock, in which he was the only officer to return safely, and the important part played by him in the expedition that captured Fort Duquesne were but steps which brought out the qualities necessary to a successful commander. These difficult tasks he executed with "efficiency, dependability, and high courage," and thus he prepared himself for a larger military field.

The American soldiers who had rallied to the cause of England at Fort Necessity, which in the hands of the French became Fort Duquesne, had been promised bounty land out in the great West, but these promises were not kept. Who but Washington, whose inherent principles demanded that not alone the letter but the spirit of the contract should be amply met, who but Washington, with his sense of right and justice, would assume the burden of crossing at his own expense into the far-away country of Ohio that he might gain these lands by way of compensation for those who had risked everything for the protection of their fellow men; and who but Washington, sitting as a burgess for Frederick County, Va., would have so vigorously opposed the rising tide of oppression by England. He was a wealthy man, and could easily afford the taxes levied upon colonists. But the stamp act, the Townshend Act, and other similar acts were aimed at their rights, liberty, and freedom. Finally, when news reached the House of Burgesses that the Boston port was closed, in accordance with their resolution, Washington spent the day in fasting and prayer to prepare himself against that time when he might be called to action. Later he volunteered to raise and maintain at his own expense an army of 1,000 men, and to lead them to the relief of Boston.

It was but natural that with his firm, fearless, and loyal background, though but 43 years of age, his countrymen at the beginning of the Revolutionary War united to elect him commander in chief of the American forces. John Adams's proposal that he be made the head of the Army was set forth with these words:

"A gentleman whose skill and experience as an officer, whose independent fortune, great talents, and universal character would command the approbation of all America, and unite the cordial exertions of all Colonies better than any other person in the Union."

As a solemn duty and with diffidence and humility he accepted this trust, saying "I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with."

From the siege of Boston, through the hard winter at Valley Forge, the trials of Newburgh, to the fall of Yorktown and the final treaty of peace in 1783, he carried on the struggle for independence under extraordinary circumstances—cold, hunger, bloody battles, lack of funds, discontent among the officers, discouragement on the part of his men, and virulent attacks outside the Army, besides the conspiracies and intrigues in Congress. These were bitter years of the Revolution. For Washington, on whom rested most heavily the responsibility, they were years of heartaches that a "brother's sword has been sheathed in a brother's breast"; years of disappointment that the policies of the mother country had so far digressed from the conscience of fundamental rights; years torn by sympathy for those who, through loyalty to their country, lay dead or bleeding, and for their families who were in want.

But, too, these were years of hope, of faith, on his knees at Valley Forge, that a divine Providence led the way; of submersion of self to a great duty, sacrificing his business, bearing separation from his home, enduring untold hardships; but ever with the keen foresight, the cautious strategy of a commander of men.

When peace was consummated and his duty was done, he submitted his resignation and returned to private life at Mount Vernon, refusing all recompense for his services beyond personal expenses.

In his political life he was equally as firm, sincere, courageous, and loyal. This career started at the age of 23 when he became a candidate for election as burgess of Frederick County. He was defeated. Three years later he again became a candidate and won. Again his fearless and able championship of right and justice as burgess and delegate to the First and Second Continental Congresses were but stepping-stones to a larger political field.

Through the First Continental Congress Washington sat as a delegate, not active so much as contemplative. He was not a ready speaker; rather he weighed the debates, and reasoning out his own conclusions, mingled informally with his fellow citizens, driving his convictions home. Patrick Henry said of him that for "solid information and sound judgment" he was "the greatest man on the floor." The Second Continental Congress met. Washington was active on committees for raising money and making military plans. Keen insight, deliberation, charity—never hasty conclusion; never the blow struck in wrath—such was Washington's method of procedure.

After the Revolutionary War it was Washington's desire to see a union of the States. He had fought for freedom, now he sought for unity. Once more we find him at the helm in times of stress. Not by chance was Washington selected as President of the Constitutional Convention. His had been the mind back of those principles 12 years before incorporated in the Fairfax County resolves, which became themselves the incipient Constitution. His had been the leaven, in the form of his correspondence, that had worked throughout the Colonies in preparation for the convention and had molded public opinion.

With the Constitution accepted it was in the natural order of event that Washington should be our first President. During his administration of two terms he unflinchingly stood for justice and equal opportunity for all, and no force could swerve him from the path of duty. He selected men for his Cabinet who were personally known to him for their worth and capability. It was he who organized the Supreme Court of the United States, the first tribunal in the world to pass upon the constitutionality of legislative enactments. He was the center of all great legislation, and it was during his Presidency that he laid down sound principles on such vital questions as public revenue, public debt, the civil and criminal law of the Federal Government, the admission of new States, the treatment of the Indians, the system of taxation, and the protection of life and property upon which the freedom and prosperity of our country is based. It may be said that on domestic policies he followed the avowed objects of the Constitution itself and sought to administer that Constitution so as to form a "more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty."

His fundamental maxims on foreign policy are to me a most important legacy so pertinent to our day. Some of these are:

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all."

"The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible."

"The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations."

It was with these foreign policies that he guided our ship of state safely through the excitement of the French Revolution and the difficulties between England and France. Much pressure was brought to bear on him to have us become involved in these turmoils, but he stood firm and steadfast for what he knew was for his country's highest good. May God grant that our statesmen and leaders of to-day and of the future may be guided by these sound rules of conduct in dealing with our foreign friends and foes. What a nation needs above every earthly consideration is courageous, wise, and righteous leadership.

After dedicating 45 years of life to the service of his country, Washington refused to be considered for a third term as President, and at the age of 65 returned to his beautiful Mount Vernon to enjoy the freedom and comforts of private life which for so many years he had denied himself. But it was not long before the Swift Reaper laid him low in the very spot he loved so well.

This is Washington—not a mythically heroic figure but human as are we ourselves; a noble and inspiring character, a farmer, patriot, statesman, a man of vision who could dream dreams, yet keep his feet on the immortal principles of right and justice.

All honor and gratitude is due to the God of our fathers for the gift of him to his country. His descent from an ancestry that for generations were men of the highest character, his impressionable natural and spiritual environment in the new world and fellowship with the best minds of the old; and finally, the world events into which he was born at the time when a nation was to come into being to stand for the eternal rights of man made him a child of destiny. There was, there is, and there can be but one George Washington.

It is a replica of the bust of this great man, by the famous sculptor, Joseph Nollekens, that, by request of the national commission, I now present to you.

Is it too much to hope that the statesmanship and the citizenship of our country may be united in a common bond of pure patriotism in the commemoration of this great personality who was himself the very embodiment of love of country? Is it too much to hope that we may take account of our deviation from the guiding principles that applied first to his own life, and sought to express in the life of the Nation of which he was the first President? And may it be too much to hope that as a people we may find in this review of our early national history once more the ideals that lead us to the heights of greatness, ideals of righteousness, truth, and liberty, upon the altars of which George Washington voluntarily placed the most precious possessions that attract the aspirations of man, property, life, and freedom that he might serve his country, his fellow men, and the world? For, surely, as we look about us and consider the evils that have come upon us, we must realize that only by a rededication of our national life to these great principles can there be any real and lasting solution of our pressing national problems.

ADDRESS OF GOV. PHILIP LA FOLLETTE IN ACCEPTING ON BEHALF OF THE STATE OF WISCONSIN THE BUST OF GEORGE WASHINGTON

We enjoyed listening to this splendid paper of yours, which is far more than a mere formal presentation of this bust. During the time you talked to us this morning you gathered together and presented to us this man's life most beautifully. So much has been written and so much has been said about Washington that I know of no more difficult task than to attempt to address oneself on this subject.

I congratulate you on the manner and method which was used in the presentation of your address. The statue is, of course, a valuable thing to have here in the capitol. I am sure that nothing pleases me more than to have it here in the capitol where the people who come may have an opportunity to see it. We have no bust of Washington. I know that the people who come into this room, as they do by the hundreds, will get pleasure and happiness in seeing this replica of the Father of our Country.

Mr. Congressman, I express again my appreciation to you personally for the beautiful manner in which you have performed this ceremony. I request that you convey to the commission at Washington my deepest appreciation and thanks of myself and all the people who come to see it.

VETO MESSAGE OF A PENSION BILL

The SPEAKER. The first business in order to-day is the veto message of the President of the bill H. R. 9575.

Mr. GASQUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message and the bill H. R. 9575 be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House wishes to complete the economy program at the earliest possible moment, and I hope that we may complete it this evening. In an effort to expedite matters before moving to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I wish to present a unanimous-consent request. It is that we have general debate on Title IX of the bill for a period of two hours, half of it to be controlled by the proponents and half to be controlled by those opposed to the bill, and that the title be considered by sections rather than one whole proposition, under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know who is to control the time of those opposed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I suggest that the gentleman from Alabama control half of the time in favor of the title and yield the other half to some one else.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, that would make it necessary if I desired time to go to the gentleman from Alabama for time. I understand the debate will revolve around the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to strike out the proposed title, and in lieu thereof insert a provision providing for a committee on investigation.

Mr. SNELL. Why not let the gentleman from Alabama control half of the time and the gentleman from South Dakota half of the time, and divide it up?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to know where I will come in.

Mr. SNELL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BULWINKLE. About 10 minutes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Under the general practice, time is equally divided between those in favor and those opposed, and I think the time in opposition should be yielded to some one opposed to the title. Therefore I suggest that half of the time be controlled by myself and half by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNING. Reserving the right to object, I do not object to the arrangement for general debate, but it is my intention to offer an amendment to strike out the entire title and not substitute anything. I think the rule we are working under for orderly procedure ought to be proceeded with. I am willing for general debate to run along as long as desired, and then close it on the title and all amendments thereto, and then read it under the rules of the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Under the gentleman's unanimous-consent request to read Title IX by sections, would that preclude a motion to strike out the entire section?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think if we are proceeding section by section, the motion would apply to the section rather than to the entire title.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then it would preclude a motion to strike out the entire title?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. It would eliminate that privilege.

Mr. SWING. But a person who desired to bring about that result could make his motion on the first section, and if the motion prevailed, announce that he would make the same motion to strike down through the rest of the title.

Mr. CONNERY. Did I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] to say that he would like the opportunity to move to strike out the title?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Unless the gentleman gets that opportunity, I am going to object.

The SPEAKER. If objection is heard on condition, it is useless to discuss the matter further.

Mr. McDUFFIE. May I present another unanimous-consent request in an effort to meet that objection? I ask unanimous consent that we have general debate on Title IX for two hours, half the time to be controlled by myself and half by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON], with the understanding that half of that time shall be yielded to those who are opposed to the bill, that then we consider the title section by section, under the rules of the House.

Mr. BROWNING. That is exactly the request that the gentleman made before.

The SPEAKER. Objection to that has been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then, that a motion be in order to strike out the title.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is going to move to strike out the title.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; with one exception.

Mr. RANKIN. I went to the chairman of the committee, and he agreed to recognize me to move to strike out the title, and then informed me that he had formerly agreed to recognize the gentleman from North Carolina for the same purpose. If his motion is not to strike out the entire title, I have agreed with the members of the Veterans' Committee to move to strike out the entire title.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order. The Chair will state the unanimous-consent request, as he understands it. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there be two hours of general debate on Title IX, the title already having been read, in Committee of the Whole, that one half of that time should be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON], to be equally divided between those for and those against the title, that at the end of two hours' debate a motion be in order to strike out the title, and then that it be considered section by section. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that mean if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] makes a motion to strike out, with one exception, I may make my motion to strike out?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am making the motion to strike out the entire section, and to insert in lieu thereof the present section 910, with some modifications, but my motion will be to strike out the entire section and insert.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A substitute to that would be in order to strike out the entire title.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it from the unanimous-consent request, even though the title has already been read, that it is to be read after the general debate under the 5-minute rule section by section. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. No; it would not be. The title has already been read.

Mr. MAPES. Then what significance has that part of the unanimous-consent request which provides that it shall be read section by section?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman's request does not mean anything except two hours of general debate, and that then amendments may be offered to Title IX under the rule under which we are considering the bill.

Mr. MAPES. And be voted on without further debate?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; and all amendments to it, because the only request is to move to strike it out.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I don't understand there is any provision against general debate under the 5-minute rule, and after the two hours of general debate it will be read section by section, and there will be debate under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The title has been read and the gentleman's request is this, and the Chair will state it again so that there may be no misunderstanding. The gentleman requests that there be two hours of general debate, to be controlled one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from South Dakota, with the understanding that they shall yield one-half to those for and those against; that at the end of that time Title IX shall be considered under the rule governing the consideration of the bill. That means that one may offer an amendment to strike out the title, and to strike out any section or anything else, but that the debate has ceased.

Mr. SNELL. That is not the way I understood it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are to consider it under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not state it, but if that is what the gentleman asks, the Chair will put it that way.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the Chair probably misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the Chair did. The Chair will put the request once more.

The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that there be two hours' general debate on Title IX, one-half the time to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON], with the understanding that that be divided equally amongst those for and against. At the end of that time Title IX will be considered under the rules governing the consideration of this bill.

Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I still think there is a great deal of confusion as to just what this unanimous-consent request means. The Chair says that Title IX will be considered after the close of the two hours' general debate under the rule governing this bill. I would like to ask the Chair if that means that all debate on separate amendments will be cut off, and that we must vote upon the amendments without debate?

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state to the gentleman from Michigan and to the Members of the House, if the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House at this moment and the gentleman from Alabama made a motion or some other Member made a motion to strike out Title IX, there would be five minutes' debate on each side, and then the gentleman could move to close debate on that title. That would be the same as the rules provide, under the 5-minute rule. The only thing, as the Chair sees it, is that there will be two hours' general debate on this.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the Speaker to answer my question definitely. Under the Chair's interpretation of the rule, would the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union have the privilege of debating separate amendments under the 5-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. Under the 5-minute rule; yes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, is not the essence of the request that we shall have two hours' general debate before beginning amendments?

The SPEAKER. That is all. It does not mean anything else.

Mr. TILSON. As I understand it, that is all it means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama that there be two hours' general debate on Title IX, one-half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON], with the understanding that the time be divided for and against?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11267, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). Under the unanimous-consent agreement just had in the House, the Chair has nothing whatever to do with the allotment of time. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] will be recognized in control of one hour, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] will be recognized to control one hour.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult for me to speak on any matter against what might be termed economy. Several weeks ago I spoke in the House, showing what the Federal Government had paid for the soldiers of the World War and also soldiers of all wars. It amounted to almost $7,000,000,000. I contend that the provisions of Title IX regarding the veterans is not real economy, and that the subject matter of this title was evidently not seriously considered by the committee.

In the committee report this expression was used: "It is a drain upon the country."

Is it possible that Members of this House would think that anything which could be for those disabled men who have suffered on account of the war and who are dying day by day on account of it, would be a drain upon the country?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Is there one word in Title IX which affects in any way whatsoever the totally and permanently disabled or totally and temporarily disabled?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Very well. I will get to that in a minute. I am speaking of the report which the committee made, when the committee said this expenditure was a drain upon the country, that expenditure took in all. The gentleman can not get away from that.

Referring to the first section of this bill, what is it made for? What is it presented to the House for? On the one hand, they say it does not affect these service-connected cases which draw compensation. Who, then, does it affect?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I only have 10 minutes. I can not yield.

It affects only one class of men, and that is the Spanish-American War veteran, because under the present disability allowance law a man can not receive disability allowance who pays a Federal income tax.

It is said that that section alone will affect 28,000 persons, to the amount of $13,315,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman would grant me some more time, I would be glad to yield, but I can not yield now.

However, let me say, if the Veterans' Bureau had gone into each case carefully immediately after and during the years after the war, possibly those men who are drawing disability allowance, if they are to be considered in this connection, would have been drawing compensation for service-connected disabilities. There were many parts of this country where those men, back in the mountains, back away from towns, did not see a single man belonging to the Veterans' Bureau or anybody connected with it; did not know they were entitled to nor how to get compensation or hospitalization. Let us be just about this. I have seen many dying and too much suffering, not only by the men on the fields of battle but I have seen too much suffering in the hospitals in America to permit me to say to these men that the little pittance that the Government has given them because of their disability shayy be taken away.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman will have to get me some more time.

Now we get to these veterans in institutions. They say that class includes 9,920 persons and that the saving will be $5,370,000. How did that section get in there? I will tell you. Back in 1924 General Hines, the Director of the Veterans' Bureau, came before the committee and he himself asked that it be put in there. He did it because it affected these men who were in the hospitals for just a short time, who worried about their financial condition, and this provision in their behalf relieved them of this worry and improved their condition. I shall move to strike out that section.

Then we come to the emergency officers' retired pay. That affects 3,200 officers and amounts to $3,386,000, so they say. It is possible that that number should be cut down, but the law was passed by this Congress. They gave to the disabled emergency officers of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps this pay. The Attorney General's decision made more entitled to it than the director thought; but remember this, gentlemen, that every man who is drawing compensation from this Government in any way, shape, or form has been passed upon by Government doctors, not one time but many times.

I think later on the section as to emergency officers should be carefully considered by a committee and possibly some reduction should be made, but I do not think it is just to those men at this time to keep this provision in the bill, and this as to emergency officers is being considered by the Military Affairs Committee at this time.

Then we come to the limitation for retroactive benefits. This amounts to $3,000,000 and affects 35,000 people, they say. How do they estimate that there are 35,000 people entitled to retroactive pay who have never received compensation or disability allowance? The claims have not been filed. Are they doing it upon a percentage basis? Time after time each and every Member of Congress has found that he had a just and meritorious case, but it took him years to get it through. Is not that true? You knew the man when he came back from service, and yet for some reason or other, or some technicality, the bureau failed to pass favorably upon his claim. Under the present law he gets six months retroactive pay.

I am moving to strike out that section.

Now we come to the insurance suits. They say that because a man has been a soldier, forsooth, because he was permanently and totally disabled, the rules of evidence in the United States courts shall be changed as to him; that anybody else with a complaint or claim can come in under the provisions of the statutes, but this man can not introduce any evidence save that evidence that he filed with the bureau. The bureau, my friends, does not ask him for evidence. I have had experience with a number of these cases. Over a year ago a guardian brought his ward to see me, a man who was discharged totally and permanently insane and continuing so from the date of his discharge from the service, and the bureau never said one word to him about insurance. I suggested to the guardian that he write to the bureau and tell them about this man's condition. He never heard from them. I suggested to him that he get a lawyer and let the lawyer write a letter, and a letter was written, and although that was 14 months ago, yet he has not heard a word from the bureau. They should be fair and just to these men.

If the men have meritorious claims, they stand on the same footing as anyone else, and there is not in this bill a word as to how much can be saved except they say that it may save millions.

The amendment that I shall introduce—I have not the time to run over the other provisions—takes care of section 910. I modify it by providing for the appointment of a committee of seven Members from the Senate and seven Members from the House, to be selected by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House. On the House committee, if the Speaker wishes, there could be two members from the Veterans' Committee, two members from the Committee on Pensions, two members from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and one member from the Appropriations Committee. They should give thorough and careful study to this matter. In addition to that I provide that in their report the committee shall recommend such economies as will lessen the cost to the United States Government of the Veterans' Administration, but they should only do this after careful deliberation, after careful study to insure that these comrades of many of us will be fairly and justly treated by the Congress of the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I absolve the members of the Economy Committee of the responsibility for the language that is found in Title IX. This was not their work. It was written out and brought up and handed to them. I credit them with at least being shocked by some of the things that were proposed and refusing to stand for all of it. The language is apparently drafted for the express purpose of hiding what the real purpose is. In other words, the section usually tells who are going to be left on the pay roll, but leaves in doubt the persons who are going to be cut off. Apparently the committee itself was so uncertain of its work that when it had concluded nine sections it provided that a joint committee should be set up to make a post mortem inquest and determine what this bill really does and what ought to be done with reference to these pension and compensation laws. Well, if there is occasion to have a board of doctors diagnose the patient, then it ought to be done before all his digestive organs are cut and not after the operation.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does not the gentleman know that the Government has been imposed upon in many instances under the emergency officers' act?

Mr. SWING. Of course, it is possible that there are some such instances. Under any general law affecting a large number there is likely to be some imposition, but I call the attention of the distinguished chairman of this committee to the instruction which courts of justice frequently give to juries that it is better that nine guilty men escape than that one innocent man should be wrongly convicted. So here it is better that some undeserving men get on the pay roll than that one honest veteran injured in the service of his country should go uncompensated.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Can the gentleman point out in this bill where any man who was injured in line of duty and who is permanently or temporarily disabled is denied anything he should have?

Mr. SWING. Yes. This title repeals the presumptive connection of service origin in certain classes of cases and the man who can not produce two witnesses who know when and where he contracted T. B. is simply out of luck.

On this floor Doctor Kindred, an eminent doctor and then a distinguished Member of this body, said that it would be seven or eight years after the war before all the N. P., mental, and nervous cases would develop, cases where men were shell shocked during the World War, cases where the human body and the human nervous system had been subjected to a greater strain than ever before in all history. The same thing is true of T. B., where lungs were injured by the many kinds of gases used during the war, resulting in subsequent pulmonary disabilities. And that is why Congress gave them this presumptive connection down to January 1, 1925.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Is there any language in this title which affects a presumptive case in the event that a man has less than the income prescribed or is there any language in this title which affects a presumptive case which is totally and permanently or totally and temporarily disabled?

Mr. SWING. The answer is: There is, in a half a dozen different places.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Where? Point it out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is a most cruel way of economizing. I do not favor the cash payment of the bonus at this time. It is unfair to the veterans as well as to the other taxpayers. It is not fair, however, to enact the provisions of Title IX into law. I feel the committee did not make a thorough study of existing law and conditions, although I know they meant to be fair. But the time was short, and, frankly, it seems as if the savings claimed by the committee in section 1 are just double what, as a matter of fact, would be effected. Apparently the figures used are based upon the percentage of these wage earners who are paying income taxes, and obviously they will not find as relatively high a percentage of disabled men paying income taxes; take total and permanently disabled cases, only a very few of such cases would be found paying income taxes. In these troubled times, also, a man may pay an income tax to-day; next week his income is wiped out. How can this section be fairly adjudicated?

And these are clear injustices in the whole title. Why, for instance, should you penalize a man because he did not get to France? Or if he did get to France, why should he be penalized because he was not engaged in actual defensive or offensive combat with the enemy or because he was not in the zone of active hostilities? You know a good soldier goes where he is sent. Many a man wanted to go to France, but did not get there. The men who went to France are exempted and get all the benefits——

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentlewoman yield? That is hardly a fair statement.

Mrs. ROGERS. I would like to yield, but I have only three minutes.

I saw, I suppose, 35,000 men and women in different hospitals this last spring while making an inspection of hospitals where our sick and disabled are cared for. Not a single one of these veterans complained because he or she had served during the war and had made sacrifices for us, and I saw many terribly disabled veterans. Many veterans, as you know, can not secure service connection, perhaps, due to the fact that they were not able to get the evidence from doctors who treated them and who had died without leaving a record of such treatments, and in some instances their service records were destroyed.

You know it is very difficult for the able-bodied to get work at this time. It is almost impossible for the disabled to secure employment. If you are running a business to make it pay, you want your business to be run in the most efficient way possible. You are not going to employ disabled men who can not do a full day's work, especially at this time, if you want to make money. So our disabled have an especial handicap in finding employment. You surely do not want to punish them further. If a man is disabled and needs hospitalization, if he happens to be a neuropsychiatric case, even if he pays an income tax, he very probably can not be cared for in a civil hospital. A survey of State and county hospitals has shown every year, practically, not a vacant bed even for civilian neuropsychiatric cases, and terrible overcrowding, with patients sleeping in corridors in some institutions. There is a long waiting list in most of the States. Private neuropsychiatric hospitals are few and very expensive. So even if our neuropsychiatric veterans pay income taxes, they will find they can not be hospitalized anywhere if they are turned out of our veterans' neuropsychiatric hospitals.

The same is true to a great extent of the T. B. cases. There is a shortage of beds also in many T. B. State and county hospitals. The curve of veterans' T. B. cases is on the upgrade as well as the N. P. cases.

The Veterans' Committee has tried so hard to give the veterans a chance for life and health. And prompt and adequate care means so much in these two types of cases. I beg you not to vote to turn them out into the street. Do as Major BULWINKLE suggests and have a survey made of the whole problem.

Take your emergency officers. Perhaps it may be unfair for some of them to draw their retirement pay and large salaries, but certainly those who are receiving small salaries should have the benefit of their retirement pay in order that they may save up for the time when they can do nothing. [Applause.] I will extend my remarks later.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CRAIL].

Mr. CRAIL. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I take the floor at this time to voice a protest against section 901 of the bill which is now before us. Section 901 contains the necessity or destitution provision, often referred to in veterans' welfare legislation as the pauper's oath clause. The words "pauper's oath" are not used in the bill. It is dressed up and sugar-coated so it does not look so bad and does not taste so bitter. It merely denies compensation, pension, hospitalization, rehabilitation, and insurance benefits, regardless of how their disabilities may have been received, to disabled veterans who are required to file income-tax returns.

The gentleman from Arizona says that section 901 does not deny benefits to any disabled veteran who needs them. That is the very objection to it. It puts the payment of veterans' welfare benefits on the basis of necessity or destitution. It changes the whole legislative policy of the United States in regard to veterans' welfare and makes such payments a matter of charity instead of a matter of compensation for disabilities incurred and services rendered.

I shall vote to strike out the entire Title IX, because I believe it is poorly considered. We have legislative committees who have devoted years to the consideration of veterans' welfare legislation. This proposed legislation did not arise in any such committee. If I am correctly informed, no member of the Veterans' Welfare Committee, or of either of the Pension Committees or of the Military Affairs Committee or of the Naval Affairs Committee was invited to participate in the consideration of this bill. No open hearings were had. If reports are true, the measure, so far as it affects veterans, was handed to the committee by a gentleman who was not a member of the committee and who was not even a Member of Congress; and, with only an ex parte hearing, it was favorably reported by the Committee on Economy with only minor changes. This is not the way to legislate properly.

The so-called pauper's oath provision will save comparatively little to the Government and, in a financial way, it would not greatly affect those war veterans, their widows, and orphans to whom it denies benefits. The ones who would be adversely and most cruelly affected by it are the disabled veterans, their widows and orphans, who actually need these benefits, because the destitution provision would brand them as paupers, beggars, wards of the Government, and objects of charity. If destitution is fixed as the basis of our country's gratitude and generosity to those who fought for it in time of war, then our disabled war veterans will no longer be our Nation's heroes but will be looked upon as our Nation's failures and mendicants.

Such a policy would be especially brutal and unjust to the women and children of disabled war veterans.

The pernicious pauper's oath provision would upset the long-established policy of our Government with regard to disabled veterans' welfare. It should not be done in this improper and ill-considered way. A few years ago a President vetoed the Spanish War veterans' pension bill on the expressed ground that it did not have a necessity provision in it, and Congress promptly overrode the President's veto by a vote of 298 to 14.

At the proper time, if I am recognized by the Chairman for that purpose, I shall introduce an amendment to strike section 901 from this bill.

My colleagues, I plead with you, do not do such a great injustice, such a cruel and inhuman thing to the disabled veterans of our country's wars, their loved ones, their widows, and their orphans. I plead with you to strike from this bill section 901, which contains this iniquitous and so-called pauper's oath provision. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], which is to strike out the title and substitute a provision providing for a committee of seven from the House and seven from the Senate, to report back by December, 1932, after investigating all veterans' legislation, including the veterans of all wars.

I am not one of those who believe that the Veterans' Bureau or that veteran legislation is perfect by any means; but, nevertheless, I do not believe that this is the time, in all this hurry and scurry about economy, to bring in a proposition to cut down the compensation of a disabled man in the interest of economy, when the Economy Committee has so many other things to consider; and before I proceed further, I would like to make this observation:

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS], in a conversation with me the other day, said that he figured he was doing a very unpopular thing with the veterans of his State in offering this legislation. I want to say right here that I believe the gentleman from Arizona is absolutely sincere in his desire to bring about economy. I believe he, a veteran himself, is absolutely sincere in this legislation which he has brought in with reference to the veterans, and for one, knowing the standing of the gentleman from Arizona, knowing his high character, his high purpose, I sincerely hope that he will be returned to the Congress and that the veterans in his State will realize that, despite this legislation, he is a real friend of the veterans of the United States. [Applause.]

I am in favor of this investigation of conditions, and I am going to tell you why. Down in the Veterans' Bureau the other day, I was there in reference to a disabled emergency officer case, and when I went before the board I said, "You fellows down here are killing the goose that laid the golden egg; in other words, if a few Senators or a few Congressmen come down here on a disabled emergency officer case you do not care anything about the merits of the case; it goes through. But in the case of some poor devil who has not gone to any Congressman, who has not gone to any Senator, but just comes in on his own, with an absolutely good case, whether he is a disabled emergency officer or an enlisted man, you drag his case along and let it drag, drag, and drag, and then oftentimes you tell him that he is less than 10 per cent disabled." This, of course, does not apply to all boards of the bureau, nor to the great majority of employees of the bureau, but it certainly does apply to a minority, and I want to see these conditions rectified.

I do not believe that this House or this Congress wants any veteran to be forced to go to a Representative or a Senator to get justice under the provisions of the law for veterans. I would like to see a commission of seven Members of the House and seven Members of the Senate appointed, and I hope that they will not all be veterans. I hope it will be equally divided between those who are veterans and those who are not, and let them go into the matter dispassionately in order to investigate the conditions of the Veterans' Bureau. I have referred to changes which should be made, economies which can be made, and then report back to Congress and let us have veterans' legislation to cure injustices such as I have mentioned.

I had a case of an emergency officer who served in the company with me. He was in a platoon of Company B, One hundred and first Infantry. The Germans put up a box barrage on A Company's fourth platoon and killed and captured some men, and this officer came over from B Company with his men to help the fourth platoon of A Company when he was picked up by shell concussion and hurled from the trench. I talked with him a few hours after this occurred. From an able-bodied man of fine physique and clear mentality, from that moment he has been a changed man, all shot, as the veterans say. He is all worn down, and certainly, to my mind, is at least 75 per cent permanently disabled. That man's case has been going on for two years; he can not get relief, he can not get retired.

It is such conditions as that that I want rectified. But, gentlemen, I do not believe the way to rectify them is to pass any half-baked proposition like this before us to-day that could not be fully considered by the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman recognizes that with a bureau as large as the Veterans' Bureau it can not work all the time like a well-oiled piece of machinery. The gentleman from Massachusetts has brought a severe indictment against the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. CONNERY. I intended to.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Of course, there are cases where they do not have the influence of Senators or Congressmen, and the gentleman is going far afield when he says that cases that are not sponsored by Senators and Representatives can not go through.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is in error. I did not say that only those cases went through. I intended to indict certain employees of the Veterans' Bureau. There are veterans who will not go to the bureau, because they believe that unless they have congressional or other influence they can not get justice. I want these things cleared up. I want to see the veteran get all he is entitled to, no more no less.

I am going to vote for the Bulwinkle proposition and for the committee of investigation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL].

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I am taking the position that we ought to strike out the entire Title IX, and for this reason: I do not believe this Government can afford to select men to go to war and then not take care of them after the war is over. I do not believe that you can draw any differential between the man who went across the sea and the man who stayed on this side, because we all know that the man who stayed on this side was disappointed and would have willingly gone to the other side. If he became sick on this side, and became incapacitated so that he could not make a living, then he is entitled to the same consideration as the soldier who went to the other side. They are all soldiers. I take the position that if this Government is going to carry on for all time, it will be necessary for it to protect its soldiers after a war is over. My father went to war, and he received at the start $8 a month pension, and I regard that as an acknowledgment of the Government to him that he was entitled to just consideration.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Does the gentleman believe that the man who has an income of $1,500 a year or more, who breaks his leg to-morrow and becomes temporarily disabled, without any connection with the World War whatsoever, should receive disability allowance?

Mr. BROWNING. He does not get it.

Mr. BALDRIGE. Yes; he does.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. I believe that if a man is worth $100,000 or $500,000 and goes to war and is injured, he is entitled to the same benefit as the soldier who does not own a dollar who goes to war and is injured. He goes to war, and why should he be discriminated against simply because he has some money. Everybody in the country who went to war is a soldier, no matter whether he is worth $100,000 or a dollar. I believe all soldiers should be taken care of, and if our laws are not sufficient, we should make sufficient laws. Why take it out of the soldier who is in need? There is not a Member on this floor of the House who does not know that in his district there are hundreds of them still in need, and so far as I am concerned, I am going to vote to strike out the whole thing. [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that no member of the Veterans' Committee was consulted about this legislation. We have a committee of 21 members, and, if you will except your humble servant, I think there is not a committee in the House whose membership ranks higher than does the membership of the Committee on World War Veterans' Affairs. I hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] say "Ah," which encourages me to stand by my statement and to add to it, if necessary. I say it advisedly.

We were not called on. Not a member of the committee, so far as I know, was ever called in or questioned about this legislation, nor were the representatives of the various service organizations, not a single one of them. This Economy Committee sometimes reminds me of an oriental emperor who was presented with a set of classic English books by the English minister to his country. He immediately called in his royal architect and told him to make him some book shelves. After they were made it was discovered that he had made a mistake. The shelves were too short and the books would not go in them. So the emperor had the architect take the books out and saw the ends off.

That reminds me somewhat of the work that has been done by this committee. If they were going to interfere with veterans' legislation, why did they not call in some member at least who had been on the Veterans' Committee and who was familiar with this legislation? Why is it they put in so little time on the question of salaries in the Veterans' Bureau? The salaried pay roll of the Veterans' Bureau is more than $43,000,000 a year; at least it was the last time I investigated it. Why take this sort of a step and not go into it in a systematic way and cut down some of the overhead? I know that some of this legislation ought to pass. I am willing to investigate, but I am not willing to subscribe to the doctrine that the few members of the Economy Committee have all of the information, all of the wisdom, and all of the ability in Congress.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Speaking for the Economy Committee, we regret exceedingly that we overlooked calling on the great genius of the distinguished soldier from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. I do not yield for any more of this mock comedy. I put my record against the record of the gentleman from Alabama. Who ever shot at him for an economic genius; who ever heard of his being a superstatesman? No, Mr. Chairman; any member of the Veterans' Committee knows as much if not more than does the gentleman from Alabama about this particular question.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Was the gentleman from Mississippi ever shot at by anybody?

Mr. RANKIN. Not yet. I understand the gentleman from Arizona is responsible for this whole provision.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes; and the gentleman from Arizona admits it, and is proud of it.

Mr. RANKIN. Why did not the gentleman call in either the members of the Veterans' Committee or the representatives of the various service organizations and get some information on this subject before he undertook to force this bill through the House?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. If the gentleman will wait for a few minutes, he will be informed in respect to that.

Mr. RANKIN. Why did not the Economy Committee publish some hearings, so that we could read them? Let me tell you something. We have a few men in this House who are trying to arrogate to themselves the prerogative of running the Congress. They have just about blown up, and this economy bill, I think, is going to put the finishing touch on them. [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] called this veterans' title of the economy bill half-baked. I disagree with the gentleman. It is not baked 2.75 per cent, or even one-half of 1 per cent. [Laughter and applause.]

After considering the fruit of the labors of the Economy Committee, particularly with reference to the title under consideration, I know there are many Members of this House who wish that they had joined with me in opposition to creating this fake Economy Committee in the first instance. When the Democratic majority created this Economy Committee you admitted that the regular standing committees of the House of Representatives were incapable of functioning on legislation which was within their jurisdiction. You admitted that those standing committees, controlled by a majority of Democratic Members, were incapable of functioning on these legislative matters. [Applause.]

Now this economy bill is brought in without proper consideration of the Economy Committee of the many problems which it covers. This economy god of the economy peddlers must have blood, and to-day the disabled veterans of the Nation's wars are to be thrown upon the altar as a sacrifice in the name of economy, to save $48,714,000 for the Treasury. After studying the provisions of this title, you must necessarily reach a conclusion that almost the entire amount of the estimated savings in payments to the veterans will be used in administering the law and reviewing several million claims now on file in the Veterans' Administration. This title with its pauper provision puts a premium on gold bricking and not working, and you say to the man with a service-connected disability, "Work 30 days a year and loaf the balance of the year and your income will not be sufficiently high to prevent you from obtaining compensation benefits."

Another vicious provision of this bill which has not been called to the attention of the Members of the House is that provision in section 902 which reduces compensation and pension rates while in a Government hospital or national home. You claim you want to put the disabled men upon an equality while in hospitals and national homes. What do you do under this section of the bill? You give to single veterans in hospitals and national homes not more than $20 a month.

Let us take an example of how this section operates. I have in mind one case, a man who was in actual combat service, lying in a hospital in my district. He was shot through the chest. He contracted pleurisy with effusion, which turned into active pulmonary tuberculosis, which is service connected. He is hospitalized in a Government institution; and after this bill becomes law, because he is a single man, while he is remaining in that institution he will only be able to draw $20 a month compensation. Then when he becomes an arrested case of tuberculosis and is discharged he is thrown out into the cold world and has to fight the battles of the world without having had an opportunity to accumulate a few funds by reason of the reduction of his disability compensation to $20 a month while hospitalized.

In the same hospital there is a man who, 25 years after the war, if you please, gets flat feet; he becomes obese. He happens to have a fat stomach, in plain street language. He has three fingers cut off by a street car, and he is hospitalized as a member of that institution and he will also receive $20 a month during hospitalization, the same as the man who was injured in line of duty, to whom I just called attention. That is how section 902 applies.

In the five minutes allotted I can not discuss many of the other objectionable features. I shall vote for the motion of Major BULWINKLE and his substitute. I hope we can have a roll call on this motion to show the members of the Economy Committee that it is about time for them to resign and the Democratic Party to dissolve said committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, my feeling over this bill is not directed at the Economy Committee, but with the utmost deference to them, I disagree with the provisions which they have brought in with regard to disabled men.

I feel that the Veterans' Committee and other committees of this House are capable of handling this kind of legislation. It is technical; and if revision is to be made, I think that those who have had experience over a long period of years are in a better position to say what those provisions should be than anyone else.

When we were called upon to vote for this Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other measures calling for heavy outlays from the Treasury, we were not advised that we were to take a portion of that which we provided for sick industries away from sick soldiers.

For instance, there is this situation. Several of us worked for years on the provision about presumptive connections, tuberculosis, and mental patients. Under this provision, if a single man has an income of $1,500, if he has presumptive connection, he not only can not draw compensation but he can not get the benefit of hospitalization. I think that is wrong. There are not many private institutions in this country where a $1,500 income could pay a man's expenses for treatment. The presumption was worked out after strong medical opinion that every presumption written into the law was justified. If a man is single and is sent to a hospital and he has no dependents, he is not only cut down to $20 but it is provided that an uncle or a brother who has great affection for him and who would like to take him home, may take him home; but if he is taken out of that institution while the Veterans' Bureau says he needs hospitalization, he only gets $20 on the outside.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. That applies only to neuropsychiatric cases.

Mr. BROWNING. It applies to every presumptive case. The gentleman should write the bill over again if that is his construction, because I know something about veterans' legislation from experience on that committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the committee if certain amendments are accepted, but I want to call your attention to just one thing that was referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] several days ago. In times like these any matter in which millions of men are involved is an expensive proposition. It is an extremely expensive proposition, and you can not be as generous, you can not be as kind to the veterans as you would like to be. In times like these when a veteran has a position at the Veterans' Bureau, for instance, as many of them do, paying $3,000, $4,000, $5,000, or $6,000, as little as they could do would be to give up this compensation while they are receiving such a salary in a Government position, or any other position.

There are two amendments that I want to call to your attention; and if they are adopted, I am going to support this bill. One of the amendments to which I wish to call your attention is on page 67. The language on page 67 absolutely changes the rules of evidence and makes it impossible for a veteran who has submitted his testimony to the Veterans' Bureau to introduce new evidence before a court. That is entirely contrary to judicial procedure; it takes away rights that other individuals have, and I think it is entirely unfair. I think that provision should be stricken out.

Then on page 70 is another provision I hope you will carefully consider. I am not favoring it although I happen to be a lawyer myself, but I know many of these veterans are dependent upon the services of lawyers to recover from the Veterans' Bureau. You find from the language on page 70, line 14, that a lawyer can not receive a greater fee than 10 per cent of the amount due. A man may have a policy that has run only a few months, but to recover what is due needs the services of a lawyer. The lawyer can receive but 10 per cent of the amount due. It is not fair to ask any attorney to take a case like that for such small compensation, and they will not give the veteran the necessary aid.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, one of the functions of the service men's organization is to take care of cases for veterans. It may be that the service organization either can not or will not take them up. They ought to provide the necessary personnel to do it properly.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. A fee of 10 per cent of the first few installments is not enough to enlist their aid. I will offer an amendment in connection with that when the proper time comes.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I simply want to say that I do not think this whole economy program has been satisfactory to the House. I do not think it has been satisfactory to the country. I would like to see this Congress go on record as establishing and setting the principle of the 5-day week. Whatever happens to this economy bill, if they adopt that principle and increase the employment of labor in this country, I believe this Congress will have been a success. I sincerely hope that we eventually adopt the 5-day week, which will increase employment rather than reduce it as it will be reduced under this bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is my purpose to state my position upon the main features of the McDuffie bill, which is offered as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill now under discussion. There is no doubt but that the country demands a reduction of governmental expenditures. It is amazing to me that the press and the country place the whole blame on Congress for the extravagance in Government. Since the Budget act of 1922 Congress has cut the Budget estimates—the presidential recommendations—by more than $500,000,000. The only $5,000,000,000 Budget we ever had was the time that Mr. Coolidge was talking about economy in paper clips and paper cups. It will only be possible for me to refer to the main items in the bill with my position thereon.

COMPENSATION REDUCTIONS OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

There are two plans for reducing salaries. One carried in the bill—the McDuffie plan—with an exemption of $1,000, and an 11 per cent cut on all amounts in excess of the exemption. This cut is applicable to all officers, including Members of Congress, that do not have constitutional immunity. The term of this pay reduction is one year from July 1, 1932.

Heretofore an amendment was adopted increasing the exemption to $2,500. I opposed this amendment for the reason that its adoption will take $55,000,000 out of the bill. I might also add that in the years of my service here, when times were either normal or prosperous, I supported all measures looking toward the increases in salaries, retirement benefits, and the betterment of the wage conditions of Federal employees. It does not make me happy to oppose the higher exemption, but I feel that the exigencies of the occasion justify the larger exemption for a temporary period.

However, there is a second plan that is known as the Hoover furlough plan—some call it the "staggering plan"—which would make a very much larger cut in the salaries of the Federal employees. The same cut in the McDuffie plan is provided for the larger salaries, including Members of Congress. Practically all of the complaints I have received against the salary cut has been in connection with the Hoover furlough plan. Most all of the employees, who become acquainted with the McDuffie plan, are willing to take the cut for the 1-year period, and prefer it very much to the plan of the President.

During the consideration of this measure I supported the McReynolds amendment, which provided for a smaller cut for the small wage earner, with a graduated scale as the salaries grew larger, up to a maximum of 20 per cent for salaries of Members of Congress and those drawing similar amounts. In this connection I might say that the bill carries a reduction in mileage allowance of 25 per cent and stationery allowance of 33⅓ per cent. These cuts, together with the general salary cut, makes Members of Congress suffer the largest salary reduction under this bill.

Referring to the Hoover plan, I am at a loss to understand how, by the lessening of the time for the employees to work, there could be any effectual saving when substitutes would be used in their places. It is very apparent that there would be several more employees on the roll, but if the substitutes filled in the time when the regular employees were cut off, I do not see how there could be such a material saving as there is claimed.

As stated before, this salary cut reaches every Federal employee—executive, judicial, and legislative, except those protected by the Constitution; and they may, if they choose, voluntarily reduce salaries in conformity herewith.

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS

Under section 301 power would be given to transfer not to exceed 15 per cent of any appropriation from one department or independent agency to another. I oppose this section on the ground of economy. It ought to be the purpose of Congress to appropriate to meet the needs of any department or any independent agency. The amount should be sufficient to meet their needs. If the appropriation be in excess of the need, it should be turned back into the Treasury. It seems to me that that is the only way economy can be effectuated.

There is a further angle to this, and that is Congress should maintain control over appropriations and not grant its power to the executive branch of the Government for control of the expenditures not used.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Section 303 of the bill was stricken out. It was a pleasure for me to have a part in this action of the committee.

The amount involved per annum is very small indeed from the viewpoint of the Treasury, yet the benefits accruing to the boys and girls of school age throughout the whole country is of real consequence. I can say with assurance I received more protests and objections to the discontinuance of this Federal aid than upon any other subject since I have been in Congress.

WEST POTOMAC PARK HEATING PLANT

This is a saving of $750,000 in the construction of a heating plant in the District of Columbia.

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

Here is sought to discontinue the Army Transport Service, the naval transportation service, and Panama Railroad Steamship Line. It was sought to sell the vessels and to discontinue operation of the Panama Railway in the name of economy.

This matter has been before Congress for many years. Extensive hearings have been held before at least two committees of Congress—Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee and the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries. In every instance it is shown positively that the Government would lose money if these services were discontinued. There seems to be an effort upon the part of private interests to bring about the discontinuance of these services so that they may get the business of transporting personnel and matériel for the United States Government. In the first place, I think this is an indispensable adjunct to our defense system, and, secondly, we have no doubt but that real economy will be effected by continuance of the services. According to the best information I can obtain upon this subject, at least $3,000,000 a year would be saved by continuing the services.

REORGANIZATION OF THE SHIPPING BOARD

We were very glad to effect the saving as proposed in section 314 of the bill in the reorganization of the Shipping Board. The total savings hereunder are approximately $2,500,000.

INCREASES IN CERTAIN CHARGES AND FEES

Sections 315, 316, and 317 carry increased fees to be charged by the Patent Office.

Section 318 provides for charges to be made for certain statistical, periodical services, and so forth, in the Department of Commerce.

Section 319 provides for certain charges to be rendered by the Bureau of Mines. Section 320 likewise sets up charges for services by the National Bureau of Standards. All told increased revenues from these sections total $725,000 per year.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

This is a very forward-looking feature in which eliminations, coordination, and consolidation of the executive and administrative branch of the Government is placed in the hands of the President, who will report his action to the Congress for its approval or disapproval.

I feel that it is fundamentally unsound to permit legislation through the failure of Congress to act within 60 calendar days after the Executive order of the Chief Executive is transmitted to it. I feel that Congress should never abdicate its constitutional power in this matter; that Congress should act by affirmation rather than by negation. The hope for correction of this oversight on the part of the committee must await the action of another body.

There should be untold millions saved by the proper action upon this subject with a real purpose to effectuate the savings by the elimination of useless offices, consolidation of many performing the same function, and coordinating the activities of our Government.

PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

This is a new governmental activity in which are coordinated the architectural, engineering, surveying, designing, drafting, construction, and purchasing activities relating to public works.

The engineers of the Army and the Navy are to be utilized in the capacities for which they are suited.

SINGLE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

In short, this title would create a new department, with the activities of the Department of War and Department of Navy transferred to it.

In no respects would there be any abolishing of the Army or Navy. There would be one Secretary of National Defense, a member of the President's Cabinet, and three Assistant Secretaries—one for War, one for the Navy, and one for aviation.

My service upon the Military Affairs Committee fully acquaints me with the failure of the Army and Navy to coordinate in their functioning for national defense. In time of war it is said that they get together, but in time of peace the love of power, jealousies, and animosities engender and cause them to diverge. However, during the war the Army and Navy were in competition for the purchase of the same steel. They wrangled over priority of shipment. For many years they have been haggling over the jurisdiction of the defense of a coast line, arguing whether the Air Corps of the Army or the Navy had the duty of coastal defense.

Theoretically we have a single head of the national defense in the President of the United States, but his duties are so multitudinous that he can not give it the personal attention, and with men of equal rank in his Cabinet, the national policy is not determined when these departments become involved. In fact, we see a very vivid picture of this inability to get together in the quarrel between the United States Military and United States Naval Academies. We have no football game between these governmental institutions because of this condition.

We are inclined to believe the report of the committee that fifty million to one hundred million dollars per annum could be saved by the merger of these two departments in the lessening of administrative expenses and saving in purchases.

We are also constrained to believe that there would be a material increase in the efficiency of the national defense service if there was a single driver at the wheel.

This section was stricken in the Committee of the Whole—to our surprise. This is permanent legislation—that is, it would be a permanent annual saving of fifty to one hundred million dollars—but we see the desires of President Hoover effectuated through his political emissary, his private secretary, Hon. Walter Newton, former Member of this body, who was on the floor of the House during the consideration of this item in conversation with many of its Members. Our Republican friends voted almost en bloc to strike the splendid economy from the bill.

VETERANS' PROVISIONS

Mr. Chairman, in addressing my remarks to veterans' legislation in the bill, I would say that I do it without heat and without feeling toward the members of the committee who have presented this amendment. Theirs has been a very arduous task, and I have been glad to follow them in every effort to save money for the Treasury up to this point.

There are many reasons why I can not subscribe to their advocacy of Title IX, which deals with veterans' legislation. It is an admitted fact that the consideration of this veterans' legislation was an ex parte proceeding. The members of the committee called in the Director of the Veterans' Administration, Gen. Frank T. Hines, and what happened in their collaboration with him does not appear in any printed hearing. My information upon these points was procured from the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS]. If I wanted to be harsh, I might say that these proceedings were in the nature of star chamber session.

Certainly veterans' legislation, or legislation of any character, ought not to be brought to the House under such circumstances. It is an American principle that a party in interest should have his day in court. The veterans did not have theirs in this proceeding. There was no opportunity to question even General Hines with reference to the meaning of certain well-chosen language affecting the veteran group.

Incidentally I was informed that several of the most important sections under this title had been rejected by the committee in calmer moments, but being brought up near midnight in the last session of the committee, when, perhaps, they were tired and worn to a "frazzle," they were written into the bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] referred to the provision of this title as being a "half-baked proposition." Mr. Chairman, that notion, in my judgment, is far from accurate. I have had several years of close scrutiny of veterans' legislation, their construction and interpretation by the Veterans' Bureau and the Veterans' Administration. And I say to you that the choice of language used in the title is that which is best calculated to put into effect the theories and the purposes of General Hines and the administration with reference to veterans' legislation. There are numbers of clauses and phrases contained in this title which have been interpreted and construed only as the Veterans' Administration and the Comptroller General can construe. The language used is legislatively technical. It has meanings all its own. I pause to inquire whether or not the language in Title IX did not come from the experts in the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. The gentleman asks about the language in Title IX?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Not entirely by any manner of means.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What about section 901?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Section 901 was very considerably liberalized as a result of certain activities in which I myself engaged.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I wonder what its condition was before this liberalization. Gentlemen of the committee, this section 901 and the other sections in Title IX of this bill are the written embodiments of the theory and philosophy which the gentleman who heads the Veterans' Administration, and the Presidents of the United States under whom he serves, have endeavored for several years next last past to cause to be written into law by the Congress of the United States. Again and again have the views been presented to the proper committee of Congress, but not until this special committee, without public hearings and all which that implies, brought this language to the attention of the House could it get so close to enactment into law.

Might I remind the gentlemen and leaders of this body that World War veterans' legislation has been under construction in Congress for a period of more than 13 years. The structure has been erected under the protests and veto of gentlemen who opposed it every step of the way. Now, in one stroke, they would destroy the structure.

The gentleman says that certain groups of veterans are excluded from the operation of section 901; that certain groups of veterans are excluded from the operation of the "need" clause, or as some would say "the pauper's clause." My friend, there is a principle of law that is particularly applicable to legislative construction, and that is when there are exceptions specifically set forth, all those not therein named are included in the provision of the bill.

If Congress desires to inaugurate the principle of financial worth before pension, compensation, disability allowance, or retirement pay be received, that policy should be adopted after orderly procedure with public hearings. I am unable to believe that this Government will depart upon a policy that if a single man makes $1,500 per year he can not receive governmental aid for compensable injuries. My friends, it might be that if such injuries had not been received in service to country the veteran would have been able to make several times that amount per annum.

I am inclined to the notion that the gentlemen who have opposed disabilities that are connected with the service within the presumptive period are endeavoring to change the congressional policy in respect of such disabilities. It is well known that General Hines opposed the arrested-tubercular amendment, and anyone who has had contact with the bureau in the administration of the tubercular act knows that there are hundreds of cases—probably running into the thousands—of veterans who have been adjudged by the bureau to be afflicted with active tuberculosis in years gone by who now, under regulations of to-day, are said never to have had active tuberculosis in the meaning of the law.

I have no apology to make for my defense of the presumptive diseases. Congress recognized that it was impossible for one to know when the tubercular bacilli touched the body of the veteran. No living man could tell when the strain of the war days caused something to snap in the nervous and mental system of the veteran that made the veteran mentally unwell. The N. P. cases—the neuropsychiatric cases—are progressive in their development.

It would be impossible in thousands of cases, tubercular in nature, and thousands of cases with nervous systems disturbed and mentality impaired, to trace that disability to service prior to the discharge of the soldier. And yet all of us who come in contact with cases of this kind know that they are just as much war casualties as men who suffer a patent physical disability.

It is a pleasure for me to support the Bulwinkle amendment, which strikes title 9 and then substitutes the section calling for a joint committee to make investigations of the operation of the laws and regulations relating to all veterans, with a view toward determining a national policy with respect to them. I trust that this motion of the distinguished veteran from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] will prevail.

I can not believe that this House will place their approval upon legislation such as is contained in title 9—legislation that comes with good intention upon the part of many gentlemen of this committee, but proposed legislation nevertheless that has not been considered in accordance with the rules and procedure of this great parliamentary body. This is permanent legislation, changing the repeated announced policy of Congress without opportunity of any veteran or any organization of veterans or any Member of this body other than members of the special committee to inquire into the meanings of the splendidly chiseled phrases contained therein and its effect upon the disabled soldiery of the World War.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, the country is not interested in quarrels that may be on in this House between the jurisdiction of various committees. The committee of which I am a member has had some of its jurisdiction taken from it. The Committee on Veterans' Legislation has had some of its jurisdiction taken from it. Practically every standing committee of this House has had its jurisdiction either directly or indirectly affected by the Economy Committee that the House set up. The thing in which the country is interested is not disputes of that character that may be going on here, but the country is interested in this Congress doing something looking toward concrete savings of money to the Treasury at once. [Applause.]

As I have listened to the debate on this bill for almost two weeks I have come to the conclusion that there are Members of this House who feel that when they go back to their constituency they can say, "I am for economy up to that point where it keeps money in the Treasury and then I am against it."

We have listened to the debate on this veterans' matter, where Members have found different excuses whereby they hope to go back and attempt to justify to their people their position in opposition to these savings. The country is not going to be concerned when we go back next summer with any rabble-raising appeal that may be registered against the Veterans' Administration in the handling of specific cases. The great mass of the veterans of this country know that the Veterans' Administration has been generous in its interpretation of laws and in the treatment of cases.

There is not a Member of this House but knows of cases where in all probability men have been given compensation that under the law it was very, very doubtful if they were entitled to it. So let us not confuse this issue by appealing to those people who may be opposed to the Veterans' Administration, by appealing to those who may be opposed to this particular method of procedure, and by appealing to those who may say, "We do not like the paupers' clause in this bill," when every man knows there is no paupers' clause in this bill. This should no more be called a paupers' clause than the clause granting exemptions in income taxes should be called a paupers' clause.

This proposal corrects inequalities. It removes, in large part, the damnable injustices the Congress has foisted upon the Veterans' Administration and the veterans' cause, and that is the emergency officers' law.

I say to the Members of this House who voted for that law—doing it at the behest of veterans' organizations—that in my judgment that law has done more to bring on this situation than everything else combined, because of the inequalities and the outrageous payments that have been made under it.

I want to talk to you as one who believes in veterans' legislation and in the fair treatment of veterans. Unless the men who are friendly to the veterans stop their constant demands for more money from the Treasury, there is going to be a reaction in the country against veterans' legislation that will make the thing that the Economy Committee proposed to do here look like a peanut stand.

We can not go on forever in demanding continued and enlarged payments out of the Federal Treasury in the name of veterans without justification and without end. [Applause.] It has followed every war, beginning with the Revolutionary War and following all the rest of them. The country has finally revolted against the veterans' insistent demand that the Treasury be opened. The backwash of that thing affects the veterans far worse than anything else does.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I appeal to the membership of the House to take this measure and study it in all fairness. There are certain parts of this proposal that I personally do not like. Had I been a member of the committee, there are certain things concerning veterans which probably I would have refused to report. However, they are matters of detail. The fundamental thing involved in this is the question of calling a halt and removing a part of the unjustifiable legislative provisions which the Congress has enacted at times for the veterans, removing in part some of the unjustifiable interpretations that have been put on acts of Congress, and bringing veterans' legislation back somewhere more nearly to what, in all conscience and good faith, all of us can defend.

I know how easy it is going to be for men to go home and say to their veterans, "Yes; I voted against that," and I know how easy it is going to be in this country for the time to come when men will be candidates for office and appeal for votes against those who have stood for veterans' legislation and appeal against the veterans and the veterans' cause.

When that time comes there will be need for the friends of the veterans to take heed lest we have all of the important things we have enacted over a series of years swept away. That is the greatest legislative danger the veterans now face.

I am appealing now to the membership of the House as one who during these last 10 years has voted for a number of veterans' proposals. I fought against some of them. I have been bitterly criticized here and condemned elsewhere for that which I have done, but I think the record justifies the course I have followed.

The veterans are entitled to fair treatment from the Government, and the veterans will get fair treatment from the Government if every bit of this proposal is put into law; but it will remove those things that irritate, arouse, and prejudice a community against the veterans.

I understand there are those in the House who hope to vote to eliminate all of this title except that clause which sets up a joint committee of the House and the Senate to study veterans' legislation. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the things with which I am largely in disagreement with the committee. In my judgment that proposal of the Economy Committee, to use a slang expression, is pure boloney. There is not a Member of the House but knows that under the parliamentary procedure a joint committee set up in the House and the Senate now will not begin to function until after the election, and they will report the 1st of February. If we can not in these times of stress put through a reasonable reduction in veterans' expenditures, this House will not pass any recommendation which that committee may report next February.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then every Member who knows anything about the Senate of the United States knows that no matter what this House would do in February of next year with veterans' proposals coming from such a joint committee, that any one Senator can block the passage of that sort of a bill in that one month.

So you will get nothing. You will throw a bunch of sop out to your people. The American people have knowledge enough of Congress to know that that is all it will be.

While there are some of these things that in detail I do not like, if we are going to remove any of the discriminations, any of the unjustifiable provisions in veterans' legislation, we are going to have to do it in this bill now as provided by this Economy Committee report or this Congress will do nothing with it and we will save no money. In my judgment the overwhelming mass of thinking veterans of the country will support the Congress in removing these provisions and in supporting the Economy Committee's proposal. [Applause.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I consider it a privilege to raise my voice for two minutes in the interest of my former comrades in arms.

I have previously announced that I can not vote for a direct appropriation at this time to pay the balance due on adjusted-service certificates, and I want to announce now just as vehemently that I shall not vote to take from veterans the benefits that they now have under existing laws. [Applause.]

I am going to vote for the Bulwinkle amendment to strike this title from the bill, and that is just half of it. If this title remains in the bill, I am going to vote against the bill on its final passage.

I am also in favor of the Bulwinkle recommendation that a congressional committee be appointed to investigate and to make recommendations with reference to amending and rewriting all our laws with reference to veterans. The provisions of the Bulwinkle amendment require, if I understand them correctly, that this congressional committee of seven Senators and seven Congressmen shall report its findings and the result of its investigations to the Congress on the first Monday in December next. If this is done, the Congress will have three months to consider these recommendations and to pass laws or amend laws that have already been passed that will take care of our veterans. It is not fair to repeal in two hours the laws that the American Legion and other organizations of veterans have labored diligently for 13 years to have created and placed on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the provisions of the report made on the bill under discussion in connection with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a great many times during the last decade or since the World War I have addressed this House on the matter of legislation affecting veterans and their dependents, and the thought occurred to me as I was sitting here before making these few remarks that this could easily be the last time I would ever discuss this sort of legislation before the House, because I am voluntarily leaving, and I want to pay a rather high tribute to some of the men who have worked with me on this legislation.

I have no personal feeling in any matter of legislation. It is ridiculous that any individual should have it. I have listened to the gentleman from North Carolina, Major BULWINKLE; the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CONNERY; the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BROWNING, men with wonderful service records, who have worked on the Veterans' Committee with me for years in the past, but most of whom have voluntarily left the committee for some reason or other. We can not all agree on any matter of legislation, and I can not always agree with them. I would want to call their attention to what I think would be unintentional inaccuracies in their statements, and I do this that the record may be kept straight in my last remarks on this sort of a bill.

There is no man, whether he comes from the mountains of North Carolina or any other place, who can not file his claim with the Veterans' Bureau to-day and secure his service connection if he has a service connection, and this through a bill which bears my name.

I can not agree with my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts that the Veterans' Bureau is entirely bad. There are just the same sort of folks there that there are in this House. Most of those attorneys and most of those doctors are the same sort of individuals that we are, and they have done a pretty good job of it by and large in carrying out the laws that have been enacted by the Congress. I think of Larry Lawler, of Massachusetts, when I see my distinguished friend from Massachusetts attacking the bureau. He is one of the great lawyers, and others of you who have people from your own States in the bureau, and most of you have, ought to recall the fact that they are a pretty decent set of people trying to do the best they can for their Government. They are like every other department of the Government. I am not here to defend the Veterans' Bureau or any other bureau, but when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] says there is a pay roll of $43,000,000 I can not help but call to his attention the fact that nearly all of that pay roll is paid to the doctors, the nurses, the orderlies, and other of the people in the hospitals where you have 30,000 patients to-day. It is not a personnel pay roll, it is a hospital pay roll voted by the Congress, and this is not the sort of argument that ought to be brought here to prejudice this case.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. The gentleman stated there are 30,000 in the hospitals. The gentleman would not mind a correction?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Never.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. There are 43,949.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That shows how much it has grown.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. That is the total annual load.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It happens that this year we have had practically no meetings of the Veterans' Committee, in spite of the protests made in the past, and I have not kept up with the figures.

In these remarks I will at this point insert the veterans' provisions of report No. 1126 of H. R. 11597, and I want to call attention to them. There is not one provision in the Economy Committee measures that ought not to be enacted into law, and fairly and justifiably so.

TITLE IX

PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO VETERANS

The following was submitted by the Veterans' Administration, and incorporated in this report.

The subject of benefits provided for veterans of all wars and military expeditions has been investigated by your committee, and it has been found that as of March 31, 1932, the disbursement for all purposes, including loans made to veterans of the World War secured by their adjusted-compensation certificates, approximated $16,512,000,000. It has also been estimated that these disbursements as of the close of the fiscal year 1942 will approximate $28,389,599,000, which increase would indicate an average disbursement of $1,200,000,000 yearly during the next 10 years.

The following itemization indicates the approximated disbursements as of March 31, 1932, for direct monetary benefits paid to the veteran or his dependents, subdivided by wars:

War of the Revolution	$70,000,000
War of 1812	46,569,000
War with Mexico	60,525,000
Indian wars	52,871,000
Civil War	7,585,201,000
War with Spain	661,646,000
Regular establishments	102,160,000
World War	5,390,039,000

The disbursements shown under the caption of World War do not include $953,942,000 paid from premiums on insurance and allotments made by veterans, but do include loans outstanding secured by adjusted-service certificates.

In view of the amounts included and the inequalities noted in the laws regulating the benefits of the several wars, your committee felt that the following amendments explained herein should be immediately adopted and a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives should be appointed to go further into the question of veterans' relief and report back to the next Congress a definite national program, having in mind as far as possible equal treatment to all veterans and their dependents consistent with the financial ability of the Government to bear the expense.

Section 901 of the bill, subject to certain exceptions enumerated below, prohibits the payment or granting of allowance, compensation, retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, pension, hospitalization, or domiciliary care administered by the Veterans' Administration to any person whose net income, as defined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, is $1,500 or more if single or $3,500 or more if married, with $400 additional for each dependent, for the year preceding the date of enactment of this act or the filing of application for benefits, whichever is later. This section also provides that annually a person must show to the satisfaction of the administrator that his net income was below the amount specified in order to be entitled to continue to receive benefits which may have been awarded. Further, it is provided that if a person's income status changes during the year upon submission of proof showing reduction of income below the specified figures when prorated monthly the administrator may as of the date of administrative determination allow such benefits as may otherwise be authorized. In determining income, however, receipt of Government insurance, allowance, compensation, retired pay, or pension will not be considered.

The persons who are exempted from the above explained provisions and who will receive benefits notwithstanding the language of this section are as follows:

1. Those persons who have attained the age of 65 years.

2. Those persons who served in the active military or naval forces and actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service. To come within this exception the veteran must show some causative factor such as an injury or extreme exposure arising out of and in the course of the performance of his duty and directly resulting from such performance of duty.

3. Those persons who are temporarily totally disabled or permanently and totally disabled as a result of disease or injury acquired in or aggravated by active military or naval service. To come within this exemption the veteran need only show entitlement to service connection for his disability under the general law as governing payment of compensation or pension and be actually totally disabled.

4. All widows and dependents entitled to compensation or pension on account of the death of any person who served in the active military or naval service.

5. Those persons who were actually engaged in combat with the enemy, who served in a zone of hostilities or who were actually under fire.

Realizing that this section is a departure from the general policy of the Government in dealing with veterans and their dependents which has heretofore been in existence, your committee very carefully studied the question of whether such a provision as this should be adopted. It is not felt, however, that one who did not come within one of the exceptions and whose income is above the amount specified in the section is in need of any assistance from the Government. Also having in mind the tremendous drain on the Treasury, resulting from expenditures on behalf of veterans, which has amounted up to the present time to approximately $15,000,000,000 and which will continue to require annually in the future appropriations of approximately $1,000,000,000 or more, and the additional needs, which undoubtedly will be presented on behalf of veterans and their dependents in the future increasing these expenditures, it was felt only fair that any person whose income was equal to or above the amount specified should be excluded from benefits.

It is estimated that this section will result in the removal from the rolls of some 28,300 persons; and while this number may seem somewhat high when it is considered that there are over a million persons receiving benefits, it will be seen that the effect on the total number of persons receiving benefits is slight. The savings estimated as the result of enactment of this section will be approximately $13,315,000 annually.

Section 902 of the bill amends section 202, subdivision 7, of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the pension statutes, the laws governing the granting of domiciliary care by the Veterans' Administration and the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, so as to provide that as of the first day of the third calendar month following the date of this act any single person in a United States soldiers' home, National or State soldiers' home, St. Elizabeths Hospital, or Veterans' Administration hospital, or who is maintained in an institution by the Veterans' Administration for a period of 30 days or more, the compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, shall not exceed $20 per month so long as he shall thereafter continue in the institution. If the person has a wife, child or children, or dependent parent or parents otherwise eligible, the $20 per month is allowed to the veteran while in the institution and the difference between the $20 and the amount the veteran would otherwise be entitled to, were it not for the adoption of this amendment, will be paid to the wife, child or children, or dependent parent or parents, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the administrator. It will thus be seen that the veteran with dependents will not be adversely affected by this amendment, but in so far as he personally is concerned he will only receive the amount provided for every veteran in these institutions, namely, $20 per month, and the remainder of his compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay, if any, will be paid to his dependents.

This section also extends the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which permits the administrator, in his discretion, to pay compensation due an incompetent veteran, to the chief officer of an institution, to pensions, allowance, and retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928. It also extends the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which prohibits payment of compensation to the estate of any mentally incompetent veteran without dependents, who is in an institution, to $3,000, to pensions allowance and retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928. Provision is made that in the event the veteran recovers and is discharged from the institution, payment will be made to him of any amount held in trust for the veteran by the United States or any chief officer of an institution. This provision modifies the existing provision of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, and extends the modified provision to pensions allowance and retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, so that there will not be paid to the veteran in the event of his recovery, the difference between the reduced rate and the rate which would otherwise be payable if the reduction was not effective, but provides that only so much money as is in the hands of either the chief officer of an institution or in the Treasury of the United States shall be paid.

The section further amends existing law so that where a mentally incompetent person without dependents requires institutional care, and his guardian or other person charged with his custody refuses to accept or permit the continuance of the institutional care offered or approved by the administrator, the $20 rate will apply so long as the need continues, except that approved treatment in a recognized private institution may be made the basis for a waiver of reduction by the administrator.

Your committee, after studying this matter, feels that this section is necessary in order to equalize payments to veterans maintained by the Government in hospitals and homes, as well as to avoid the doubling of benefits. At the present time, if a Civil War veteran is admitted to a national home, his pension is reduced by $25; if a Spanish-American War veteran is admitted to a national home, his pension is reduced to $50; if a World War veteran is admitted to a national home, there is no reduction in compensation or disability allowance. If either of the first two groups is admitted to a Veterans' Administration hospital as a patient under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, no change in rate is effected. If a World War veteran is admitted to a hospital under this latter act, for treatment of a service-connected disability, his compensation is automatically increased to $80 per month. This is an outstanding example of some of the existing inequalities in laws conferring veterans' relief, and results in dissatisfaction as between the different groups of veterans, and in certain instances makes it attractive for the veteran to remain in the hospital or home, although he may be well able to leave. If a man is receiving room, board, and hospital or home treatment from the Government without cost, he should not expect to receive the same amount of monetary benefits as his brother ex-service man who is not receiving such benefits. It should especially be noted that this section does not reduce the amount of compensation payable if the veteran has a wife, child, or children, or dependent parent or parents.

The provision with reference to payment of monetary benefits to incompetent veterans, to chief officers of institutions, is to permit of the payment of pension allowance or retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, to chief officers of Veterans' Administration institutions, as is now done in connection with compensation, so as to avoid the necessity for the appointment of a guardian where such guardians are otherwise not required.

The $3,000 limitation on estates of veterans without dependents is to prohibit the building of large estates, which would, upon the death of the veteran, either be distributed to distant relatives who have no right to expect any particular relief from the Federal Government, or would escheat to the States of which the veterans were residents. Such a provision was placed in the World War veterans' act July 3, 1930, when it was pointed out that estates of such veterans amounted to as high as $15,000 and $18,000. Your committee felt that this provision now in the law pertaining to compensation should be extended to these other benefits. The amendment which provides for the reduction to $20 a month where a mentally incompetent veteran without dependents requires institutional care and his guardian or other person in charge of his custody refuses to accept or permit the continuance of the institutional care offered or approved, was necessary because it has been found by experience that many guardians were removing their wards from Government institutions in order to avoid the reduction in rate, even though such move might be detrimental to the best interest of the ward. Exception is made in those cases where the veteran is maintained in a recognized reputable private institution with the approval of the administrator.

It is estimated that this section will affect 9,920 persons, at a saving of approximately $5,370,000.

Section 903: This section of the bill provides that payment of retirement pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, will not be authorized unless the person (a) served as a member of the Military or Naval Establishment between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, or (b) served a period of 90 days or more between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as a result and directly attributable to service subsequent to November 11, 1918, and prior to July 3, 1921.

The language used is intended to permit the establishment of aggravation where such aggravation directly results from a causative factor as above indicated and where the percentage of disability due to aggravation is 30 per cent or more. Under this section those cases will be excluded where the disease or injury did not result from a causative factor arising out of and in the course of active military or naval duty within the periods specified. Also there will be excluded under this amendment the cases of those officers who have relied for service connection under the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, on the presumption of soundness or presumption of service connection contained in the first and second provisos of section 200 of that act, or the regulations issued by the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration in accordance with such act which deem that certain chronic constitutional or analogous diseases existing within a year of discharge are service connected.

It is further provided that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall review all claims heretofore filed under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, and remove or transfer from the rolls of retired emergency officers the names of those officers who are not found to be entitled under the provisions of this amendment. The payment of retired pay in the case of any officer whose name is removed from the rolls or transferred will cease on and after the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which certification or transfer is made, as the case may be. The name of each officer removed from the rolls of those entitled to emergency officers' retirement pay will be transferred to the compensation rolls of the Veterans' Administration notwithstanding that no previous application for compensation has been made if, under existing law, at time of removal or transfer, they are otherwise entitled to benefits.

This review of claims will be final except for one reconsideration and no rerating or review will thereafter be authorized in such claims, and after the expiration of one year following the enactment of this bill, no review, appeal, or consideration will be authorized in connection with any claim for emergency officers' retirement upon which a decision has at any time been rendered by the administration. The purpose of this amendment is to fix an ending date for the adjudication of this class of claims.

When the act of May 24, 1928, was enacted into law, your committee believed that it was generally understood that the class of officers to be affected were those who had actually incurred their disabilities in line of duty as the result of some causative factor arising out of and in the course of the performance of duty in the active military or naval service. In the light of certain rulings by the Attorney General, however, several thousands of ex-officers have been paid emergency officers' retirement pay, although they have had to rely for service connection for their disabilities on certain liberal presumptions provided for compensation purposes in the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended. As a matter of fact, it is known that many of these officers either had their disabilities when they entered the service or acquired them subsequently, but, under the conclusive presumption provisions of the law, they are presumed to have acquired them in the service. Further, there are many officers who acquired their disabilities as result of disease which arose in point of time with service, but which disease was not in any way brought on by any military or naval duty which they performed. This amendment will restrict the eligibility within reasonable limitations and at the same time is believed to be sufficiently liberal to protect the rights of those men whose disabilities are directly the result of the performance of duty in the active military or naval service.

Your committee placed a time limitation on adjudications under the emergency officers' retirement act for the reason that it is believed that any officer who has a valid claim should at least be able to secure his evidence and present same to the administration in time for final action to be taken within one year from date of passage of this amendment. It must be understood that these benefits are large in amounts and as they are payable from date of application, as time goes on the amounts will increase to proportions which will make them sufficiently attractive to possibly result in frauds on the Government. It is not intended to in any way reflect on any emergency officer individually or on the emergency officers as a class by this statement, but it must be realized that benefits which amount to ten, fifteen, or twenty thousands of dollars in retroactive payments certainly might attract unscrupulous persons in an effort to prove eligibility.

No person will be entitled to benefits under this act except he shall have made valid application under the provisions of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928.

It is estimated that this section will result in the removal from the rolls of some 3,200 officers retired with pay. The savings which will result after deducting the amount of disability compensation which such officers may be entitled to in lieu of the retirement pay will be approximately $3,386,000 annually.

Section 904: This section of the bill amends section 203 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, by striking from the third sentence thereof the following language, "and also a per diem allowance of $2.65 per day for the period of travel and observation."

Under the present law World War veterans who report for examination in connection with claims for compensation or observation are allowed $2.65 per day in addition to their travel and other expenses as reimbursement for loss of wages. No such provision is made for veterans of other wars or for veterans of the World War in connection with claims for disability allowance. As a result of the adoption of this amendment, the $2.65 per day allowance will be discontinued.

Your committee believed that this allowance offers little relief in individual cases, and yet in the aggregate amounts to considerable. It is believed also that with the widespread agencies of the Veterans' Administration for medical examinations, the time now consumed has been reduced to a minimum and that there should not be any material loss of wages as a result of reporting for examination. As a matter of fact, it is understood in many cases men are permitted to report for examination by their employers without any loss of wages. Further, your committee felt that if this benefit for World War veterans was continued, veterans of other wars would demand equal treatment. It has also been ascertained that many World War veterans have been applying for such benefits in order to get the $2.65 per day, and then after reporting at the regional office or hospital for examination have filled out an application for disability allowance, thus gaining a benefit which was never intended for that class of veterans.

As above stated, in view of the slight relief afforded by this provision of law and the fact that in the aggregate it now costs considerable, and if extended to all veterans would run into several millions of dollars annually, the committee felt the amendment should be adopted.

It is estimated that this section will affect 31,000 persons at a saving of approximately $300,000. However, the potential possibility of the extension of this benefit by additional amendments to the law or the subterfuge above referred to undoubtedly will avoid tremendous additional payments which would otherwise be required.

Section 905: This section amends section 205 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, so as to prohibit awards or increased allowance, compensation, or pension resulting from review for a period of six months prior to the date of administrative determination, except in the cases of those persons who actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty, and as the result of and directly attributable to combat with the enemy during war service in the active military or naval forces. The limitation will apply in those cases where the Veterans' Administration on its own motion makes the review, or where after the time limit for appeal has expired the veteran applies for review of his claim.

Your committee, after careful consideration of data presented relative to the great number of retroactive awards of benefits in large amounts to veterans of the World War and other wars, came to the conclusion that the expenditures resulting from such awards were out of all proportion to the needs of disabled veterans. It is fully realized that as a result of the enactment of this amendment certain veterans will not receive benefits to which they have been entitled over a long period of time. However, your committee felt that the element of judgment which enters into determining the degree of disability of a veteran and the latitude allowed in establishing ratings permitted changes in prior determinations on mere difference of opinion, and that while such actions should be permitted in fairness to the veterans concerned, some limitation should be placed upon the retroactive payments resulting from such changes in determinations.

Your committee drafted this section in such manner that awards of pension, compensation, and allowance may be retroactively adjusted for periods of six months, and that claims which had been disallowed for long periods of time might be allowed, but that retroactive payments under such allowances should only go back six months from date of determination. If the veteran has appealed his case and not permitted the same to lie dormant for failure to diligently prosecute the same, he is amply protected. Exception was made in those cases where the injury or disease was the result of actual combat with the enemy, as it was not felt that any limitation on retroactive payments or otherwise should be placed on such claims.

The section also amends the act approved December 21, 1893, which, as construed by the former Pension Bureau and the Attorney General, makes it impossible for the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to discontinue pension payments once commenced without notifying the pensioner of the reason for discontinuance and giving him or her an opportunity to be heard in the matter, notwithstanding that fraud may have been committed in connection with the securing of such pension. While the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is studying this precedent to determine whether it should be continued, in view of the fact that it has been in effect for a long period of time with the approval of the Attorney General, it would undoubtedly be very difficult for the administrator to adopt a different view, if such would be justified under the statute. It is, therefore, felt by your committee that the matter should be covered by legislation, for the reason that such legislation will result in economy as well as uniformity.

Under this section of the bill all veterans and their dependents will be treated alike; that is, compensation, pension, or allowance will be continued to the first day of the third calendar month following a determination that the veteran or other person is no longer entitled to the benefit, except in cases of fraud, when the discontinuance will be immediate. Your committee felt that the 3-month period allowed is sufficient to permit of adjustment by those who would be found no longer entitled, and also felt that in fraud cases payment should be immediately discontinued.

It is estimated the enactment of this section will adversely affect 35,000 persons at an estimated savings of $13,694,000 annually.

Section 906: This section of the bill amends the first paragraph of section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, so as to provide that where no active military or naval service was rendered between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, no compensation shall be payable for disability or death resulting from injury suffered or disease contracted during the active service in an enlistment entered into after November 11, 1918. The names of such persons in receipt of compensation who by reason of the enactment of this amendment will no longer be entitled to compensation are to be transferred to the general pension rolls of the Regular Establishment and shall be paid pension in accordance with the rates provided for disabilities under such laws. The transfer is not to take effect until the expiration of six months following the enactment of the amendment. The section also provides that as to those persons not now on the rolls, but who may have disabilities acquired in the service subsequent to November 11, 1918, that their rights will be determined under the general pension laws for the Regular Establishment.

Your committee believes that the awarding of compensation for disability or death due to service during the World War should be restricted to those who performed active military or naval service between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918. Unless active military or naval service was performed between those dates the soldier can not be classed as a veteran of the World War and should not be treated on a parity with veterans of wars. Those who enlisted after the armistice entered the Regular Establishment as peace-time soldiers and should be placed on a parity in so far as pensions are concerned with other peace-time soldiers. It is known that many men entered the military service after the armistice for the sole purpose of a trip to the Rhine, and it was not felt that the Government should continue to compensate these men on the same basis as World War veterans who served during hostilities.

The amendment has been so drawn as to avoid injustice, and under the same those men now drawing compensation will be transferred automatically to the pension rolls under the general pension laws relating to the soldiers injured while in the Regular Establishment and paid pensions in accordance with their disability. As a matter of fact this group of men is being given preference for the reason that it will not be required that they prove service origin of their disabilities in accordance with the pension statutes, which are more strict with reference to service connection than the statutes pertaining to compensation for World War veterans.

It is estimated that this section will adversely affect 13,100 persons, at a saving of approximately $3,649,000.

Section 907: This section amends section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, so as to restrict veterans, in connection with suits in court, to the use of testimony of persons who have presented statements or evidence to the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration prior to the denial of the claim sued upon, except that if in a preliminary proceeding, prior to the trial of the cause sued upon, it is shown by the plaintiff, to the satisfaction of the court, that relevant and material testimony was available, from a person whose statement has not been previously submitted to the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration, the court may stay the proceedings until the evidence is considered by the Veterans' Administration. If the case is allowed by the administrator, the suit will be dismissed, thus saving the veteran attorneys' fees. If the case is disallowed by the administrator, it is provided that the case may then be tried by the court, and such person may be a witness in the case. It is not intended by this amendment to restrict the testimony of any person to the statement which has been filed with the Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration. It is provided that the amendment will apply to suits now pending against the United States under the war risk insurance act, as amended, or the World War veterans' act, as amended.

Your committee believes that this amendment will result in a more just disposition of suits and will insure consideration by the Veterans' Administration of evidence which should be considered by the Veterans' Administration before suit is instituted. In other words, your committee believes that the veteran should be required to submit to the administrative agency, set up for adjudicating these claims, all evidence which is available to him before he is permitted to institute suit and that if he does not do this he should not be permitted to bring in any evidence which the Veterans' Administration has never had an opportunity to act upon. Under the existing law it would be possible for an unscrupulous attorney to withhold evidence from the Veterans' Administration to avoid payment of the claim by the Veterans' Administration in order that suit might be instituted so that attorneys' fees could be collected. It was not felt that such a condition should be permitted to exist. Also it must be remembered that the majority of the suits pending are based upon contracts which lapsed shortly following the soldiers' discharge from the service in 1919. It is, therefore, necessary for the Government, unless it is at least advised of the witnesses the plaintiff intends to use in proving his case, to make an investigation of the industrial activities of the veteran, as well as to try to ascertain his true physical condition over a period of 10 or 12 years. The difficulties confronting the Government can readily be seen.

While the savings as a result of the enactment of this amendment can not be accurately estimated, it is believed that many suits without merit as the result of the passage of this amendment will be dismissed and that there will undoubtedly be a saving of many millions of dollars to the Government.

Section 908: This section of the bill will repeal sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, so that no additional payments shall be made under such sections or the third proviso of section 408 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, except to those persons actually receiving payments on the date of the enactment of the bill, or in those claims where prior to the date of enactment of the bill it has been determined by the Veterans' Administration that all or part of the insurance is payable, and the interested person or persons entitled thereto have been informed of such determination. It is also provided that where a beneficiary receiving insurance payments under these sections dies, that payment of the remaining unpaid installments may be made in such cases to a surviving widow, child or children, dependent mother, or dependent father of the veteran, in the order of perference specified in the amendment.

There is a further proviso that the section shall not be construed to affect any claims wherein the insured actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, as a result of and directly attributable to actual combat with the enemy during war service, and as a result of such disease or injury dies or has died, or becomes or has become permanently and totally disabled, with the limitation that payment in such cases may only be made to the veteran or his widow, child or children, dependent mother or dependent father.

These two sections of the law—i. e., sections 305 and 309—provide that if an insured, at date of lapse of the insurance, was suffering with a compensable disability and at date of permanent total disability or death is entitled to uncollected compensation and/or the $60 bonus, that such uncollected money shall be applied to cover the unpaid premiums, and to the extent that such money covers said premiums, so much of the insurance will be deemed not to have lapsed. For example, if the unpaid compensation or bonus is sufficient to pay the unpaid premium on $1,000 insurance, or $2,000 insurance, etc., that much of the insurance is deemed not to have lapsed. If the amount is sufficient to meet all unpaid premiums, the entire $10,000 is deemed not to have lapsed.

Upon inquiry your committee found that this insurance in many cases is going to the estates of deceased veterans, and is being distributed to distant relatives, who certainly have no right to expect or demand any special consideration from the Government. Further, as a result of certain recent circuit courts of appeal rulings, suit may be instituted to prove permanent and total disability at a time when uncollected compensation was due, even though such uncollected compensation became payable many years after lapse of insurance. This situation will permit the revival of insurance which had been permitted to lapse long before permanent and total disability existed. The inequity of the present law, therefore, is apparent and this section is designed to correct it.

In connection with this amendment, consideration was given to the fact that approximately 9,000 suits are now pending and many thousand additional ones are in the offing, as a result of applications for disagreement having been filed. Your committee felt that although this benefit which is in addition to disability compensation might have been necessary legislation at the time it was enacted, the purposes for which it was enacted have passed. Exceptions have been made to care for those cases of men injured in combat with the enemy, and to protect the interest of widows, children, and dependent parents where payments are now being made.

This section will adversely affect 2,800 people, and will result in a saving of approximately $9,000,000 annually.

Section 909: This section of the bill amends section 500 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, so as to limit the awarding of attorneys' fees by the courts to 10 per cent of the amount of money found under the judgment or decree and to be paid by the Veterans' Administration out of the payment made under the judgment or decree. The effect of this amendment will be to deny to attorneys any part of installments of insurance accruing after judgment has been entered.

Your committee has carefully considered the question of attorneys' fees in connection with suits under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended. It is felt, in view of the fact that accrued installments due to date average approximately $7,000, that 10 per cent of this amount as a maximum is sufficient to amply pay attorneys for the work which they may do in connection with these suits. It was not felt by your committee that future installments payable to veterans or their dependents should be subject to deduction for attorneys' fees.

While no savings will result from this amendment, in so far as the Government is concerned, your committee can not too strongly recommend its enactment.

The total number of persons affected by sections 901 to 909 of this title will be 123,320, and the total savings resulting will be $48,714,000.

Section 910: This section authorizes the appointment of a joint congressional committee, three members of which are to be appointed by the President of the Senate and three members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to investigate and inquire into the question of relief of veterans and their dependents.

Your committee in connection with the study made of this bill had pointed out to it many inequalities in existing law, and it was the sense of the committee that a joint committee of Congress should go carefully into the question of veterans' relief, with the idea in mind of reporting to the next Congress at the time specified, February 1, 1933, a coordinated national program on veterans' relief, which would, so far as possible, provide equality of treatment to veterans and their dependents consistent with the financial ability of the Government to bear the expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The first provision, section 901, it is true, prevents some hospitalization, but it does not prevent hospitalization of any single man who has an income less than $1,500 a year or any married man with $3,500 a year. There is no reason why people who have money and happen to be non-service-connected veterans should occupy these beds, when there can only be a certain small number occupy them. We can not have beds enough for 4,000,000 men at once and there is no reason the well-to-do should occupy the beds and keep the poor boys out of the hospital. If there is such a thing as influence, and we know there is influence, that influence is used for men of wealth and standing in the community. It is not used for the hill billy from the South or any poor man. The economy in that provision is for the common, everyday man in your district.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Going back eight years to the time when the gentleman was chairman of the Veterans' Committee, there was authorization that in veterans with service-connected disability going to the hospital, preference should be given to those who needed it financially.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The gentleman is correct, but that is stricken from the bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It still is the law that preference is to be given to those who apply for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. There is no limit as to the veteran's income. Now, gentlemen, I will not be able to discuss all the provisions of this title. Here is section 902, which provides that a man who enters a hospital will have his pay cut to $20 a month. There is relief and economy in that. The man who gets in a hospital will cost the Government $130 a month to keep him there. If he has a wife or children, $20 a month is allowed him, and the difference between the $20 and the amount he would otherwise be entitled to will be paid to his wife or children or dependents.

Now, I am going to refer to the disabled emergency officers' act. Members opposing this title in the bill are declaring in favor of the emergency officers' act, the law that they have ranted about on the floor of the House for the last two or three years. I would not want to see the emergency officers' act entirely eliminated, because some of them are combat casualties. But the very men that oppose it by declaring against Title X have declared that they are now in favor of that bill.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I am sorry I have not the time. I can not yield. I recognize that the gentleman from Georgia has a fine service record. He is courageous and can always take care of himself. I have a great admiration for the gentleman, but owing to the brief time, I can not yield.

There is no reason in the world that service men can not go to the regional officers in their home States at Government expense without this $2.65 per day.

They object because of the retroactive-payments clause. The object of legislation for a service man is not to pay him a large amount of money, $6,000 or $7,000, at one time. The object of it is to take care of him during the rest of his life, and I brought in the bill that made that possible.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I can not yield any more. I can not even finish the provisions of this bill in the time that I have.

There is not a reason in the world that this retroactive pay should not be abolished. It will save that much more money to spread out over a greater number of men; and as I was about to say when interrupted, it is entirely possible that where these great retroactive payments are involved, Government servants would be more inclined to hold on the side of the Government than they would otherwise. If those are prohibited, I think the law could be liberalized to a great degree.

Here is another thing that is in this bill. It provides that the man who enlisted after November 11, 1918, go onto the Regular Army pension roll, where, in my judgment, he belongs. So far as I knew, the war was over on November 11, 1918. It is true that the official end of the war did not come until July 2, 1921. At least 8 per cent of this compensation being paid is being paid to men who enlisted after the war was over—enlisted to get a nice ride to Coblenz and have a good time. They were patriotic; they were sorry that they could not get into the war; many were too young; but why should the man who enlisted on the 1st of January, 1921, get just as much as the man who lost his arm at Chateau Thierry in 1918? The question answers itself. Those of you who will not vote with the committee will have voted that you think that man who enlisted in 1921 is entitled to the same treatment as the one who enlisted in 1917, the first day of the war. You may just as well remember that when this record is made up. They will not be injured; they will go back on the same Regular Army or Navy or Marine Corps pension roll that everyone who enlisted prior to the World War or after the World War is now carried on. That is section 906.

Section 907 has had a great deal of objection made to it. Hardly a Member of the House who has not received a communication from some attorney saying the constitutional rights of the men will be taken away. I am tired of all this bunk about Government insurance that has been used on the floor of the House for the last five or six years. The war-risk insurance has cost the Government about $1,350,000,000 more than the soldiers paid for it, and yet they say, "Oh, they took the money away from us." It has come back to them a thousandfold. Who are writing these letters? It is a bunch of attorneys who have been gouging the service men. We passed a law—and it was my law, because of the Benny Schwartz case—that provided that if a man had anything coming from the Government—a $60 bonus or anything else—it could be used to revive his insurance, and I thought that was fair; and now to-day one lawyer has 1,700 of these cases that he has gathered together, and he gets $1,000 out of each one if he wins, and in addition gets 10 per cent of the $57.50 that the veteran gets for the balance of the 20 years. Why does he get it? Because he will not present the soldier's claim to the Veterans' Bureau. He presents his claim to the Veterans' Bureau, it is true—this bunch of crooked lawyers—but he does not present any evidence, and the Veterans' Bureau has to turn it down, as we would or you would or as a court would, because no evidence is presented. He does not present his evidence, and there is a disagreement, and then he can sue the Government and get his fee. This law does not injure the man in any way; it only provides that when any attorney brings the case to a court—if he does—and the judge finds out that the evidence was not presented to the lower court—namely, the Veterans' Bureau—that the case shall be remanded back to the lower court, and that court will have a chance to consider the evidence. There never should be a time when a higher court can reverse the verdict of a lower court unless the lower court has had the evidence before it. That is good sense and it is good law; and if you are not with the committee, you are against that provision. You are supporting one man who has 1,700 of these cases and others that have hundreds of cases. Most of them will be in the record when this record is all made up. So much for section 907.

Section 908 stops the revival of Government insurance to a great degree; and I think it should stop it. When we passed that war risk act in 1917, I voted for it; and I see Members of this House before me now who voted for it, knowing when they voted for it that they could not expect that some man who had not paid his insurance premiums for 12 years could revive his insurance because the Government owed him 12 years ago a few dollars. Just how long would the Prudential or Equitable or the New York Life or any other of these great companies—and I am not trying to distinguish among them, because they are all great—last if every time somebody dropped a policy and did not pay the premium he could come in 12 years after he had paid a cent and revive it on a pretext such as is being done here? It is absurd; and if you do not support this committee, you are in favor of that practice. This insurance has already cost the Government $1,300,000,000, and it will cost it $3,000,000,000 if you do not vote with the committee.

The last section is a matter of limitation of attorneys' fees. Attorneys' fees ought to be limited. There never was such a purging of Government in the world as was done after the War between the States, when the pension attorney grafts were exposed. There have been no bills brought out of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation that have allowed for any legal fees except this one which could not be foreseen, and which we are trying to eliminate to-day.

Certain Members have objected because they were not consulted in connection with framing this bill. The chairman of the Veterans' Committee has wept briny tears because he was not consulted. Others have said they were not consulted. I was not consulted about it. If this Economy Committee intended to bring out any bill that would create economy, they have been compelled to put on roller skates and skate around among the 435 Members of this House, half of whom would have talked them to death in any event if the committee stopped to talk. It could not be done. They did not do it. It is not a question of who was or was not consulted. It is a question of whether or not the legislation is right. It is a question of whether or not it does justice to the Government and justice to the service men. Everyone concedes the honesty of the members of this committee. There is no more honest or capable man in this House than the chairman of this Economy Committee [applause], with whom I have seldom voted and with whom I often disagree, but whose record and ability I know. The same is true of every member of that committee. It is not a question of who was consulted. It is a question whether or not we are going to see that decent and fair veterans' legislation is to be enacted for the benefit of the veterans. [Applause.]

I wish the Members would not forget that after the pension frauds Grover Cleveland was elected on the slogan of "Purge the pension roll." It was purged. There will not be one man from the World War on the rolls of the United States within one year whose name will not be in his home town paper, with date of his enlistment and with a record of everything that was done, including everything that affects him, because this move for fair legislation comes from the grass roots. It is the people who are paying taxes that are objecting to some of the things that have been done. It was easy to do anything when we had the money. We had all the money in the world up to 1929. To-day the Government does not have the money. Who should be kept from the compensation and pension rolls? In my judgment the ones mentioned in this bill, who enlisted after 1918, who are receiving the per diem, who are not entitled to the retroactive pay, who are getting insurance payments to which they are not entitled. That will save the service man from himself.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I can not yield.

As I have said, this is an issue of saving the service man from himself more than anything else. Do not forget there are 4,200,000 of them living. There are 3,000,000 who are not drawing anything from the Government, and it is those men that you do not hear from. There are 43,000 in the hospitals. When I checked up last year, I found there was one man who had written 25 letters a day for five weeks to Members of Congress. Those are the letters you are getting, perhaps.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I shall not ask for a roll call on this bill, because I am going to defend Congress a minute. There has never been so much propaganda in the world as is coming in in the last few days from every known person. Everybody wants to have taxes reduced. Every industry, from the jewelers to the brewers, want taxes reduced and nobody wants to have any appropriations reduced. There is not a Member of Congress to-day who is not two weeks behind with his mail because of propaganda. I will not ask for a roll call, to turn loose a lot of nit-wits on either side on a particular issue like this, that involves the great fundamentals of Government, and yet I think there ought to be one, and when there is one, or when the record is all made up and the intelligent service man reads the report I have inserted, it will appeal to his plain, common-sense judgment. It is the man who actually saw service who will read the report. This report will be sifted through the local posts of all the different organizations. When that is done you need not fear to support the report of this decent, clean, honest committee of this House, composed of both Republicans and Democrats, who are willing to take their political lives in their hands and bring in a report which they thought was for the best interest of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to myself one-half minute.

The gentleman from South Dakota should have known. He had every opportunity to know that a modification or the repeal of the emergency officers' act is being considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. It has been there for some time, and the gentleman should know that before making the statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. And it will be there for some time, too.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BEAM] the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one and one-half minutes.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time which I have it will be impossible for me to advance any arguments. I just want to make this observation in conclusion, that since the commencement of this Congress the word "economy" has become a platitude. This great Government of ours a few years ago loaned money freely to England, France, Germany, and Italy, fed the world, if you please, fed the starving Belgians, sent wheat to Russia and to China, and it is a sad commentary upon the American Government that in order to reduce expenditures, in order to limit payments, if you please, we must sacrifice the men who defended this country in its hour of need and under the hue and cry of economy take from them the advantages of well-earned and well-deserved legislation. It is a sorry day when our Government should place this economy and efficiency measure upon the veterans and soldiers of the World War who defended its honor and integrity and brought back to our land added laurels and higher ideals for the greatness of our American institutions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, in a certain sense it is a painful and distasteful task which confronts me here to-day. It is painful because I am an ex-service man, because ex-service men are my friends, because I served with them in this country and overseas. It is painful because I feel it is my duty to oppose certain of the things which the ex-service men's organizations are advocating. And here may I interpolate that while this particular title was being considered by the Economy Committee I was in constant touch, in continuous conferences almost, with the leaders of the ex-service men's organizations in Washington. I want the Members of the committee to know that Mr. Watson Miller, of the American Legion; Mr. Eddie Lewis, of the American Legion; Mr. John Thomas Taylor, of the American Legion; and Mr. Kirby, of the Disabled American Veterans, do not advocate Title IX as it is written. And so I say it is painful for that reason, as well as for others, for me to here advocate it this afternoon; and it is painful because I have a bond of sympathy with all ex-service men. The common service which we all had, the common experiences which we all underwent naturally builds a tie which years can not sever. But regardless of how painful the task may be, I am here to-day advocating Title IX of this bill because I believe that the interests of my country demand it. [Applause.]

There are some facts with respect to veterans' legislation which this committee and every man, woman, and child in the United States should know. The present cost of veterans' relief is $1,121,000,000 annually. The cost of the Veterans' Administration has increased $396,000,000 during the last decade. Compensation, and compensation alone, has increased from $253,000,000 in 1931 to $356,000,000 in 1933.

The total which the United States Government has paid out of its Treasury to veterans of past wars exceeds $16,500,000,000, and of that amount $5,390,000,000 have gone for benefits to veterans of the World War. Within 10 years the taxpayers of the United States—and when I say "taxpayers" I mean everybody, because the incidence of taxation carries the burden to everybody—have contributed to World War veterans one-third of the total cost of the veterans of all wars.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Later on I shall be glad to yield.

Moreover, that is not the entire story. If it were, it would not be so tragic. It is estimated that 10 years hence, assuming that no additional benefits are granted to veterans, under existing statutes the annual burden will exceed $1,300,000,000, and will probably mount to $1,500,000,000. Whereas to-day there are more than 1,000,000 ex-service men receiving benefits from the United States Government, it is estimated, as a result of experience during the course of the last three years, that that number will exceed 1,400,000 ten years hence. Moreover, during the next decade it is estimated that $11,870,000,000 will be paid to veterans. In other words, 10 years hence the United States will have paid to veterans of the World War approximately $17,000,000,000. I submit to the members of this committee that this is an appalling picture; that as we look forward into the future and see the mounting annual cost incident to existing statutes, you must become convinced that we must change some of the provisions in the existing law; that we must modify and revamp the statutes which grant benefits to veterans of past wars; that we must do it fairly and honestly, without depriving the real war casualty of any benefits to which he may be entitled, without destroying the entire structure; but you must concede that you and I, as Members of this Congress, must set our minds and our hearts to the task of modifying existing statutes.

If we fail to do this, the effect may well be the destruction of our Government. No democracy can stand the burden which is now imposed upon ours. I know that were the ex-service men themselves to become aware, to be made cognizant of what has been done they are sufficiently patriotic to rise up and say, "This thing must stop."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. MAY. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to page 17 of the report, where is set out the table showing the amount of disbursements to veterans of all wars.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I hope the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. MAY. I will be just as brief as I can. In this table the disbursements for veterans of the World War is listed at $5,390,039,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. That is right.

Mr. MAY. That includes the loans made on adjusted-service certificates?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. That is right.

Mr. MAY. But does not take into account the $953,942,000 paid in premiums by the veterans?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I will, later on.

Mr. Chairman, the considerations I have outlined show the reason the Economy Committee considered the revision of existing law.

If you will bear with me for a few minutes, I will attempt to explain accurately and concisely the meaning of the various sections of this title.

First, I want to state the provisions of 901 positively and negatively so there can be no misunderstanding as to what it means. Permit me to demonstrate the persons who are not affected in any way whatsoever by the provisions of 901.

All those who, if single, have an income of less than $1,500 a year, plus $400 for each dependent, and all those who, if married, have an income of $3,500 a year or more, plus $400 for each dependent, are in no wise affected by the provisions of 901, whether their disease or disability be presumptively connected with the war or whether their disease or disability be directly connected with their war service. It is quite immaterial as to how they may have contracted their injury or their disease, provided they have not the income specified. So that in 901 a presumptive case who can not take care of himself is in no way affected.

I want the members of this committee to bear that in mind; to realize that this is a statement of fact and not a statement of assumption.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. That means that these neuropsychiatric cases, presumptive, these tubercular cases, presumptive, these syphilitic lethargica cases, presumptive, and these dysentery cases, presumptive, are not affected?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. They are not.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. BROWNING. If they have the necessary income, they are affected.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. In other words, if they can take care of themselves, but the man who can not trace his disease or disability to his war service is in no wise affected if he has not the income provided in this section.

Mr. BROWNING. But the cases enumerated by the gentleman from South Dakota are affected if they have as much income as the gentleman has designated.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. If they have that much income or more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. If they are married and have an income of $3,500 or more, plus $400 for each child, they are affected?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. And if single and they have an income of $1,500?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I do not yield further. The provisions of this section do not deny to any man who has not the specified income any of the benefits he is now receiving. [Applause.]

The second class in no wise affected under 901 is that class in which we find men of 65 years of age or over.

The third class that is in no wise affected, regardless of how large or how small their income may be, is the man whose disability or disease is directly attributable to his war service—that man we know to be a war casualty—and I, for one, will stand on the floor of this House and constantly defend the receipt by him of his disability compensation and other benefits.

The fourth class which is not affected is the man who is totally and temporarily disabled and the man who is totally and permanently disabled. It is quite immaterial as to whether he can trace his disability to his war service or as to whether he is presumptively connected. Section 901, therefore, in no wise affects the totally and temporarily disabled or the totally and permanently disabled.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. The age being fixed at 65, would not that prevent many of the Spanish-American soldiers who are now drawing pensions from continuing to draw them?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Unless he is exempted under one of the six classes of exemptions.

Mr. BALDRIGE. I would suggest that the gentleman continue his statement and not yield, because the gentleman has a line of thought, and we are anxious to hear it.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I thank the gentleman.

The fifth class that is exempted under 901 is that in which there is the man who has a presumptive disability and who served in combat with the enemy in the zone of hostilities or who was under fire. The person in this class is in no wise affected under the provisions of 901. The theory underlying this exemption is that a man who was in combat with the enemy, who served in the zone of hostilities, or who was under fire, was subjected to more intense physical and nervous strain than the man who did not have that service, and that therefore any disease he may have developed should be presumed to be of war origin. The man who served in camp in this country obviously was not subjected to the same hardship or to the same nervous or physical strain as that to which the man who served in combat with the enemy or under fire or in the zone of hostilities was subjected.

The sixth class which is exempted under 901 are the widows and orphans. The provisions of that section deprive them of nothing now or in the future.

I now desire to define affirmatively the one class which is affected by the provisions of section 901. The presumptive case who is not totally disabled, who was not in the zone of hostilities, who has an income of $1,500 a year or more, if single, or $3,500 a year, or more, if married, plus $400 a year for each dependent, is affected, and he alone is affected. He receives no benefits under 901, and I challenge any man on the floor of this House to demonstrate why a man who can not trace his disability to his war service and who can take care of himself, his wife, and his children is entitled to a gratuity from his Government. [Applause.]

This is the man who is affected under the provisions of 901. No other class is affected by its provisions. And permit me here to state to the members of the committee, with all due respect for the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina, that only 22,000 ex-service men out of a total of over 1,000,000 now receiving benefits are affected by the provisions of section 901 of this title.

Section 902 has been explained by the gentleman from South Dakota. It provides that the man who is in a hospital, mind you, receiving a comfortable bed, good food, hospital care and treatment, is to receive $20 a month as long as he shall remain in the hospital, if he is single, and that the man who is in the hospital, if he be married or have dependents, shall receive $20 a month, while the difference between $20 and what he would otherwise receive shall be paid to his wife or dependents. The theory underlying this section is that there is no justification in giving a man in the hospital his full compensation, in addition to his bed, his food, his hospital care and treatment, while the man who may be suffering with an equal disability is outside, not receiving the bed and the food and the hospital treatment and care. In other words, the committee decided that the present situation constituted a double benefit and that one of the benefits should be withdrawn.

Section 903 deals with the emergency officers' retirement act. When the Congress passed the emergency officers' retirement act, it was my understanding—and I am sure it was the understanding of a great many Members, possibly not all, but a great many—that the retired emergency officer who was to receive benefits under the provisions of that act was the one whose disability was directly attributable to his war service. After the act had been passed, the Attorney General rendered a decision with respect to ambiguous language in the act which granted to the emergency officer, presumptively connected with war service, all of the benefits which it was thought were to be restricted to those whose disability was directly attributable to war service.

The provisions of section 903 provide that the emergency officer who sustained a disability directly attributable to his war service, prior to the armistice, shall receive benefits and that also those emergency officers who, having served 90 days prior to the armistice, had subsequent to the armistice and before July 2, 1921, contracted a disability directly attributable to their war service shall receive benefits. In other words, section 903 merely restores the meaning of the emergency officers' retirement act to that which we thought and understood was contained in the act when we approved it. Moreover, under this section those officers removed from the retired rolls shall become compensable cases subject to the provisions of section 901 of this title.

Section 904 has been explained. Section 905, with respect to retroactive benefits, has been explained.

Bear this in mind, I beg of you, that here we are 10 years after the official termination of the war, almost 14 years after the actual termination of the war, and yet we are still, under existing law, paying retroactive benefits for 8, 9, and 10 years, and I submit to the members of the committee that this is hardly justifiable, excepting always the case which is directly attributable to war service.

Section 907 has been explained by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. Section 908 also has been explained by the gentleman from South Dakota. Section 909 likewise has been explained by the gentleman from South Dakota. Time does not permit me here to duplicate his explanation.

Section 910 provides for a joint committee to make a complete survey of all veterans' legislation and to report back to the Congress at the next session a well-coordinated program for the care of all veterans of all wars, as well as their dependents.

I ask you to consider this title tolerantly, without prejudice—honestly and courageously. I ask you to bear in mind the future cost imposed upon this Government by reason of existing statutes. I ask you to bear in mind that Title IX of this act deprives no man, justly entitled to benefits, of any benefit which he has heretofore in the past received or may receive in the future. I ask you to bear in mind that Title IX will save the United States $48,000,000 in 1933 and $300,000,000 annually 10 years hence, and that it will not destroy the fabric of just, proper, and adequate veterans' relief. [Applause.]

As we look ahead into the future the burden imposed upon the United States Government becomes staggering—it becomes appalling. I have said before, and I repeat, were the ex-service men of this country who wore the uniform of their country, who followed their flag into battle, to become cognizant of what has been put on the statute books of this country, they would rise up in arms and say, "This thing must stop!" [applause]; and if they will not, then I say to you here, as an individual, that this thing must stop. Were I to take any other position, I would consider that I, as an individual, were unworthy of the uniform which I once wore; that I were unworthy of the flag which I once followed; that I would be unworthy to sit in this House, for I feel deeply and intensely that you and I must here act courageously and honestly to modify the existing statutes in the interest of the country we once fought to save.

This is no time to consider our own petty political careers. This is no time to set ourselves up individually above our country. On the contrary, this is a time when you and I are faced with a crisis, faced with an emergency, when you and I are under the guns. It is for us to decide whether we have the courage to stand under fire. [Applause.]

All the great political philosophers—Voltaire, Hume, and Locke—prophesied the day when under a democratic form of government the power of organized minorities would be greater than the resistance of the legislative body. I submit to you that that time has almost arrived. I submit to you that you and I and every one of us, Members of this House, at one time or another have been propagandized by an organized minority, which through ignorance unwittingly has attempted to impose upon the United States Government a burden which that Government should never have been called upon to bear. [Applause.] Unless you and I now have the courage to stand against these organized minorities, to exercise our own best judgment in the interest of our Nation as a whole, I say to you—and in this respect I will assume a prophetic rôle—the democratic form of government, the form of government which has made this country great, will crumble into dust.

The things for which you and I have always stood will be destroyed.

As for myself, as long as I am a Member of this House I will stand in the well or elsewhere to oppose every organized minority that attempts to impose on the United States a burden which can not be justified and which the United States can not and should not carry. [Applause, Members rising.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. My impression is that the House gave unanimous consent to take up Title IX section by section prior to the motion to strike out the whole title.

Now, many Members on the floor will vote for some sections in the title, and I think they should have an opportunity to do so before striking out the entire title. I hope the membership of the House will give consideration to the various sections of the title. Therefore, I hope that the title will not now be stricken out before we have an opportunity to consider it section by section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the information of the committee that when a motion is made to strike out the entire title the Chair will hold that particular amendment in abeyance until other perfecting amendments are disposed of. The gentleman from North Carolina has an amendment to strike out and insert, and therefore the Chair recognizes him, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. After the motion is made to strike out the entre title, theChair will hold that particular amendered, would a motion to strike out a particular section be considered as a perfecting amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would so hold. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: Strike out all of Title IX, consisting of sections 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, and 910, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE IX. PROVISION APPLICABLE TO VETERANS

"SEC. 901. There is hereby created a joint congressional committee, which shall be composed of seven Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Such committee shall conduct a thorough investigation of the operation of the laws and regulations relating to the relief of veterans of all wars and persons receiving benefits on account of service of such veterans and report a national policy with respect to such veterans and their dependents, and shall also report and recommend such economies as will lessen the cost to the United States Government of the Veterans' Administration. The committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than the first Monday in December, 1932, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

"The committee is authorized to sit and act, whether or not the Senate or House of Representatives is in session, at such times and places as it may deem advisable, and to call upon various departments of the Government for such information and for such clerical assistance as may be necessary, using the services of employees on the Government pay roll, and also to call upon and use the clerks of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of the House of Representatives, and the clerk of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to answer the argument of the gentleman from Arizona, but I say to him that many men in this House have the same amount of courage that he has, but they also have sympathy for these disabled veterans and their dependents. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman from South Dakota referred to the emergency officers' bill. That is before the Military Affairs Committee for their consideration, and they are going to report on it, either by repealing it or modifying it in a short time.

The amendment I have introduced leaves nothing in this title save and except a committee to be appointed, consisting of seven Members of the House and seven Members of the Senate to report on the first Monday in December on two things: How to consolidate all of these matters for veterans' relief, and second, how to perfect economies in the administration.

That is a fair and just proposition. Those of us who are service men, those of us who are thinking of the disabled veterans or their dependents, would rather wait and let the calm and deliberate thought of this committee decide what should be done for the benefit, not only of these men, but the country as well. I respectfully request the committee to vote down all so-called perfecting amendments and to vote for the amendment I have introduced. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will venture to say what in effect I said earlier in the session this afternoon, and that is, that the thing that the country is interested in and what they are expecting Congress to do now is to effect economies resulting in saving to the Federal Treasury now. [Applause.] This proposal means no saving now; it holds out a forlorn hope of savings hereafter. Let me repeat, the country demands savings now.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sorry, but I have not the time. This proposal made by the gentleman from North Carolina is in effect only a subterfuge designed to help Members in their vote against economy—a vote to investigate the Veterans' Administration and laws and set up a smoke screen behind which they may vote to continue governmental expenditures. All that the taxpayer will get out of the proposal of the gentleman from North Carolina is an investigation and report of a committee and the privilege of continuing to pay tax bills to the Federal Treasury. It sets up a committee of 14 Members of the House and Senate to report on the first Monday in December next, four weeks after the election—a committee that is supposed to function during the time that every member of that committee, so far as this House is concerned, and presumably some members of the Senate, will be campaigning for reelection, a committee that expects to report back to a short session of the Congress, when anyone who knows the legislative situation in either body at that time knows that neither of the two Houses will act on that type of legislation to the extent that it could become law between then and March 4. It is a dodge, it is a subterfuge, it is a backdoor escape for those who are afraid to go on record either for or against reducing veterans' payments.

Those who are friends of veterans rather than vote-seeking friends of veterans will face the issue. In my judgment, the thinking veterans now have reached the conclusion that we must say to the Treasury and to the country and to our comrades in the service that the country can not continue to pay out unlimited funds in our behalf. [Applause.] It is better that those who are friends of the veterans now stop some of these expenditures than that we allow this thing to go on until the backwash will sweep aside benefits to which every one of us believes now the veterans are entitled. The veterans and the friends of the veterans must stop this movement. We must face this issue. If you want these benefits to continue to go to the veterans, be honest about it and vote for it. Do you want to stop these expenditures? Then support the committee, but do not vote to go out of the back door. The veterans at home are thinking citizens, they know what is going on here, and they have no respect for political cowards. This substitute is nothing but a subterfuge and dodge of the real issue. It may appeal to some Members now, but the day when the veteran will demand a show-down on this issue, when the country will demand a show-down on this issue, can not be long postponed. The defeat of the committee's proposal means the damming up of opposition to the drain of veterans' payments, finally when the deluge comes, the veteran will be the greatest sufferer. Vote now for the committee's cuts and avoid the inevitable deeper slashes that will come unless a halt is called in veterans' expenditures. [Applause..]

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PETTENGILL: Strike from Mr. BULWINKLE's motion the figure "903," referring to section 903.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this motion, if it prevails, will be to leave section 903 in the bill. As has been stated here by Mr. BULWINKLE, this whole matter with reference to the emergency officers' act of 1926 is now before the Committee on Military Affairs. I am a member of that committee. No member of the committee can speak for the full committee, and I do not attempt to do so. I do wish to say, however, that my motion to leave section 903 in the bill is offered after consulting with a number of the members of the Military Affairs Committee that I have seen here on the floor this afternoon.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I am on the floor, and the gentleman did not consult with me.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not see him.

Mr. KVALE. And will the gentleman also include me in that?

Mr. ROGERS. And I wish that he would also include me.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. How long were hearings held?

Mr. PETTENGILL. We held our hearings until William Wolff Smith got sick.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman believe that we ought to legislate through orderly procedure, with hearings, or does he believe that we ought to have star-chamber sessions and let the Director of the Veterans' Bureau in an ex parte proceeding write legislation affecting the Veterans' Bureau?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I do not defend star-chamber proceedings, but I do want to explain to the House the effect of this motion. When the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill was passed the legal counsel of the Veterans' Bureau rendered an opinion under which it would apply to about 3,000 officers. Later an opinion of the Attorney General reversed the previous opinion so that it applied to some three or four thousand more officers than were originally contemplated when the act was passed. This section, as I understand it, will restate into the law what was the intent of Congress when the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill was passed.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

I do so for more than one reason. The first reason is that, as I understand it, the agreement entered into before this title was considered was that each section should be considered in turn, and that the committee is entitled to a frank shown-down on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina without any entanglements or complicating factors.

I am one who believes that the gentleman has a fair proposition. He offers to strike out all of the sections of the title which have to do with the various benefits, privileges, and rights of veterans under existing law, and to set up a fair body to go into a thorough, systematic, competent, and dispassionate study of this problem; then come back this winter with recommendations, after open hearings, and after all sides have their say, when we will be in a position to effect economies through enactment of some fair, honest, and courageous legislation. I do not favor the proposal as written in section 903 of this measure. I speak as one who has some set opinions regarding the administration of this emergency officers' retirement act. There is hardly a man in the association itself of any consequence or standing who dares or desires to defend some of the most flagrant abuses of this act that are of record. They are not found defending a man who has been retired for emotional instability or social inaptitude or some of the other extreme cases which have been cited. Just so, there is a group, and I hope it is a substantial proportion of this House, that is unwilling to strike from the rolls of the retired men a deserving man in order to reach an undeserving man.

After all these emergency officers enlisted not in peace time but at a time when they knew their services would be used in war. They were willing and eager to subject themselves to the hazards of battle. If we do it deliberately and carefully, we can arrive at some method of reaching those who should not properly be on the rolls. I speak the sentiment of this group of officers as voiced to me when I say that in that task you will have the complete cooperation and sympathetic assistance of every responsible member of the group which now receives the benefits under this act.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman assumes that the language of this bill strikes the deserving men from the roll, which it does not.

Mr. KVALE. I insist it does.

Mr. McDUFFIE. When did the gentleman's committee take up this emergency-officer proposal?

Mr. KVALE. That is a fair question. The committee has not yet completed hearing the testimony, much less has it considered it in executive session.

Mr. McDUFFIE. When did the gentleman's committee begin hearings?

Mr. KVALE. We began some time ago. The gentleman knows the stress of the activities in Congress now and the difficulty of holding sustained sessions.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It was after the Economy Committee had begun its program?

Mr. KVALE. I am unable to state. I believe the gentleman is correct.

Mr. McDUFFIE. In other words, we do not know when the gentleman's committee will bring a bill here and pass it.

Mr. KVALE. But the gentleman does not intend to give us a chance.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Why was that bill sent to the Committee on Military Affairs when the original Tyson-Fitzgerald bill came from the Veterans' Committee?

Mr. KVALE. The committee wondered about that, but it was referred to the committee, and the committee did not want to dodge any responsibility.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It was sent to the Committee on Military Affairs because it contained provisions with reference to the retirement of Regular Army officers. The Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction over that.

Mr. CONNERY. But that does not mean that that committee has jurisdiction over officers who are not Regular Army officers.

Mr. KVALE. I regret I can not yield further. The point I am making is that there is a systematic study and searching consideration of this matter in progress, and until that is completed, I choose to cast my lot with those who do not intend to assess the underpaid Government workers and the disabled veterans of this country to meet a deficit that they had nothing to do with creating.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 66, line 24, strike out section 907, down to and including line 2 on page 68.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, while I am in sympathy with the other provisions of this particular Title IX, I believe this section 907, relating to testimony in suits upon insurance claims, has absolutely no place in the statutory law of this Nation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman is not a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Chair will rule that any amendment to strike any part of the title is a perfecting amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Let us look at the situation for a moment. This is brought in here because it is claimed it is difficult to obtain evidence which will be presented at a jury trial of these claims, although there is no case known in the history of equity, common law, or criminal jurisprudence which compels a litigant, before going into a court of competent jurisdiction to try his case, to furnish to the opposing side not only the names of his witnesses but the testimony which those witnesses intend to give in court. This section proposes to compel the petitioner under this act to furnish all his evidence to the Veterans' Bureau before he is permitted to go to trial before a jury in the perfection of his appeal.

This suggestion was intimated by members of the Veterans' Bureau, but, before the Committee on Military Affairs only a few days ago, General Hines, in suggesting that this amendment be made a part of the law, was asked how many of these jury trials resulted in verdicts for the Government. He said, "Slightly under 40 per cent of the jury trials are won, under present conditions."

This law, the World War veterans' act, gives the petitioner a right to a jury trial. If he is allowed to keep the right to a jury trial, he should be allowed the same right that any litigant has in a jury trial in any jurisdiction known to the history of this Nation. We should not compel him to give the names and addresses of his witnesses and the testimony which those witnesses will give.

General Hines, before the Committee on Military Affairs, after stating that the Government won slightly under 40 per cent of these cases, and in suggesting that language of this kind be enacted into law, was asked certain questions by me. I am quoting from his own testimony. He said:

I think we are having better results, and we are having better results since we placed men in the field specializing on this rather than sending them out from Washington or trusting to their dual duties as regional attorneys to act in the trial of insurance suits alone.

Then I asked him:

But notwithstanding the fact that you are having better results under those features, you feel it would be better to limit testimony in the prosecution of these claims, so that nothing could be gone into except what had already been brought to the attention of the department.

And General Hines said:

At least, that we would have a list of all the witnesses that are going to be called and as much evidence as those witnesses could produce.

Let me quote further from the record:

Mr. ROGERS. You mean by that you would accomplish more by having a list of the witnesses that would be called by the plaintiff?
General HINES. Yes. I feel if we had that opportunity, it would be up to us to develop the evidence.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to complete reading General Hines's testimony. I then asked him:

You do not mean that you should be notified what they are going to testify?

And he said:

No, sir; I think our field examiners should obtain that.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield.

Mr. HORR. Is it not a fact that this same bureau employs people who investigate these cases? They collect their evidence; they keep it in the files. The attorney can not look at it, but this bill permits them to get the attorney's case.

Mr. ROGERS. These suits are tried as the result of insurance contracts, and recognized rules of evidence must prevail.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would it not be possible to get a vote on the Bulwinkle amendment and the Browning amendment which take the whole subject out of the bill? If either amendment is agreed to, that is the end of it. If it is not agreed to, then the House can vote on the other amendments. I make this suggestion in the interest of saving time.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is presented as a parliamentary inquiry, all the Chair can inform the gentleman is that if the Members would refrain from offering further amendments, it could be done.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, when the time of the gentleman from South Dakota expires, I am going to present a unanimous-consent request to bring that about if possible.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Before I discuss the proposition I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE] that it might be well to have a unanimous-consent agreement that we may settle this debate, because if the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING], or the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is adopted, it will shorten this debate by many, many hours.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have but four minutes. I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, could not the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS] ask the unanimous consent temporarily to withdraw his amendment, and let us decide it at this time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire to ask unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment temporarily or, if I may be recognized later, I would yield to the chairman of the committee to prefer a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ROGERS rose.

Mr. MCDUFFIE. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BROWNING: Page 55, line 1, strike out all of Title IX.

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending motion and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MCDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, my amendment was offered as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not offer it as a substitute when there is a motion to strike out and substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk again reported the Bulwinkle amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. There was some talk about voting on the motion to strike out the title and then, after the vote was had on that motion, to allow perfecting amendments to different sections in the title. However, there was no agreement made in that respect. I should like to ask the Chair whether, if this motion should be voted down, being a motion to strike out the title, the Chair will entertain motions to amend different sections if the point of order is made that such amendments are not in order after voting upon the motion to strike out the title.

The CHAIRMAN. Rule 16, section 7, states:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the Chair this further question? If the motion to strike out the title prevails, I understand the Chair's position to be that he would not entertain a motion to amend the sections.

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion to strike out and insert prevails, then that is the end of Title IX.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. If the motion is voted down, then will motions to amend the different sections of the title be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. They will.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, if the motion to strike out the entire title is not carried, then a motion to strike out each section as we reach it would be in order, as I understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

The question was taken, and Mr. BULWINKLE demanded a division.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona and Mr. BULWINKLE.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 211, noes 119.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE X—SPECIAL PROVISIONS

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 1001. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SUSPENSIONS AND REPEALS

SEC. 1002. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with those provisions of this act which are of temporary duration are hereby suspended during the period in which such provisions of this act are in effect. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with those provisions of this act which are of permanent nature are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When the tax bill was under consideration in this body it was stated categorically and as a matter of fact by members of the Ways and Means Committee that $200,000,000 would be saved and that therefore the taxes imposed by the provisions then offered would balance the Budget. That imposed upon the Economy Committee the task of bringing in a measure which would effect the saving which members of the Ways and Means Committee prophetically promised would be saved in order that the Budget be balanced. This House rose as one man and indicated its willingness and its determination to balance the Budget. The Economy Committee has brought in a bill designed to save $200,000,000 in order that the end sought might be obtained.

I take this occasion to remind the members of the committee exactly what it has done with the bill which the Economy Committee brought in, and to further remind the committee that this action has made impossible the balancing of the Budget under the terms of the revenue act passed by this House.

The Committee of the Whole has left under Title I not more than $12,000,000. Under Title II it has permitted to remain in the bill not more than $13,000,000. Under Title III the committee has permitted to remain in the bill approximately $16,000,000, and under Title VII $25,000 remains in the bill. In other words, there now remains in the bill of the $200,000,000 but $42,314,000, leaving an unbalanced Budget amounting to approximately $160,000,000.

I ask the members of the committee to bear this in mind: That even the Treasury proposal did not contemplate a factual balancing of the Budget, for it did not take into consideration $497,000,000 necessary to serve the public debt, and it did include in its estimate of revenue over $200,000,000 due and payable to the United States on account of war debts, so that neither under the Treasury proposal nor under the sales-tax proposal submitted to this House by the Committee on Ways and Means was it contemplated that the Budget would be balanced during the next fiscal year. They contemplated balancing the Budget in two or three years. Under them the Budget for 1933 was unbalanced in an amount equivalent to approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars, while now the Committee of the Whole has made the matter worse by striking $160,000,000 out of the economy bill.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. MAY. If you have failed by this action of the committee by three-quarters of a billion dollars, where were you going to get the other half billion dollars that this bill did not provide for?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. The proposal was to balance the Budget during a period of two or three years. That was the original proposition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Arizona, usually accurate in his statements, to-day in quoting figures is just as inaccurate as a Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause.] The gentleman from Arizona does not know and can not know the revenue which a bill not yet considered by the other body may raise. Every informed Member of this House knows that the estimates given to us by the Treasury Department were low in regard to taxes which the Treasury Department opposed, while as to the taxes we struck out of the bill the estimates of the Treasury Department were very high.

The gentleman from Arizona puts the proposition before this House squarely when he says that Title I as it now stands saves only $12,000,000 instead of $67,000,000. That indeed is proof absolute that $55,000,000 of this proposed saving has to be taken from the pay of the low-paid employees. What an admission!

I know of no better argument than that made by the gentleman from Arizona, one of the sponsors of this bill, to prove that the committee's plan to save $67,000,000 meant a reduction of the salaries of the lower-paid and under-paid employees of the Government. It has been admitted that 70 per cent of all the pay roll of the Government is in the classes under $2,500. That is not the way to economize.

Again, we are reminded that this deficit is due in part to the failure of foreign debtors to pay the United States, and I repeat what I have already stated the other day—it is not fair to make the Government employees pay for that.

The gentleman says the Treasury Department has failed to take into consideration the $475,000,000 that is our contribution to the sinking fund. It was not done this year, let me remind the gentleman. So much has been said about the balancing of the Budget that I submit that our Budget was unbalanced during three years, and it is humanly, physically, and economically impossible to balance it in one year during a period of depression. [Applause.]

Mr. SWING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SWING. When the revenue bill was here the statement was made that in addition to the revenues raised therein there must be a cut of $200,000,000 in Government expenditures. After that the Senate established the practice of cutting 10 per cent below the 5 per cent reduction of the House, which would make a total reduction of 15 per cent and a saving of $600,000,000. Whether this is wise or not I do not say, but I point out the economy or reduction effected of $600,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and with five different agencies of the Government pecking at appropriations, disregarding each other, and cutting appropriations without any coordination is going to wreck the normal functioning of the Government.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman has very correctly stated that it is unfair to take this amount of money out of the pockets of the Government employees to balance the Budget.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Is it not equally unfair to take it out of the pockets of the soldiers of the country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We have not done that. We have stricken that from the bill, and it is going to stay out.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] included himself in that lecture about men who are against economy when he, the gentleman from Arizona, voted against the merger of the Army and Navy that was estimated to save between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year permanently.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And we are going to put that back in the bill to-day. I predict that, too.

Now, I have only a minute to close, and I want to make this statement. Yesterday we passed an inflation bill. If that bill works as we hope it will, it will increase commodity prices. If commodity prices are increased, we must increase the scale of wages. This is no time to take $88,000,000 out of circulation when we are seeking to put more money into circulation. Let us be consistent. If we were right yesterday, let us vote down the proposed pay cuts to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the committee a moment, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 13 of the bill to offer a committee amendment which will clarify that section.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendment reported first.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, let me state to the gentleman that on page 13, subsection (b) exempted from the provisions of the section retired emergency officers. I am sure the committee, since its action on Title IX, does not wish to make fish of one and fowl of the other. As to other retired officers, except those who were injured in line of duty, we provide that they can not draw two salaries—one salary from the United States and another for their retired pay; but this does not apply to any officer or any person retired for disability incurred in line of duty. The striking out of the language that "this section shall not apply to retired officers" will leave in the title, "This section shall not apply to any officers retired for disability incurred in line of duty."

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman well knows that because in the committee an amendment is adopted that it is not the action of the House when we have these record roll-call votes. Why go back now to make a correction to cure some evil which occurred by reason of an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole? Why not wait until we really have the evil before us?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We can not go back to it when we get in the House, and I am sure the House wants to correct this language.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then make a motion to recommit and take care of it. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, did not the House adopt an amendment to the rule under which the Economy Committee might, at any time, offer amendments to any portion of the bill?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That was my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. McDUFFIE. If I may have the attention of the Chairman a moment, the language introduced was an amendment by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which was adopted by the House as a part of the rule and permitted the committee to offer committee amendments, and by direction of that committee any member of the committee might offer such committee amendments at any time during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Suppose when we go into the House, on a record roll-call vote, the House votes to retain the veterans' title in the bill. Then, if you vote to retain that title in the bill and you now go back and incorporate the gentleman's amendment, we would have a double economy operation with reference to the retired emergency officers.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not think so at all. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE]?

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I want the attention of the committee for a few minutes only. I do not care to talk about what has happened to this economy bill. The committee labored day and night for over eight weeks to effectuate a saving of over $200,000,000 in order to balance the Budget. That was the task assigned to the Economy Committee. The country is watching the Congress as never before; whether the people will approve the work and recommendations of this committee or the action of this House in slaughtering the committee bill reducing the savings to the Treasury from over $200,000,000 to about $35,000,000 only the future will tell.

We have about completed the bill in the Committee of the Whole. When we get back into the House there will be separate votes on amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole. After those amendments are disposed of and the bill has been engrossed and read the third time, two motions to recommit under the special rule will be in order. It is understood and agreed that I am to be recognized to make one of those motions.

On last Thursday I offered an amendment substituting the furlough plan for the pay-cut plan. This amendment, if made law, would save $75,000,000 for the next fiscal year. Besides saving more money than the pay-cut plan it will by staggering employment cause the discharge of fewer employees. This plan is both more economical and more humane. The following tables set forth clearly the situation relative to the two plans:

Estimated number of employees who will have to be discharged if the present Senate policy of reducing appropriations 10 per cent below the amounts passed by the House of Representatives prevails and savings effected by the furlough system or pay cut are not available to apply in absorbing, in part at least, such reductions

Department	Permanent	Temporary	Prospective temporary [1]	Total
Agriculture	1,598	2,872		4,470
Commerce	1,785	278	528	2,591
Interior	723	145	1,135	2,003
Justice	900			900
Labor	616			616
Navy	9,000			9,000
Post Office [2]	41,792			41,792
Treasury	6,000	80	92	6,172
State	456			456
War	5,800	1,800		7,600
District of Columbia	957	326		1,283
Veterans' Administration	4,000			4,000
Interstate Commerce Commission	289			289
General Accounting Office	245	5		250
Public Buildings and Grounds	200	38	83	321
Total	74,361	5,544	1,838	81,743

[1] Includes those who would be taken on if reductions were not made.
[2] See details on following sheet.

Statement showing number of regular employees in the Postal Service and the estimated number of employees who would be dropped under the proposed 10 per cent reduction in appropriations for the fiscal year 1933

Branch of service	Estimated number to be dropped	Present number of regular employees
Post Office Department	145	1,450
Inspection service	67	664
First and second class postmasters		4,688
Third-class postmasters		10,800
Fourth-class postmasters		32,870
Assistant postmasters	1,669	2,776
Clerks, etc., first and second class offices	9,910	76,520
City letter carriers	[1] 18,417	53,014
Village carriers	1,008	1,008
Rural carriers	[2] 8,000	41,597
Railway postal clerks, etc	2,260	21,211
Motor vehicle service	344	3,818
Mail-bag repair shops	42	421
Miscellaneous	50	238
Total	41,792	251,075

[1] Reduced to substitute roll.
[2] This number will be dropped altogether. In addition, approximately 9,000 will be placed on triweekly instead of daily service.

The motion to recommit will be the same motion as I presented last Thursday as a substitute to the pay-cut plan. There will be a provision added to strike section 207 of Title II of the economy bill. This section suspended for the fiscal year 1933 extra compensation for overtime work, night work, and work on Sundays and holidays. Striking this section will leave the law for overtime work, and so forth, unchanged.

My main purpose in seeking recognition at this time was to inform Members of the House just what the motion to recommit would be so they could vote with full knowledge of its contents.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman consider the elimination of section 107, safeguarding the rural letter carriers, and place them with the rest of the postal group in section 101?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Representatives of the rural carriers this forenoon suggested to me some changes. I asked them to prepare and submit their amendment by the middle of the afternoon and that it would be considered. They agreed to do so, but I have not seen them or heard from them since.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman bring about in his motion to recommit the exemption of the $2,000?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Personally I think an exemption of $1,500 is high enough. It will both save more money and lessen unemployment. When will Members of this House learn—what the whole country knows—that this country is in the greatest emergency of our history? The people from one end of the land to the other expect Members of Congress to be courageous and to bring about substantial retrenchment in public expenditures.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to say that it is regrettable that any Members of this House should feel that they are being lectured on account of any vote that they may have cast. This committee has no personal feeling about this matter whatsoever. It was a burdensome task that we assumed and we found no pleasure in it whatever. We have submitted the program to you gentlemen, and it is entirely your responsibility. We have no desire to lecture anybody. I hope no one feels that there is the slightest personal feeling on the part of any member of the committee as to what you have done, because such is not the case. We have discharged our duty. We have brought here a bill which I think if adopted would have saved the taxpayers of the country more than $200,000,000 at a time when it is needed more than at any time in the history of our great Nation. Be it remembered that this program could have in no wise impaired the efficiency of the Government but involved only those things which we can deny ourselves at a time like this.

We have a salary payroll of $1,315,000,000, and you will reduce it only $12,000,000 under the amendment you adopted. Think of it. Only $12,000,000. Nearly every nation, as well as our own States, has cut the salaries of its employees. Some States have cut 33⅓ per cent. Business and industries everywhere have made a flat cut of 10 per cent from the top to the bottom. The railway employees, 2,000,000 in number, have accepted a 10 per cent cut. The schools, hospitals, and even the churches have done likewise.

Let me read in this connection a few words from some of those who pay taxes that pay these salaries. Have we no regard for them? Listen to this:

> The galleries and the Halls of Congress may be filled with cheering Federal employees, but don't forget, if you want to hear the cheers that count, get the home cheers that fill the ballot box for you. How about it?
> The voters expect economy—

That was received in the mail, and it is characteristic of many communications which have come over the desks of the members of the Economy Committee. We are to have presented a furlough plan of the President. The furlough plan is a pay cut—I do not care what you call it. You may call it a staggering system or a furlough system. It means in the last analysis a reduction of wages. How can we go on at a pre-war rate in personnel and wages? Surely this Government does not need all the services we now enjoy. I can not believe that 80,000 or 100,000 employees will be discharged from the pay roll of the Government and that this furlough plan will save that number their jobs. If you propose to save that number under your furlough plan, you are not going to save any money for the Public Treasury, because if you put some one in the place of the man who is furloughed you have to pay him. Therefore, I fail yet to find the saving that is promised under the staggering plan, whereas under this system, which does not hurt anybody which every man who is fortunate enough to be on the pay roll of Uncle Sam at a time like this should welcome as a patriotic duty, we do cut the small sum of $12,000,000, only 5 per cent reduction, in the salaries of the Federal employees. This is a sham and a farce. I can not support it. The honest, manly, and courageous way to deal with this pay cut or reduction problem is to apply a 10 per cent reduction on all Federal salaries from the highest to the lowest. The cost of living has been reduced more than this percentage. The fortunate Federal employee had better take this cut now, lest the next Congress come with a mandate to cut more. Without being presumptuous let me warn you gentleman of the consequences of a vote against economies in government. The people are demanding a greater reduction than we have proposed. Any man who has a job with Uncle Sam, especially here in Washington, who may work for 221 days in a year and get paid for 365, is a very fortunate citizen. I beg you to weigh well what you are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. Under the rule the committee will now rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, and pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 203, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole, including the amendment of the Economy Committee and the amendments adopted thereto.

The SPEAKER. Under the provisions of the rule, the previous question is ordered on all amendments and the bill to final passage. To dispose of the various amendments to the bill in an orderly way, the Chair thinks that the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill proper should first be disposed of. Then the Chair thinks that the Economy Committee amendment and amendments thereto should be disposed of. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the legislative appropriation bill proper? If not, the Chair will put them en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to the legislative bill proper.

The amendments to the legislative bill proper were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the Economy Committee amendment?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment to section 102, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and modified by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] raising the exemption to $2,500.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. My amendment was to raise the exemption to $2,000, an increase over the $1,000 carried in the original economy amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois was to increase the sum in my amendment to $2,500. If a vote is taken on the $2,500 amendment and that is defeated, as I understand it, then the exemption remains at $1,000. Is there any chance for a vote then on my amendment to raise that to $2,000?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon the McCormack amendment to section 105–A, 105–B, relative to the half holiday. Also a separate vote upon the amendment to section 301, the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], involving the transfer of appropriations. Also a separate vote is demanded upon the amendment to sections 308 to 313, the Barbour amendment, involving the transport service. Also on the amendment to Title VI, the Martin amendment, striking out the Army and Navy consolidation. A separate vote is also demanded on the amendment to Title IX, on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] to strike out Title IX.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the whole amendment to the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That has to be adopted by the House when all the other amendments are disposed of. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on the other amendments to the Economy Committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, lines 14, 16, and 17, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, a vote "yea" is in favor of increasing the exemption to $2,500, and a vote "nay" is in favor of keeping it as it was in the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 239, nays 154, not voting 38, as follows:

[Roll No. 62]

YEAS—239

Adkins	Doutrich	Kvale	Rogers, N. H.
Allen	Dowell	LaGuardia	Rudd
Almon	Eaton, Colo.	Lambertson	Sanders, N. Y.
Amlie	Eaton, N. J.	Lamneck	Sandlin
Andrew, Mass.	Englebright	Lankford, Ga.	Schafer
Arentz	Erk	Lankford, Va.	Schneider
Arnold	Estep	Larsen	Schuetz
Auf der Heide	Evans, Mont.	Leavitt	Seger
Bacon	Fernandez	Lehlbach	Selberling
Baldrige	Fiesinger	Lichtenwalner	Selvig
Barbour	Finley	Lindsay	Shannon
Barton	Fish	Linthicum	Shott
Beam	Fishburne	Lonergan	Shreve
Beedy	Fitzpatrick	Loofbourow	Sinclair
Black	Flannagan	Lovette	Sirovich
Bloom	Foss	McClintock, Ohio	Smith, Idaho
Bohn	Frear	McCormack	Smith, Va.
Boileau	Gambrill	McFadden	Smith, W. Va.
Boland	Garrett	McLaughlin	Snow
Bowman	Gasque	McLeod	Somers, N. Y.
Briggs	Gavagan	McMillan	Spence
Britten	Gibson	McSwain	Stalker
Brumm	Gifford	Maas	Stewart
Brunner	Gilchrist	Major	Stokes
Buckbee	Golder	Maloney	Strong, Kans.
Burdick	Goldsborough	Martin, Mass.	Strong, Pa.
Butler	Goodwin	Martin, Oreg.	Sullivan, N. Y.
Campbell, Iowa	Goss	Mead	Summers, Wash.
Campbell, Pa.	Granfield	Millard	Sumners, Tex.
Carley	Greenwood	Moore, Ky.	Sutphin
Carter, Calif.	Griffin	Mouser	Swanson
Carter, Wyo.	Haines	Nelson, Me.	Sweeney
Cary	Hall, Ill.	Nelson, Mo.	Swick
Celler	Hall, N. Dak.	Nelson, Wis.	Swing
Chavez	Hardy	Niedringhaus	Taylor, Colo.
Chiperfield	Harlan	Nolan	Temple
Christgau	Hartley	Norton, N. J.	Thomason
Clancy	Haugen	O'Connor	Thurston
Cochran, Mo.	Hawley	Oliver, N. Y.	Tierney
Cochran, Pa.	Hess	Overton	Tinkham
Cole, Md.	Hill, Wash.	Owen	Treadway
Colton	Holmes	Palmisano	Turpin
Condon	Horr	Parker, Ga.	Underwood
Connery	Houston, Del.	Parsons	Watson
Connolly	Hull, William E.	Partridge	Welch, Calif.
Cooke	Jacobsen	Patman	Welsh, Pa.
Coyle	James	Patterson	West
Crail	Jenkins	Peavey	White
Crosser	Johnson, Mo.	Person	Whitley
Crowther	Kading	Pettengill	Wigglesworth
Crump	Kahn	Pittenger	Williams, Tex.
Culkin	Karch	Prall	Wilson
Cullen	Keller	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Withrow
Curry	Kelly, Ill.	Ragon	Wolcott
Dallinger	Kelly, Pa.	Ramspeck	Wolfenden
Delaney	Kennedy	Ransley	Wolverton
De Priest	Kerr	Reed, N. Y.	Wyant
Dickstein	Kinzer	Reid, Ill.	Yates
Disney	Kopp	Robinson	Yon
Douglass, Mass.	Kurtz	Rogers, Mass.

NAYS 154

Aldrich	Collins	Gregory	McClintic, Okla.
Allgood	Cooper, Ohio	Guyer	McDuffie
Andresen	Cooper, Tenn.	Hadley	McGugin
Andrews, N. Y.	Cox	Hall, Miss.	McKeown
Ayres	Crisp	Hancock, N. Y.	McReynolds
Bacharach	Cross	Hancock, N. C.	Magrady
Bachmann	Darrow	Hare	Manlove
Bankhead	Davenport	Hart	Mansfield
Beck	Davis	Hastings	Mapes
Bland	DeRouen	Hill, Ala.	May
Blanton	Dickinson	Hoch	Michener
Bolton	Dies	Hogg, W. Va.	Miller
Brand, Ga.	Dominick	Holaday	Milligan
Brand, Ohio	Doughton	Hooper	Mitchell
Browning	Douglas, Ariz.	Hope	Mobley
Buchanan	Doxey	Hopkins	Montague
Bulwinkle	Drewry	Howard	Montet
Burch	Driver	Huddleston	Morehead
Burtness	Dyer	Hull, Morton D.	Norton, Nebr.
Busby	Ellzey	Johnson, Okla.	Oliver, Ala.
Byrns	Eslick	Johnson, S. Dak.	Parker, N. Y.
Cable	Evans, Calif.	Johnson, Tex.	Parks
Cannon	Free	Johnson, Wash.	Perkins
Carden	French	Jones	Polk
Cartwright	Fulbright	Ketcham	Pratt, Ruth
Chindblom	Fuller	Kniffin	Rainey
Christopherson	Fulmer	Knutson	Ramseyer
Clague	Garber	Lambeth	Rankin
Clark, N. C.	Gilbert	Lanham	Rayburn
Clarke, N. Y.	Glover	Lozier	Reilly
Cole, Iowa	Green	Luce	Rich

Sanders, Tex.	Swank	Vinson, Ga.	Williamson
Shallenberger	Taber	Vinson, Ky.	Wingo
Simmons	Tarver	Warren	Wood, Ga.
Snell	Taylor, Tenn.	Wason	Woodruff
Sparks	Thatcher	Weaver	Woodrum
Stafford	Tilson	Weeks	Wright
Steagall	Timberlake	Whittington
Stevenson	Underhill	Williams, Mo.

NOT VOTING—38

Abernethy	Dieterich	Johnson, Ill.	Murphy
Boehne	Drane	Kemp	Pou
Boylan	Freeman	Kendall	Purnell
Canfield	Gillen	Kleberg	Romjue
Cavicchia	Griswold	Kunz	Sabath
Chapman	Hogg, Ind.	Larrabee	Sullivan, Pa.
Chase	Hollister	Lea	Tucker
Collier	Hornor	Lewis	Wood, Ind.
Corning	Igoe	Ludlow
Crowe	Jeffers	Moore, Ohio

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Kendall (for) with Mr. Chapman (against).
Mr. Larrabee (for) with Mr. Pou (against).
Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Hollister (against).

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Griswold with Mr. Canfield.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Wood of Indiana.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Moore of Ohio.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Cavicchia.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Dieterich with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Collier.
Mr. Lewis with Mr. Jeffers.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Kemp.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. BOYLAN, is seriously ill in a hospital in Washington. If he were present he would vote "yea," and I desire to have the RECORD so show.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MOORE, recorded as voting?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman voted "nay."

Mr. JENKINS. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MOORE, is not here. I think the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. MANLOVE, voted "nay" when the gentleman's name was called.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. CAVICCHIA, is unavoidably detained. Had he been here he would have voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment, upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MCCORMACK of Massachusetts: Page 4, strike out lines 13 and following down through line 4 on page 5.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. A vote "yea" on this amendment is in favor of the McCormack amendment?

The SPEAKER. A vote "yea" on this amendment is in favor of the McCormack amendment, and a vote "nay" is against it; certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 267, nays 132, not voting 32, as follows:

[Roll No. 63]

YEAS—267

Adkins	Barton	Britten	Carter, Calif.
Allen	Beam	Brumm	Carter, Wyo.
Almon	Beedy	Brunner	Cary
Amlie	Black	Buchanan	Cavicchia
Andrews, N. Y.	Bland	Buckbee	Celler
Arentz	Bloom	Burch	Chavez
Arnold	Bohn	Burdick	Chiperfield
Auf der Heide	Boileau	Burtness	Christgau
Bachmann	Boland	Butler	Cochran, Mo.
Bacon	Bolton	Cable	Cochran, Pa.
Baldrige	Bowman	Campbell, Pa.	Cole, Md.
Barbour	Briggs	Carley	Colton
Condon	Griffin	McFadden	Schuetz
Connery	Hadley	McGugin	Seger
Connolly	Haines	McKeown	Seiberling
Cooke	Hall, Ill.	McReynolds	Selvig
Cooper, Ohio	Hall, Miss.	Maas	Shannon
Coyle	Hancock, N. Y.	Magrady	Shott
Crail	Hardy	Major	Shreve
Crisp	Harlan	Maloney	Sinclair
Cross	Hart	Manlove	Sirovich
Crosser	Hartley	Mapes	Smith, Idaho
Crowther	Hess	Martin, Mass.	Smith, Va.
Crump	Hill, Ala.	Martin, Oreg.	Snow
Culkin	Hill, Wash.	Mead	Somers, N. Y.
Cullen	Hogg, W. Va.	Millard	Spence
Curry	Holmes	Mobley	Stafford
Dallinger	Hooper	Montague	Stalker
Davenport	Hope	Montet	Stewart
Delaney	Hopkins	Moore, Ky.	Stokes
De Priest	Horr	Mouser	Strong, Kans.
DeRouen	Hull, Morton D.	Nelson, Me.	Strong, Pa.
Dickstein	Hull, William E.	Nelson, Wis.	Sullivan, N. Y.
Dies	Jacobsen	Niedringhaus	Summers, Wash.
Disney	James	Nolan	Sutphin
Douglass, Mass.	Jenkins	Norton, N. J.	Swank
Doutrich	Johnson, Tex.	O'Connor	Swanson
Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Oliver, N. Y.	Sweeney
Dyer	Kading	Overton	Swick
Eaton, N. J.	Kahn	Owen	Swing
Englebright	Karch	Palmisano	Taylor, Colo.
Erk	Keller	Parker, Ga.	Thomason
Estep	Kelly, Ill.	Parsons	Tierney
Evans, Calif.	Kelly, Pa.	Partridge	Timberlake
Evans, Mont.	Kemp	Patman	Tinkham
Fernandez	Kennedy	Patterson	Treadway
Fiesinger	Kerr	Peavey	Turpin
Finley	Kinzer	Perkins	Underwood
Fish	Knutson	Person	Vinson, Ga.
Fishburne	Kurtz	Pettengill	Watson
Fitzpatrick	Kvale	Pittenger	Weaver
Flannagan	LaGuardia	Prall	Welch, Calif.
Foss	Lambertson	Pratt, Ruth	Welsh, Pa.
Frear	Lamneck	Ragon	West
Free	Lanham	Ramspeck	White
Fulbright	Lankford, Ga.	Ransley	Whitley
Gambrill	Lankford, Va.	Reed, N. Y.	Wigglesworth
Garrett	Leavitt	Reid, Ill.	Wilson
Gavagan	Lehlbach	Reilly	Withrow
Gifford	Lewis	Rich	Wolcott
Glover	Lichtenwalner	Rogers, N. H.	Wolfenden
Golder	Lindsay	Romjue	Wolverton
Goldsborough	Linthicum	Rudd	Woodruff
Goodwin	Lonergan	Sanders, N. Y.	Wyant
Goss	Loofbourow	Sandlin	Yates
Granfield	McClintock, Ohio	Schafer	Yon
Greenwood	McCormack	Schneider

NAYS—132

Aldrich	Douglas, Ariz.	Ketcham	Rayburn
Allgood	Doxey	Kniffin	Robinson
Andresen	Drewry	Kopp	Rogers, Mass.
Andrew, Mass.	Driver	Lambeth	Sanders, Tex.
Bacharach	Eaton, Colo.	Larsen	Shallenberger
Bankhead	Ellzey	Lovette	Simmons
Beck	Eslick	Lozier	Smith, W. Va.
Blanton	French	Luce	Snell
Brand, Ga.	Fuller	McClintic, Okla.	Sparks
Brand, Ohio	Fulmer	McDuffie	Steagall
Browning	Garber	McLaughlin	Stevenson
Bulwinkle	Gasque	McLeod	Sumners, Tex.
Busby	Gibson	McMillan	Taber
Byrns	Gilbert	McSwain	Tarver
Campbell, Iowa	Gilchrist	Mansfield	Taylor, Tenn.
Cannon	Green	May	Temple
Carden	Gregory	Michener	Thatcher
Cartwright	Guyer	Miller	Thurston
Chindblom	Hall, N. Dak.	Milligan	Tilson
Christopherson	Hancock, N. C.	Mitchell	Underhill
Clague	Hare	Moore, Ohio	Vinson, Ky.
Clancy	Hastings	Morehead	Warren
Clark, N. C.	Haugen	Nelson, Mo.	Wason
Clarke, N. Y.	Hawley	Norton, Nebr.	Weeks
Cole, Iowa	Hoch	Oliver, Ala.	Whittington
Collins	Holaday	Parker, N. Y.	Williams, Mo.
Cooper, Tenn.	Houston, Del.	Parks	Williams, Tex.
Cox	Howard	Polk	Williamson
Darrow	Huddleston	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Wingo
Davis	Johnson, Mo.	Purnell	Wood, Ga.
Dickinson	Johnson, Okla.	Rainey	Wood, Ind.
Dominick	Johnson, S. Dak.	Ramseyer	Woodrum
Doughton	Jones	Rankin	Wright

NOT VOTING—32

Abernethy	Corning	Hollister	Larrabee
Ayres	Crowe	Hornor	Lea
Boehne	Dieterich	Igoe	Ludlow
Boylan	Drane	Jeffers	Murphy
Canfield	Freeman	Johnson, Ill.	Pou
Chapman	Gillen	Kendall	Sabath
Chase	Griswold	Kleberg	Sullivan, Pa.
Collier	Hogg, Ind.	Kunz	Tucker

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Kendall (for) with Mr. Chapman (against).
Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Hollister (against).
Mr. Dieterich (for) with Mr. Pou (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Collier.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Kleberg.
Mr. Griswold with Mr. Canfield.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Jeffers.
Mr. Gillen with Mr. Ayres.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Kunz.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from New York, Mr. BOYLAN, is seriously ill in a hospital in Washington. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON of Georgia: On page 14, beginning with line 11, strike all of section 301.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WOODRUFF and Mr. DYER asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. This is the amendment that provides for the consolidation of the Army and Navy.

The SPEAKER. The amendment was reported a moment ago and the gentleman from Michigan demanded the yeas and nays. Evidently he knew what it was.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I think the House should know what it is voting on. There is so much confusion, I could not hear the amendment, although I was listening.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the roll call.

Mr. WOODRUFF. This amendment provides for the consolidation of the Army and Navy?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is not that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked for the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 183, not voting 39, as follows:

[Roll No. 64]

YEAS—209

Allgood	Davis	Hancock, N. C.	McKeown
Amlie	Delaney	Hart	McMillan
Arnold	De Priest	Hastings	McReynolds
Ayres	DeRouen	Hill, Ala.	McSwain
Barton	Dickinson	Hoch	Maas
Beam	Dickstein	Holaday	Major
Black	Dies	Hope	Maloney
Bland	Disney	Howard	Mansfield
Blanton	Dominick	Jacobsen	May
Bloom	Doughton	James	Mead
Boileau	Douglass, Mass.	Johnson, Mo.	Miller
Boland	Doxey	Johnson, Tex.	Mitchell
Brand, Ga.	Drewry	Jones	Mobley
Britten	Driver	Kading	Montague
Browning	Ellzey	Karch	Montet
Brunner	Eslick	Keller	Moore, Ky.
Buchanan	Estep	Kelly, Ill.	Morehead
Bulwinkle	Fernandez	Kelly, Pa.	Nelson, Mo.
Burch	Fiesinger	Kemp	Norton, Nebr.
Busby	Fishburne	Kennedy	Norton, N. J.
Byrns	Fitzpatrick	Kerr	O'Connor
Campbell, Iowa	Flannagan	Kniffin	Oliver, N. Y.
Cannon	Frear	Kunz	Overton
Carden	Fulbright	Kvale	Parker, Ga.
Carley	Fuller	LaGuardia	Parks
Carter, Wyo.	Fulmer	Lambertson	Parsons
Cartwright	Gambrill	Lambeth	Patman
Cary	Garber	Lamneck	Patterson
Chavez	Garrett	Lanham	Peavey
Christgau	Gasque	Lankford, Ga.	Perkins
Cochran, Mo.	Gavagan	Larsen	Polk
Cole, Md.	Gilchrist	Leavitt	Prall
Collins	Glover	Lichtenwalner	Ragon
Condon	Goldsborough	Lindsay	Rainey
Connery	Goss	Lonergan	Ramspeck
Connolly	Granfield	Loofbourow	Rankin
Cooper, Tenn.	Green	Lozier	Ransley
Crisp	Greenwood	McClintic, Okla.	Rayburn
Cross	Gregory	McClintock, Ohio	Reilly
Crosser	Guyer	McCormack	Rogers, N. H.
Crump	Haines	McFadden	Romjue
Cullen	Hall, Miss.	McGugin	Rudd
Sanders, Tex.	Smith, W. Va.	Sweeney	Williams, Tex.
Schafer	Somers, N. Y.	Tarver	Wingo
Schneider	Sparks	Thomason	Withrow
Schuetz	Spence	Turpin	Wood, Ga.
Selvig	Stafford	Underwood	Wood, Ind.
Shallenberger	Steagall	Vinson, Ga.	Woodrum
Shannon	Stewart	Vinson, Ky.	Wright
Simmons	Sullivan, N. Y.	Weaver	Yon
Sinclair	Sumners, Tex.	West
Sirovich	Sutphin	Whittington
Smith, Va.	Swank	Williams, Mo.

NAYS—183

Adkins	Curry	Johnson, S. Dak.	Sandlin
Aldrich	Dallinger	Johnson, Wash.	Seger
Allen	Darrow	Kahn	Seiberling
Andresen	Davenport	Ketcham	Shott
Andrew, Mass.	Douglas, Ariz.	Kinzer	Shreve
Andrews, N. Y.	Doutrich	Knutson	Smith, Idaho
Arentz	Dowell	Kopp	Snell
Bacharach	Dyer	Kurtz	Snow
Bachmann	Eaton, Colo.	Lankford, Va.	Stalker
Bacon	Eaton, N. J.	Lehlbach	Stevenson
Baldrige	Englebright	Lewis	Stokes
Bankhead	Erk	Linthicum	Strong, Kans.
Barbour	Evans, Calif.	Luce	Strong, Pa.
Beedy	Evans, Mont.	McDuffie	Summers, Wash.
Bohn	Finley	McLaughlin	Swanson
Bolton	Fish	McLeod	Swick
Bowman	Foss	Magrady	Swing
Brand, Ohio	Free	Manlove	Taber
Briggs	French	Mapes	Taylor, Colo.
Brumm	Gibson	Martin, Mass.	Taylor, Tenn.
Buckbee	Gifford	Martin, Oreg.	Temple
Burdick	Gilbert	Michener	Thatcher
Burtness	Golder	Millard	Thurston
Butler	Goodwin	Milligan	Tilson
Cable	Griffin	Moore, Ohio	Timberlake
Campbell, Pa.	Hadley	Mouser	Tinkham
Carter, Calif.	Hall, Ill.	Nelson, Me.	Treadway
Cavicchia	Hall, N. Dak.	Nelson, Wis.	Underhill
Celler	Hancock, N. Y.	Nolan	Warren
Chindblom	Hardy	Oliver, Ala.	Wason
Chiperfield	Harlan	Owen	Watson
Christopherson	Hartley	Palmisano	Weeks
Clague	Haugen	Parker, N. Y.	Welch, Calif.
Clancy	Hawley	Partridge	Welsh, Pa.
Clark, N. C.	Hess	Person	White
Clarke, N. Y.	Hill, Wash.	Pettengill	Whitley
Cochran, Pa.	Hogg, W. Va.	Pittenger	Wigglesworth
Cole, Iowa	Holmes	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Williamson
Colton	Hooper	Pratt, Ruth	Wilson
Cooke	Hopkins	Ramseyer	Wolcott
Cooper, Ohio	Horr	Reed, N. Y.	Wolfenden
Cox	Houston, Del.	Reid, Ill.	Wolverton
Coyle	Huddleston	Rich	Woodruff
Crail	Hull, Morton D.	Robinson	Wyant
Crowther	Hull, William E.	Rogers, Mass.	Yates
Culkin	Jenkins	Sanders, N. Y.

NOT VOTING—39

Abernethy	Corning	Hornor	Ludlow
Almon	Crowe	Igoe	Murphy
Auf der Heide	Dieterich	Jeffers	Niedringhaus
Beck	Drane	Johnson, Ill.	Pou
Boehne	Freeman	Johnson, Okla.	Purnell
Boylan	Gillen	Kendall	Sabath
Canfield	Griswold	Kleberg	Sullivan, Pa.
Chapman	Hare	Larrabee	Tierney
Chase	Hogg, Ind.	Lea	Tucker
Collier	Hollister	Lovette

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Pou (against).
Mr. Dieterich (for) with Mr. Hollister (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Almon with Mr. Bachmann.
Mr. Hare with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Auf der Heide with Mr. Lovette.
Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma with Mr. Beck.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Collier.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Kleberg.
Mr. Griswold with Mr. Canfield.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Jeffers.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Tierney.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make this statement before announcing the vote. It appears to the Chair there is a great deal of confusion on account of the fact that Members do not know really what amendment they are voting on. If it is agreeable to the House, and unless there is some objection, the Chair will request the other amendments to be reported so the House will know what it is voting on.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BARBOUR: Page 19, line 19, strike out sections 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, and 313 down to and including line 8 on page 23.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 297, nays 98, not voting 36, as follows:

[Roll No. 65]

YEAS—297

Adkins	Dickstein	Kinzer	Ransley
Aldrich	Dies	Kniffin	Reed, N. Y.
Allen	Dominick	Knutson	Robinson
Allgood	Douglass, Mass.	Kopp	Rogers, Mass.
Almon	Doutrich	Kunz	Rogers, N. H.
Amlie	Doxey	Kurtz	Romjue
Andresen	Driver	Kvale	Rudd
Andrews, N. Y.	Eaton, Colo.	LaGuardia	Sanders, N. Y.
Arentz	Eaton, N. J.	Lambertson	Sanders, Tex.
Arnold	Elizey	Lambeth	Schafer
Auf der Heide	Englebright	Lamneck	Schneider
Bacharach	Erk	Lanham	Schuetz
Bachmann	Eslick	Lankford, Ga.	Seger
Barbour	Estep	Lankford, Va.	Selvig
Beam	Fernandez	Larsen	Shannon
Beedy	Fiesinger	Leavitt	Shott
Black	Finley	Lehlbach	Shreve
Bloom	Fish	Lichtenwalner	Simmons
Bohn	Fishburne	Lindsay	Sinclair
Boileau	Fitzpatrick	Linthicum	Sirovich
Boland	Foss	Lonergan	Smith, Idaho
Bolton	Frear	Loofbourow	Smith, W. Va.
Brand, Ga.	French	Lovette	Snell
Brand, Ohio	Fulbright	Lozier	Snow
Briggs	Fuller	Luce	Somers, N. Y.
Britten	Gambrill	McCormack	Spence
Browning	Garrett	McFadden	Stalker
Brumm	Gasque	McKeown	Steagall
Brunner	Gavagan	McLaughlin	Stewart
Buckbee	Gibson	McLeod	Strong, Pa.
Burdick	Gifford	McMillan	Sullivan, N. Y.
Burtness	Gilchrist	McReynolds	Sutphin
Butler	Golder	Maas	Swank
Campbell, Iowa	Goldsborough	Magrady	Sweeney
Campbell, Pa.	Goodwin	Major	Swick
Carden	Goss	Maloney	Swing
Carley	Granfield	Manlove	Taber
Carter, Calif.	Green	Mansfield	Tarver
Carter, Wyo.	Greenwood	Mapes	Taylor, Colo.
Cary	Gregory	Martin, Oreg.	Temple
Cavicchia	Griffin	May	Thatcher
Celler	Haines	Mead	Thurston
Chavez	Hall, Ill.	Millard	Tierney
Chiperfield	Hall, Miss.	Mitchell	Tilson
Christgau	Hall, N. Dak.	Montet	Treadway
Christopherson	Hancock, N. Y.	Moore, Ky.	Turpin
Clague	Hardy	Nelson, Me.	Underwood
Clancy	Harlan	Nelson, Mo.	Vinson, Ga.
Clarke, N. Y.	Hart	Nelson, Wis.	Vinson, Ky.
Cochran, Mo.	Hartley	Niedringhaus	Watson
Cochran, Pa.	Hastings	Nolan	Welch, Calif.
Cole, Md.	Haugen	Norton, N. J.	Welsh, Pa.
Colton	Hawley	O'Connor	West
Condon	Hess	Oliver, Ala.	White
Connery	Hill, Ala.	Oliver, N. Y.	Whitley
Connolly	Hill, Wash.	Overton	Whittington
Cooke	Holmes	Owen	Wigglesworth
Cooper, Tenn.	Hooper	Palmisano	Williams, Mo.
Coyle	Hopkins	Parker, Ga.	Williams, Tex.
Crail	Howard	Parker, N. Y.	Wilson
Crisp	Hull, William E.	Parks	Wingo
Crosser	Jacobsen	Partridge	Withrow
Crowther	James	Patman	Wolcott
Crump	Johnson, Mo.	Patterson	Wolfenden
Culkin	Johnson, S. Dak.	Peavey	Wolverton
Cullen	Johnson, Tex.	Perkins	Wood, Ga.
Curry	Kading	Person	Woodruff
Dallinger	Karch	Pettengill	Woodrum
Darrow	Keller	Pittenger	Wright
Davenport	Kelly, Ill.	Polk	Wyant
Davis	Kelly, Pa.	Prall	Yates
Delaney	Kemp	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Yon
De Priest	Kennedy	Pratt, Ruth
DeRouen	Kerr	Ramspeck
Dickinson	Ketcham	Rankin

NAYS—98

Andrew, Mass.	Beck	Burch	Chindblom
Ayres	Bland	Busby	Clark, N. C.
Bacon	Blanton	Byrns	Cole, Iowa
Baldrige	Bowman	Cable	Collins
Bankhead	Buchanan	Cannon	Cooper, Ohio
Barton	Bulwinkle	Cartwright	Cox
Cross	Holaday	Milligan	Sparks
Disney	Hope	Mobley	Stafford
Doughton	Horr	Montague	Stevenson
Dowell	Houston, Del.	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Kans.
Drewry	Huddleston	Morehead	Summers, Wash.
Dyer	Hull, Morton D.	Mouser	Sumners, Tex.
Evans, Calif.	Jenkins	Norton, Nebr.	Swanson
Evans, Mont.	Johnson, Okla.	Parsons	Taylor, Tenn.
Flannagan	Johnson, Wash.	Ragon	Thomason
Free	Jones	Rainey	Timberlake
Fulmer	Lewis	Ramseyer	Tinkham
Garber	McClintic, Okla.	Rayburn	Warren
Gilbert	McClintock, Ohio	Reid, Ill.	Wason
Glover	McDuffie	Reilly	Weaver
Guyer	McGugin	Rich	Weeks
Hadley	McSwain	Sandlin	Williamson
Hancock, N. C.	Martin, Mass.	Seiberling	Wood, Ind.
Hoch	Michener	Shallenberger
Hogg, W. Va.	Miller	Smith, Va.

NOT VOTING—36

Abernethy	Dieterich	Hornor	Ludlow
Boehne	Douglas, Ariz.	Igoe	Murphy
Boylan	Drane	Jeffers	Pou
Canfield	Freeman	Johnson, Ill.	Purnell
Chapman	Gillen	Kahn	Sabath
Chase	Griswold	Kendall	Stokes
Collier	Hare	Kleberg	Sullivan, Pa.
Corning	Hogg, Ind.	Larrabee	Tucker
Crowe	Hollister	Lea	Underhill

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. Dieterich (for) with Mr. Chapman (against).
Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Pou (against).
Mr. Hollister (for) with Mr. Kendall (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Douglas of Arizona with Mrs. Kahn.
Mr. Hare with Mr. Stokes.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Underhill.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Griswold.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Jeffers.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Kleberg.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Collier.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN, of Oregon: Strike out all of Title VI, the national defense reorganization act.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 210, nays 187, not voting 34, as follows:

[Roll No. 66]

YEAS—210

Adkins	Carter, Wyo.	Doutrich	Hall, Ill.
Aldrich	Cavicchia	Drewry	Hancock, N. Y.
Allen	Celler	Eaton, Colo.	Hardy
Andrews, N. Y.	Chindblom	Eaton, N. J.	Hartley
Arentz	Chiperfield	Englebright	Haugen
Auf der Heide	Clague	Erk	Hawley
Bacharach	Clancy	Estep	Hess
Bachmann	Clarke, N. Y.	Evans, Calif.	Holmes
Bacon	Cochran, Pa.	Fernandez	Hooper
Baldrige	Cole, Iowa	Finley	Hopkins
Barbour	Cole, Md.	Fish	Horr
Beam	Colton	Fitzpatrick	Houston, Del.
Beck	Connolly	Foss	Hull, William E.
Beedy	Cooke	Free	Jenkins
Black	Coyle	French	Johnson, S. Dak.
Bland	Crail	Gambrill	Johnson, Wash.
Bloom	Crisp	Garber	Kahn
Bohn	Crowther	Gasque	Keller
Boland	Caulkin	Gavagan	Kelly, Ill.
Bolton	Cullen	Gibson	Kelly, Pa.
Briggs	Curry	Gifford	Kennedy
Britten	Dallinger	Golder	Kinzer
Brumm	Darrow	Goldsborough	Kniffin
Brunner	Davenport	Goodwin	Kopp
Burdick	Delaney	Goss	Kurtz
Butler	De Priest	Granfield	Lankford, Va.
Campbell, Pa.	Dickstein	Green	Larsen
Carley	Douglas, Ariz.	Griffin	Leavitt
Carter, Calif.	Douglass, Mass.	Hadley	Lehlbach

Lindsay	Nolan	Seiberling	Tinkham
Linthicum	Norton, N. J.	Shott	Treadway
Lonergan	O'Connor	Shreve	Turpin
Loofbourow	Oliver, N. Y.	Simmons	Underhill
Lovette	Palmisano	Sirovich	Vinson, Ga.
Luce	Parker, Ga.	Smith, Idaho	Wason
McCormack	Parker, N. Y.	Smith, Va.	Watson
McFadden	Partridge	Snell	Weeks
McLaughlin	Patman	Snow	Welch, Calif.
McLeod	Pittenger	Somers, N. Y.	Welsh, Pa.
McMillan	Prall	Stewart	White
Maas	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Stokes	Whitley
Magrady	Pratt, Ruth	Strong, Pa.	Whittington
Manlove	Ramseyer	Sullivan, N. Y.	Wigglesworth
Mapes	Ransley	Summers, Wash.	Wingo
Martin, Mass.	Reed, N. Y.	Sutphin	Wolcott
Martin, Oreg.	Rich	Swanson	Wolfenden
Michener	Rogers, Mass.	Swick	Wolverton
Millard	Rogers, N. H.	Swing	Woodruff
Montague	Rudd	Taber	Wyant
Moore, Ohio	Sanders, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.	Yates
Mouser	Schafer	Temple	Yon
Nelson, Me.	Schuetz	Tilson
Niedringhaus	Seger	Timberlake

NAYS—187

Allgood	Doughton	Kerr	Ragon
Almon	Dowell	Ketcham	Rainey
Amlie	Doxey	Knutson	Ramspeck
Andresen	Driver	Kunz	Rankin
Andrew, Mass.	Dyer	Kvale	Rayburn
Arnold	Elzey	LaGuardia	Reid, Ill.
Ayres	Eslick	Lambertson	Reilly
Bankhead	Evans, Mont.	Lambeth	Robinson
Barton	Fiesinger	Lamneck	Romjue
Blanton	Fishburne	Lanham	Sanders, Tex.
Boileau	Flannagan	Lankford, Ga.	Sandlin
Bowman	Frear	Lewis	Schneider
Brand, Ga.	Fulbright	Lichtenwalner	Selvig
Brand, Ohio	Fuller	Lozier	Shallenberger
Browning	Fulmer	McClintic, Okla.	Shannon
Buchanan	Garrett	McClintock, Ohio	Sinclair
Bulwinkle	Gilbert	McDuffie	Smith, W. Va.
Burch	Gilchrist	McGugin	Sparks
Burtness	Glover	McKeown	Spence
Busby	Greenwood	McReynolds	Stafford
Byrns	Gregory	McSwain	Stalker
Cable	Guyer	Major	Steagall
Campbell, Iowa	Haines	Maloney	Stevenson
Cannon	Hall, Miss.	Mansfield	Strong, Kans.
Carden	Hall, N. Dak.	May	Sumners, Tex.
Cartwright	Hancock, N. C.	Mead	Swank
Cary	Harlan	Miller	Sweeney
Chavez	Hart	Mitchell	Tarver
Christgau	Hastings	Milligan	Taylor, Tenn.
Christopherson	Hill, Ala.	Mobley	Thomason
Clark, N. C.	Hill, Wash.	Montet	Thurston
Cochran, Mo.	Hoch	Moore, Ky.	Tierney
Collins	Hogg, W. Va.	Morehead	Underwood
Condon	Holaday	Nelson, Mo.	Vinson, Ky.
Connery	Hope	Nelson, Wis.	Warren
Cooper, Ohio	Howard	Norton, Nebr.	Weaver
Cooper, Tenn.	Huddleston	Oliver, Ala.	West
Cox	Hull, Morton D.	Overton	Williams, Mo.
Cross	Jacobsen	Owen	Williams, Tex.
Crosser	James	Parks	Williamson
Crump	Johnson, Mo.	Parsons	Wilson
Davis	Johnson, Okla.	Patterson	Withrow
DeRouen	Johnson, Tex.	Peavey	Wood, Ga.
Dickinson	Jones	Perkins	Wood, Ind.
Dies	Kading	Person	Woodrum
Disney	Karch	Pettengill	Wright
Dominick	Kemp	Polk

NOT VOTING—34

Abernethy	Crowe	Hornor	Murphy
Boehne	Dieterich	Igoe	Pou
Boylan	Drane	Jeffers	Purnell
Buckbee	Freeman	Johnson, Ill.	Sabath
Canfield	Gillen	Kendall	Sullivan, Pa.
Chapman	Griswold	Kleberg	Thatcher
Chase	Hare	Larrabee	Tucker
Collier	Hogg, Ind.	Lea
Corning	Hollister	Ludlow

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Hollister (for) with Mr. Chapman (against).
Mr. Boylan (for) with Mr. Pou (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Griswold.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Jeffers.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Kleberg.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Drane.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Collier.
Mr. Hare with Mr. Thatcher.
Mr. Dieterich with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Buckbee.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: Strike out all of Title IX, consisting of sections 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, and 910.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the committee amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY and Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 203, noes 42.

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet seeking recognition. Under the practice of the House is not the minority entitled to first recognition? I demand such recognition.

The SPEAKER. This is a special rule giving the right to make two motions to recommit. In the opinion of the Chair those in control of the bill should have the right to submit the first motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, when was any decision ever made that those in control of a bill would have the right to submit the first motion to recommit? Generally those in control of a bill do not submit a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. They certainly have that right under this rule.

Mr. SNELL. But the motion to recommit is an entirely different proposition, and the ruling of the Speaker would foreclose the minority from having its rights with respect to such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the minority has that right at all. The rule of the House of Representatives since the present occupant of the chair has been a Member of it has been that in case a motion to recommit is desired to be made, the Members in charge of the bill, if the bill has been amended so they can not support it, in the order of their seniority are recognized to submit a motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. I am very sorry I have to disagree with the distinguished Speaker. That is not my understanding of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the Chair will permit, the Speaker made that announcement when this rule was first offered and there was no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly that is the spirit of the rule.

Mr. SNELL. I do not agree with the ruling of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McDUFFIE offers the following motion to recommit: I move to recommit the bill H. R. 11267 to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out of section 102 (a) of the Economy Committee amendment the following: " Compensation at an annual rate of $1,000 or less shall be exempt from reduction, and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $1,000 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Compensation at an annual rate of $2,000 or more shall be reduced by 10 per cent, but this subsection shall not reduce below $2,000 any rate of compensation of $2,000 or more."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit submits this bill to the Committee on Appropriations, when the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction over the subject matter contained in the amendment which the motion seeks to amend.

The SPEAKER. The rule authorizing consideration of this amendment gives the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, the rule permits two motions to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. If the motion which has been offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] fixing the exemption at $2,000, should fail, then would it be in order to offer the staggering plan or the furlough plan with a $2,000 exemption?

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference whether the motion fails or not, they have the right to submit two motions to recommit.

Mr. MICHENER. And recommit the bill twice?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; that is what the rule provides. As the Chair construes this rule, if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] is carried, there would still be opportunity for another motion to recommit.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, if that is true and if the McDuffie motion carries, the bill is then recommitted forthwith to the committee, there is nothing before the House, and what in the world are we going to recommit after that has been done?

The SPEAKER. It may be the House will want to strike out something else.

Mr. CRISP. If the Chair will permit, if the McDuffie motion prevails, the bill will be immediately reported back to the House with the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; and another motion to recommit with respect to some other part of the bill would be in order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] asked a question and the Chair proceeded to answer it, but in the premise of his answer the Chair stated that this motion to recommit involved an exemption, which it does not contain. I would like the Chair to inform the House properly as to what the amendment does and show that there is no exemption mentioned in the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can request the Clerk to read the motion to recommit once more if the membership wants that done. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the motion to recommit. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk again reported the motion to recommit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. This motion to recommit presupposes that there is something in the bill that is not in it. How can this House vote to substitute something for the $1,000 provision when that item has been stricken from the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DE PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Those that are in favor of this bill as is, or as amended in committee, will vote "no"?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 226, not voting 38, as follows:

[Roll No. 67]

YEAS—167

Allgood	Douglas, Ariz.	Johnson, Mo.	Rich
Andresen	Dowell	Johnson, Tex.	Robinson
Andrews, N. Y.	Doxey	Jones	Romjue
Arnold	Drewry	Ketcham	Sanders, Tex.
Ayres	Driver	Kniffin	Selberling
Bacharach	Ellzey	Knutson	Shallenberger
Baldrige	Eslick	Kopp	Simmons
Bankhead	Evans, Calif.	Lambeth	Smith, W. Va.
Barton	Fiesinger	Lanham	Sparks
Beck	Fish	Lozier	Stafford
Bland	Fishburne	McClintic, Okla.	Stalker
Blanton	Flannagan	McDuffie	Steagall
Bohn	Frear	McGugin	Stevenson
Brand, Ga.	Free	McKeown	Stokes
Brand, Ohio.	French	McMillan	Strong, Kans.
Briggs	Fulbright	McSwain	Strong, Pa.
Buchanan	Fulmer	Mansfield	Sumners, Tex.
Bulwinkle	Garber	Mapes	Swank
Burch	Garrett	Martin, Oreg.	Swanson
Burtness	Gilbert	May	Taber
Busby	Gilchrist	Miller	Tarver
Byrns	Glover	Milligan	Taylor, Colo.
Cable	Green	Mitchell	Thatcher
Campbell, Iowa	Gregory	Mobley	Thomason
Cannon	Guyer	Montague	Thurston
Carden	Haines	Montet	Tilson
Cary	Hall, Miss.	Moore, Ohio	Underhill
Clague	Hall, N. Dak.	Morehead	Vinson, Ga.
Clark, N. C.	Hancock, N. Y.	Nelson, Mo.	Vinson, Ky.
Cole, Iowa	Hancock, N. C.	Norton, Nebr.	Warren
Collins	Hart	Oliver, Ala.	Weaver
Cooper, Ohio	Hastings	Overton	Weeks
Cox	Haugen	Owen	West
Crisp	Hoch	Parker, Ga.	White
Cross	Holaday	Parks	Whittington
Crump	Holmes	Parsons	Williams, Mo.
Davis	Hooper	Patman	Wood, Ga.
DeRouen	Hope	Polk	Wood, Ind.
Dickinson	Howard	Rainey	Woodrum
Dies	Huddleston	Rankin	Wright
Dominick	Hull, Morton D.	Rayburn	Yon
Doughton	Jenkins	Reilly

NAYS—226

Adkins	Cullen	Johnson, Wash.	Oliver, N. Y.
Aldrich	Curry	Kading	Palmisano
Allen	Dallinger	Kahn	Parker, N. Y.
Almon	Darrow	Karch	Partridge
Amlie	Davenport	Keller	Patterson
Andrew, Mass.	Delaney	Kelly, Ill.	Peavey
Arentz	De Priest	Kelly, Pa.	Perkins
Auf der Heide	Dickstein	Kemp	Person
Bachmann	Disney	Kennedy	Pettengill
Bacon	Douglass, Mass.	Kerr	Pittenger
Barbour	Doutrich	Kinzer	Prall
Beam	Dyer	Kunz	Pratt, Harcourt, J.
Beedy	Eaton, Colo.	Kurtz	Pratt, Ruth
Black	Eaton, N. J.	Kvale	Ragon
Bloom	Englebright	LaGuardia	Ramseyer
Boileau	Erk	Lambertson	Ramspeck
Boland	Estep	Lamneck	Ransley
Bolton	Fernandez	Lankford, Ga.	Reed, N. Y.
Bowman	Finley	Lankford, Va.	Reid, Ill.
Britten	Fitzpatrick	Larsen	Rogers, Mass.
Browning	Foss	Leavitt	Rogers, N. H.
Brumm	Fuller	Lehlbach	Rudd
Brunner	Gambrill	Lichtenwalner	Sanders, N. Y.
Buckbee	Gasque	Lindsay	Sandlin
Burdick	Gavagan	Linthicum	Schafer
Butler	Gibson	Lonergan	Schneider
Campbell, Pa.	Gifford	Loofbourow	Schuetz
Carley	Golder	Lovette	Seger
Carter, Wyo.	Goldsborough	Luce	Selvig
Cartwright	Goodwin	McClintock, Ohio	Shannon
Cavicchia	Goss	McCormack	Shott
Celler	Granfield	McFadden	Shreve
Chavez	Greenwood	McLaughlin	Sinclair
Chindblom	Griffin	McLeod	Sirovich
Chiperfield	Hadley	McReynolds	Smith, Idaho
Christgau	Hall, Ill.	Maas	Smith, Va.
Christopherson	Hardy	Magrady	Snell
Clancy	Harlan	Major	Snow
Clarke, N. Y.	Hartley	Maloney	Somers, N. Y.
Cochran, Mo.	Hawley	Manlove	Spence
Cole, Md.	Hess	Martin, Mass.	Stewart
Colton	Hill, Ala.	Mead	Sullivan, N. Y.
Condon	Hill, Wash.	Michener	Summers, Wash.
Connery	Hogg, W. Va.	Millard	Sutphin
Connolly	Hopkins	Moore, Ky.	Sweeney
Cooke	Horr	Mouser	Swick
Cooper, Tenn.	Houston, Del.	Nelson, Me.	Swing
Coyle	Hull, William E.	Nelson, Wis.	Taylor, Tenn.
Crail	Jacobsen	Niedringhaus	Temple
Crosser	James	Nolan	Tierney
Crowther	Johnson, Okla.	Norton, N. J.	Timberlake
Culkin	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Connor	Tinkham

Treadway	Welch, Calif.	Williamson	Wolfenden
Turpin	Welsh, Pa.	Wilson	Wolverton
Underwood	Whitley	Wingo	Wyant
Wason	Wigglesworth	Withrow
Watson	Williams, Tex.	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—38

Abernethy	Crowe	Hornor	Murphy
Boehne	Dieterich	Igoe	Pou
Boylan	Drane	Jeffers	Purnell
Canfield	Evans, Mont.	Johnson, Ill.	Sabath
Carter, Calif.	Freeman	Kendall	Sullivan, Pa.
Chapman	Gillen	Kleberg	Tucker
Chase	Griswold	Larrabee	Woodruff
Cochran, Pa.	Hare	Lea	Yates
Collier	Hogg, Ind.	Lewis
Corning	Hollister	Ludlow

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The following pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. Pou (for) with Mr. Boylan (against).
Mr. Chapman (for) with Mr. Larrabee (against).
Mr. Crowe (for) with Mr. Dieterich (against).
Mr. Hare (for) with Mr. Yates (against).
Mr. Canfield (for) with Mr. Griswold (against).
Mr. Hollister (for) with Mr. Ludlow (against).
Mr. Tucker (for) with Mr. Freeman (against).
Mr. Collier (for) with Mr. Kendall (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Wyant.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Carter of California.
Mr. Lewis with Mr. Cochran of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Woodruff.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Igoe.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. HARE, was called to the hospital on account of the illness of his wife. If present, he would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I present the following motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill, H. R. 11267, to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to that committee to report it back forthwith with the following amendments:

1. Strike out sections 101 to 104, both inclusive, of the Economy Committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE I—FURLOUGH OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

"FURLOUGH PROVISIONS

"SEC. 101. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933:

"(a) The days of work of a per diem officer or employee receiving compensation at a rate which is equivalent to more than $2,000 per annum shall not exceed 5 in any one week, and the compensation for 5 days shall be ten-elevenths of that payable for a week's work of 5½ days: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as modifying the method of fixing the daily rate of compensation of per diem officers or employees as now authorized by law: Provided further, That where the nature of the duties of a per diem officer or employee render it advisable the provisions of subsection (b) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection.

"(b) Each officer or employee receiving compensation on an annual basis at the rate of more than $2,000 per annum shall be furloughed without compensation for one calendar month, or for such periods as shall in the aggregate be equivalent to one calendar month, for which latter purpose 24 working days (counting Saturday as one-half day) shall be considered as the equivalent of one calendar month: Provided, That where the nature of the duties of any such officer or employee render it advisable the provisions of subsection (a) may be applied in lieu of the provisions of this subsection.

"(c) The compensation paid any officer or employee to whom this section applies shall, notwithstanding the provisions of this section, be an amount not less than an amount calculated at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

"SEC. 102. No officer or employee shall be exempted from the provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of section 101 except in those cases where the public service requires that the position be continuously filled and a suitable substitute can not be provided, and then only when authorized or approved in writing by the President of the United States.

"SEC. 103. All rights now conferred or authorized to be conferred by law upon any officer or employee (whose compensation is at a rate of more than $2,000 per annum) to receive annual leave of absence with pay are hereby suspended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 104. When used in sections 101, 102, and 103 of this act:

"(a) The terms 'officer' and 'employee' mean any person rendering services in or under any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia, but do not include (1) officers whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished during their continuance in office; (2) Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners; (3) officers and employees on the rolls of the Senate and House of Representatives; (4) carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service; (5) policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia; and (6) commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), members of the International Joint Commission, United States section, or members of the Board of Mediation.

"(b) The term 'compensation' means any salary, pay, wage, allowance (except allowances for subsistence, quarters, heat, light, and travel), or other emolument paid for services rendered, but does not include (1) retired pay included within section 106; (2) payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of officers or employees; (3) compensation the amount of which is expressly fixed by international agreement; or (4) compensation paid under the terms of any contract in effect on the date of the enactment of this act if such compensation may not lawfully be reduced.

"COMPENSATION REDUCTIONS IN SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

"SEC. 105. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933:

"(a) The salaries of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners are reduced by 10 per cent.

"(b) The allowance for clerk hire of Representatives in Congress, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners is reduced by 8.3 per cent.

"(c) The rate of compensation of any person on the rolls of the Senate or of the House of Representatives (other than persons included within subsection (a)), if such compensation is at a rate of more than $2,000 per annum, is reduced by 8.3 per cent. This subsection shall not apply to session employees or to persons whose compensation is paid out of sums appropriated for clerk hire of Representatives in Congress, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners. As used in this subsection the term "compensation" shall have the meaning assigned to such term in section 104 (b).

"(d) This section shall not reduce below $2,000 per annum the rate of compensation of any person to whom this section applies.

"RETIRED PAY

"SEC. 106. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the retired pay of judges and the retired pay of all commissioned, warrant, enlisted, and other personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Lighthouse Service, and the Public Health Service, if such retired pay is at a rate of more than $2,000 per annum, shall be reduced by 8.3 per cent. This section shall not reduce below $2,000 per annum the rate of retired pay of any person to whom this section applies.

"RURAL CARRIERS' EQUIPMENT ALLOWANCE

"SEC. 107. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, payments for equipment maintenance to carriers in the Rural Mail Delivery Service shall be three-eighths of the amount now provided by law.

"GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

"SEC. 108. In the case of a corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, the holders of the stock on behalf of the United States, or such persons as represent the interest of the United States in such corporation, shall take such action as may be necessary to apply the provisions of sections 101, 102, and 103 to offices, positions, and employments under such corporation and to officers and employees thereof."

2. Strike out all of section 207 of the Economy Committee amendment.

Mr. RAMSEYER. On that, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recommit.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 250, not voting 35, as follows:

[Roll No. 68]

YEAS—146

Adkins	Barbour	Clague	Darrow
Aldrich	Beedy	Clancy	Davenport
Allen	Bohn	Clarke, N. Y.	Douglas, Ariz.
Andresen	Bolton	Cole, Iowa	Dyer
Andrew, Mass.	Bowman	Colton	Eaton, Colo.
Andrews, N. Y.	Bulwinkle	Cooper, Ohio	Eaton, N. J.
Arentz	Burtness	Cox	Englebright
Ayres	Butler	Coyle	Evans, Calif.
Bacharach	Cable	Crail	Evans, Mont.
Bachmann	Chindblom	Crowther	Finley
Bacon	Chiperfield	Culkin	Fish
Baldrige	Christopherson	Dallinger	Foss

Frear	Jenkins	Parker, N. Y.	Swick
Free	Johnson, S. Dak.	Parsons	Taber
French	Johnson, Wash.	Perkins	Taylor, Colo.
Garber	Ketcham	Pittenger	Taylor, Tenn.
Gibson	Knutson	Polk	Temple
Gifford	Lankford, Va.	Pratt	Thatcher
Gilbert	Leavitt	Pratt, Mrs.	Tilson
Guyer	Lehlbach	Ramseyer	Timberlake.
Hadley	Lewis	Reed, N. Y.	Tinkham
Hall, Ill.	Loofbourow	Rich	Treadway
Hall, N. Dak.	Luce	Rogers, Mrs.	Underhill
Hancock, N. Y.	McClintock, Ohio	Seiberling	Wason
Hardy	McGugin	Shallenberger	Weeks
Hawley	McLaughlin	Shott	White
Hess	McLeod	Simmons	Whitley
Hoch	Magrady	Smith, Idaho	Whittington
Hogg, W. Va.	Manlove	Snell	Wigglesworth
Holaday	Mapes	Sparks	Williamson
Hooper	Martin, Mass.	Stafford	Wolfenden
Hope	Michener	Stalker	Wood, Ind.
Hopkins	Millard	Stokes	Woodruff
Houston, Del.	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Kans.	Woodrum
Howard	Morehead	Strong, Pa.	Yates
Hull, Morton D.	Norton	Summers, Wash.
Hull, William E.	Oliver, Ala.	Swanson

NAYS—250

Allgood	Doughton	Kniffin	Ramspeck
Almon	Douglass, Mass.	Kopp	Rankin
Amlie	Doutrich	Kunz	Ransley
Arnold	Dowell	Kurtz	Rayburn
Auf der Heide	Doxey	Kvale	Reid, Ill.
Bankhead	Drewry	LaGuardia	Reilly
Barton	Driver	Lambertson	Robinson
Beam	Ellzey	Lambeth	Rogers
Black	Erk	Lamneck	Romjue
Bland	Eslick	Lanham	Rudd
Blanton	Estep	Lankford, Ga.	Sanders, N. Y.
Bloom	Fernandez	Larsen	Sanders, Tex.
Boileau	Fiesinger	Lichtenwalner	Sandlin
Boland	Fishburne	Lindsay	Schafer
Brand, Ga.	Fitzpatrick	Linthicum	Schneider
Brand, Ohio	Flannagan	Lonergan	Schuetz
Briggs	Fulbright	Lovette	Seger
Britten	Fuller	Lozier	Selvig
Browning	Fulmer	McClintic, Okla.	Shannon
Brumm	Gambrill	McCormack	Shreve
Brunner	Garrett	McDuffie	Sinclair
Buchanan	Gasque	McFadden	Sirovich
Buckbee	Gavagan	McKeown	Smith, Va.
Burch	Gilchrist	McMillan	Smith, W. Va.
Burdick	Glover	McReynolds	Snow
Busby	Golder	McSwain	Somers, N. Y.
Byrns	Goldsborough	Maas	Spence
Campbell, Iowa	Goodwin	Major	Steagall
Campbell, Pa.	Goss	Maloney	Stevenson
Cannon	Granfield	Mansfield	Stewart
Carden	Green	Martin, Oreg.	Sullivan, N. Y.
Carley	Greenwood	May	Sumners, Tex.
Carter, Wyo.	Gregory	Mead	Sutphin
Cartwright	Griffin	Miller	Swank
Cary	Haines	Milligan	Sweeney
Cavicchia	Hall, Miss.	Mitchell	Swing
Celler	Hancock, N. C.	Mobley	Tarver
Chavez	Harlan	Montague	Thomason
Christgau	Hart	Montet	Thurston
Clark, N. C.	Hartley	Moore, Ky.	Tierney
Cochran, Mo.	Hastings	Mouser	Turpin
Cochran, Pa.	Haugen	Nelson, Me.	Underwood
Cole, Md.	Hill, Ala.	Nelson, Mo.	Vinson, Ga.
Collins	Hill, Wash.	Nelson, Wis.	Vinson, Ky.
Condon	Holmes	Niedringhaus	Warren
Connery	Horr	Nolan	Watson
Connolly	Huddleston	Norton, Mrs.	Weaver
Cooke	Jacobsen	O'Connor	Welch, Calif.
Cooper, Tenn.	James	Oliver, N. Y.	Welsh, Pa.
Crisp	Johnson, Mo.	Overton	West
Cross	Johnson, Okla.	Owen	Williams, Mo.
Crosser	Johnson, Tex.	Palmisano	Williams, Tex.
Crump	Jones	Parker, Ga.	Wilson
Cullen	Kading	Parks	Wingo
Curry	Kahn	Partridge	Withrow
Davis	Karch	Patman	Wolcott
Delaney	Keller	Patterson	Wolverton
De Priest	Kelly, Ill.	Peavey	Wood, Ga.
DeRouen	Kelly, Pa.	Person	Wright
Dickinson	Kemp	Pettengill	Wyant
Dickstein	Kennedy	Prall	Yon
Dies	Kerr	Ragon
Dominick	Kinzer	Rainey

NOT VOTING—35

Abernethy	Corning	Hogg, Ind.	Lea
Beck	Crowe	Hollister	Ludlow
Boehne	Dieterich	Hornor	Murphy
Boylan	Disney	Igoe	Pou
Canfield	Drane	Jeffers	Purnell
Carter, Calif.	Freeman	Johnson, Ill.	Sabath
Chapman	Gillen	Kendall	Sullivan, Pa.
Chase	Griswold	Kleberg	Tucker
Collier	Hare	Larrabee

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Hollister (for) with Mr. Boylan (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Carter of California.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Griswold.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Beck.
Mr. Pou with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Dieterich with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Disney.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Hare.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Ludlow.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Tucker.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Collier.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 316, nays 67, not voting 48, as follows:

[Roll No. 69]

YEAS—316

Adkins	Dies	Jacobsen	Parsons
Aldrich	Disney	Jenkins	Partridge
Allen	Dominick	Johnson, Mo.	Patman
Allgood	Doughton	Johnson, Okla.	Patterson
Almon	Douglas, Ariz.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Perkins
Andresen	Doutrich	Johnson, Tex.	Person
Andrew, Mass.	Dowell	Johnson, Wash.	Pettengill
Andrews, N. Y.	Doxey	Jones	Pittenger
Arentz	Drewry	Kahn	Polk
Arnold	Driver	Kemp	Pratt, Harcourt J.
Ayres	Dyer	Kerr	Ragon
Bacharach	Eaton, N. J.	Ketcham	Rainey
Bachmann	Ellzey	Kinzer	Ramspeck
Bacon	Englebright	Kniffin	Rankin
Baldrige	Eslick	Kopp	Rayburn
Bankhead	Estep	Kurtz	Reed, N. Y.
Barbour	Evans, Calif.	Lambertson	Reilly
Barton	Evans, Mont.	Lambeth	Rich
Beedy	Fernandez	Lanham	Robinson
Bland	Fiesinger	Lankford, Ga.	Rogers, Mass.
Blanton	Finley	Lankford, Va.	Rogers, N. H.
Bohn	Fish	Larsen	Romjue
Bolton	Fishburne	Leavitt	Sanders, N. Y.
Bowman	Flannagan	Lehlbach	Sanders, Tex.
Brand, Ga.	Foss	Lichtenwalner	Sandlin
Briggs	Frear	Linthicum	Seger
Britten	Free	Lonergan	Seiberling
Browning	French	Lovette	Selvig
Buchanan	Fulbright	Lozier	Shallenberger
Bulwinkle	Fuller	Luce	Shannon
Burch	Fulmer	McClintic, Okla.	Shott
Burtness	Gambrill	McClintock, Ohio	Shreve
Busby	Garber	McGugin	Simmons
Butler	Gasque	McKeown	Smith, Idaho
Byrns	Gibson	McLaughlin	Smith, W. Va.
Cable	Gifford	McLeod	Snell
Campbell, Iowa	Gilbert	McMillan	Snow
Cannon	Gilchrist	McReynolds	Sparks
Carden	Glover	McSwain	Spence
Cary	Goldsborough	Magrady	Stafford
Cavicchia	Goodwin	Major	Stalker
Celler	Granfield	Maloney	Steagall
Chavez	Green	Manlove	Stevenson
Chindblom	Greenwood	Mansfield	Stewart
Christgau	Gregory	Mapes	Stokes
Christopherson	Griffin	Martin, Mass.	Strong, Kans.
Clague	Guyer	Martin, Oreg.	Strong, Pa.
Clancy	Hadley	May	Summers, Wash.
Clark, N. C.	Haines	Michener	Sumners, Tex.
Clarke, N. Y.	Hall, Ill.	Millard	Sutphin
Cochran, Mo.	Hall, Miss.	Miller	Swank
Cochran, Pa	Hall, N. Dak.	Milligan	Swanson
Cole, Iowa	Hancock, N. Y.	Mitchell	Swick
Cole, Md.	Hardy	Mobley	Swing
Collins	Harlan	Montague	Taber
Colton	Hart	Montet	Tarver
Cooke	Hartley	Moore, Ky.	Taylor, Colo.
Cooper, Ohio	Hastings	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Tenn.
Cooper, Tenn.	Haugen	Morehead	Temple
Cox	Hawley	Mouser	Thatcher
Crail	Hess	Nelson, Me.	Thomason
Cross	Hill, Ala.	Nelson, Mo.	Thurston
Crowther	Hill, Wash.	Niedringhaus	Tierney
Crump	Hoch	Nolan	Tilson
Culkin	Hogg, W. Va.	Norton, Nebr.	Timberlake
Curry	Holaday	Oliver, Ala.	Tinkham
Dallinger	Holmes	Oliver, N. Y.	Treadway
Darrow	Hooper	Overton	Turpin
Davenport	Hope	Owen	Underhill
Davis	Hopkins	Palmisano	Underwood
De Priest	Houston, Del.	Parker, Ga.	Vinson, Ga.
DeRouen	Howard	Parker, N. Y.	Vinson, Ky.
Dickinson	Huddleston	Parks	Warren

Wason	White	Wilson	Woodruff
Watson	Whitley	Wingo	Woodrum
Weaver	Whittington	Wolfenden	Wright
Weeks	Wigglesworth	Wolverton	Wyant
Welsh, Pa.	Williams, Mo.	Wood, Ga.	Yates
West	Williams, Tex.	Wood, Ind.	Yon

NAYS—67

Amlie	Crosser	Keller	Peavey
Auf der Heide	Cullen	Kelly, Ill.	Prall
Beam	Delaney	Kelly, Pa.	Reid, Ill.
Black	Dickstein	Kennedy	Rudd
Bloom	Douglass, Mass.	Knutson	Schafer
Boileau	Eaton, Colo.	Kunz	Schneider
Boland	Erk	Kvale	Schuetz
Brumm	Fitzpatrick	LaGuardia	Sinclair
Brunner	Gavagan	Lamneck	Sirovich
Buckbee	Golder	Lindsay	Smith, Va.
Campbell, Pa.	Goss	Loofbourow	Somers, N. Y.
Carley	Hancock, N. C.	McDuffie	Sullivan, N. Y.
Carter, Wyo.	Horr	Maas	Sweeney
Condon	Hull, William E.	Mead	Welch, Calif.
Connery	James	Nelson, Wis.	Withrow
Connolly	Kading	Norton, N. J.	Wolcott
Coyle	Karch	O'Connor

NOT VOTING—48

Abernethy	Collier	Hollister	McCormack
Beck	Corning	Hornor	McFadden
Boehne	Crisp	Hull, Morton D.	Murphy
Boylan	Crowe	Igoe	Pou
Brand, Ohio	Dieterich	Jeffers	Pratt, Ruth
Burdick	Drane	Johnson, Ill.	Purnell
Canfield	Freeman	Kendall	Ramseyer
Carter, Calif.	Garrett	Kleberg	Ransley
Cartwright	Gillen	Larrabee	Sabath
Chapman	Griswold	Lea	Sullivan, Pa.
Chase	Hare	Lewis	Tucker
Chiperfield	Hogg, Ind.	Ludlow	Williamson

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Chapman (for) with Mr. Boylan (against).
Mr. Canfield (for) with Mr. Griswold (against).
Mr. Tucker (for) with Mr. McFadden (against).

General pairs:

Mr. Gillen with Mr. Purnell.
Mr. Sabath with Mr. Chase.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Murphy.
Mr. Boehne with Mr. Sullivan of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Kleberg with Mr. Carter of California.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mr. Lea with Mr. Johnson of Illinois.
Mr. Corning with Mr. Beck.
Mr. Pou with Mr. Freeman.
Mr. Dieterich with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Crisp with Mr. Chiperfield.
Mr. Garrett with Mr. Hollister.
Mr. Lewis with Mrs. Pratt.
Mr. McCormick with Mr. Ramseyer.
Mr. Cartwright with Mr. Burdick.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Morton D. Hull.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Williamson.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. Ransley.
Mr. Crowe with Mr. Brand of Ohio.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Igoe.
Mr. Hare with Mr. Collier.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk of the House be authorized to make such clerical changes in the numbers and letters designating various portions of Part II of the bill as may be necessary to proper numbering and lettering and proper cross reference, and that the Clerk be authorized to insert after the enacting clause the words "Part I, section 1."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STEVENSON, for one week, on account of important business.

FINANCIAL RELATIONS OF THE FEDERAL AND STATE GOVERNMENTS

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD to include a paper read by Secretary of the Treasury Mills before the Association of the Bar of the City of New York on the 29th day of April, 1932, on the financial relations of the Federal and State Governments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

I

Taxation in this country has become a matter of dominant national importance. The aggregate tax burden is so great as to constitute an economic factor of such prime importance as to affect directly or indirectly almost every sphere of public and private activity.

In 1930, according to a study just completed by the National Industrial Conference Board, the taxes collected by the Federal, State, and local governments reached the staggering sum of $10,266,000,000, amounting to 14.4 per cent, or one-seventh, of the estimated national income of seventy-one billions for that year. The increase in total tax collections between 1923 and 1930 was 42 per cent. Part of this increase may be explained, of course, by the growth in population, but even on a per capita basis the increase during that 7-year period was 28.5 per cent; and converting the per capita tax payments into dollars of the same purchasing power, the increase was nearly 50 per cent (49.8 per cent).

Take, for instance, our largest tax, the property tax. According to the study which I have mentioned, property taxes in 1929 accounted for more than 76 per cent of the total State and local taxes and over 50 per cent of the total taxes collected by all jurisdictions. Some idea of the menacing pace at which the burden of this tax has been advancing may be gathered from the following statement by the committee on taxation of the President's Conference on Home Building and Home Ownership:

"Tax rates upon real estate. The burden imposed by the property tax upon real estate is nearly everywhere heavy, and in many communities destructive. In 1910 the average rate of the general property taxes imposed by cities having more than 30,000 inhabitants was 18.9 mills on the assessed valuation. This average rate rose to 20.2 mills in 1918 and to 27 mills in 1928. In addition, State taxes (averaging 2 mills) were collected in the majority, county taxes (averaging 5.9 mills) in a large number, and special taxes (average 1.2 mills) in a very small number of these cities. While no weighted general average covering State, county, city, and special levies can be accurately computed, it is highly probable that this general average exceeds 30 mills for the year 1931. Approximately half of the taxpayers are above the average; that is, pay more than 30 mills at the present time. It is among those taxpayers that the hardship is greatest. In general, property is still assessed at less than full value. But in millions of cases to-day the assessed value equals or exceeds the actual market value. Such properties are paying to the State and local governments an annual average rate which frequently exceeds 3 per cent upon their full capital value.

"A useful measure of the burden of the property tax is found in the proportion of rental income (before taxes) taken by the tax. The results of studies of urban property taxes in nine States are thus summarized by Whitney Coombs in his Taxes on Farm Property (p. 32): Arkansas (1923–1925), 17.1 per cent; Colorado (1926), 27.1 per cent; Indiana (1922–23), 30.6 per cent; Iowa (1927), 31.3 per cent; North Carolina (1927), 29.5 per cent; Pennsylvania (1924–25), 20.9 per cent; South Dakota (1922–1926), 29.9 per cent; Virginia (1926), 16 per cent; Washington (1924–1926), 31.7 per cent."

Speaking of financial conditions in the States and cities, this committee concluded that "the present situation is characterized by excessive public spending, excessive reliance by local governments on the property tax, and by excessive concentration of the property tax on real estate." This last factor—the excessive concentration of the property tax on real estate—is itself responsible for a major social evil. It "discourages and materially restricts home ownership," while it creates a tax load which bears with crushing weight upon the debt-ridden farm owners.

I quote from an address before the 1931 Conference of National Tax Association by Dr. Eric Englund, assistant chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics:

"Studies in several States from 1922 to 1927 showed that real-estate taxes took an average of about one-third of the net rent of farms. Judging by the trends of farm prices and of farm taxes since that period, the ratio of taxes to net rent in the past year, no doubt, was much higher, taxes probably absorbing the whole rent in the case of a substantial portion of the farms, especially in regions of higher tax levies."

Of course, the people are in large measure themselves to blame. They have not only tolerated but given encouragement to an ever-expanding cost of government. The spenders were the ones elected to office; and bond issues voted with cheerful alacrity. It is true that President Coolidge succeeded in dramatizing economy, but I remember in our State when Governor Miller, under the urging of the electorate, resumed the practice of law, it was openly said that economy in government would not be a successful issue in New York State in many a year. And it hasn't been. Not only are our taxes too high but if we view our Federal, State, and local taxes as a whole, we do not find anything that faintly resembles a logical and coordinated plan, but rather a number of unrelated systems, frequently overlapping and existing in a state of confusion that gives rise to all manner of maladjustments, duplications, and irregularities.

II

There is a growing conviction, which I share, that the time has ceased when the Federal and State Governments may safely chart separate and unrelated courses over the troubled financial waters which they must now all traverse. The time for drifting has passed. The time for considerate and conscious coordination has arrived.

The Federal Constitution segregates in rudimentary and imperfect fashion a few of the sources of Federal and State taxation. In practical effect it prevents the Federal Government from imposing property and poll taxes, and denies the States, without the consent of the Congress at least, power to levy taxes upon imports and exports or to burden interstate commerce by direct taxation. But here, practically, separation of sources stops and joint use begins. Both State and Federal Governments may, at one and the same time, tax incomes, sales, production, consumption, privileges, and the transfer or inheritance of property.

While this concurrent power over taxation has been enjoyed by both the State and the Federal Governments since the birth of the Nation (except with respect to the income tax, which was not conclusively brought within the Federal powers until the adoption of the sixteenth amendment), it created no serious difficulties until recent years. During most of our history, the main sources of revenue used respectively by the States and by the Federal Government were distinct and separate. In the period between the War of 1812 and the Civil War, the Federal Government derived its revenue almost wholly from duties on imports, while the States relied almost entirely upon the property tax.

During the Civil War and the period immediately following that conflict the Federal Government was compelled to utilize additional sources of revenue, such as income, inheritance, sales, and miscellaneous excise taxes. But by 1883 these additional taxes, except for the taxes upon tobacco and liquor, had been discarded, and until the end of the first decade of this century customs and tobacco and liquor taxes furnished practically all the tax revenue received by the Federal Government. Meanwhile the State and local governments continued to rely primarily on the property tax, although they made increasing use of corporation taxes, licenses, and death duties. Until about 1910, however, each department of government gave free steerageway to the other. Conflicts of jurisdiction arose and gave rise to important interpretations of our constitutional law. But neither department of government exercised its taxing powers so as seriously to embarrass the other.

Since 1910 the picture has materially changed. Pressure for additional revenue has forced the States and the Federal Government to bear heavily upon the same sources of revenue. The Federal Government adopted a full-fledged income tax in 1913, an estate tax in 1916, and it seems plain that as a consequence of the World War and changed economic conditions it must continue to occupy, though not necessarily to the exclusion of the States, this field of taxes upon wealth and income—a field which the States had never thoroughly exploited.

On the other hand, the States during the same period substantially increased their revenues from the inheritance tax and revived the income tax. Beginning with Wisconsin in 1911, State after State adopted an income tax, though at very moderate rates, until to-day there are 22 with this form of taxation. The States have also invaded the field of consumption taxes, formerly used almost exclusively by the Federal Government. To-day every State imposes a gasoline tax, and 13 make use of taxes on tobacco or cigarettes, and State taxes upon amusements and semiluxuries are spreading.

This simultaneous and overlapping use of the same tax sources by the State and the Federal Governments has come gradually, almost stealthily, without the guidance of any broad policy or plan of national finance. It subjects us to a haphazard scheme rather than an ordered system of taxation, which lacks uniformity and coordination, involves Government and taxpayer alike in serious difficulties, and is growing steadily worse.

III

There is nothing inherently wrong in the use by both the Federal Government and the States of the same source of revenue. But when it is done without agreement or understanding between the competing jurisdictions and without the restraint of a superior power, it may easily result in a combined burden heavy enough to cripple the source. The danger is especially great in the case of "popular" taxes, such as the income and inheritance taxes, popular because they are so levied as to reach comparatively few people. There is a growing disposition to rely more and more heavily upon these taxes; and since this tendency characterizes both the State and the Federal Governments, the result may be serious not only to those subject to the tax but to the governments and the national economy as well, because of the decreased yield that inevitably follows excessive taxation.

The danger is by no means imaginary. For example, Wisconsin recently doubled its personal income-tax rates on 1931 income, bringing the tax to more than 15 per cent on incomes in excess of $12,000. If Wisconsin should find it necessary or desirable to continue this emergency tax for another year, as is not altogether improbable, and the Federal rates adopted by the House are enacted into law, the combined State and Federal tax on residents of Wisconsin, with respect to income earned this year, would range from 17 per cent to 22 per cent on incomes in excess of $12,000, up to 62 per cent on incomes in excess of $100,000. Similarly, if the income-tax rates on the House bill (H. R. 10236) are adopted and Wisconsin continues its corporation income-tax rate beyond 1931, income derived by corporations from property located and business transacted in Wisconsin will pay a combined rate of more than 20 per cent.

Or take the gasoline tax which is now imposed by every State in the Union. The rates range from 2 to 7 cents per gallon, and are steadily being increased. In some places the tax is in excess of the market price of gasoline at the refinery. In its pressing need for money the Federal Government may legitimately feel that it is entitled to use this source to a moderate extent, especially in view of the fact that the Federal Government grants the States substantial monetary aid in their road-building programs—the very purpose for which the gasoline tax was primarily introduced. Yet because of the preemption or prior use of this tax by the States, and the high rates in force in some States, the Federal Government must pause and consider before adding a Federal tax, though Federal entry into this field might help the States in the administration of the tax, which is tending in some places to break down because of the bootlegging of gasoline.

Or consider the tobacco taxes. The Federal Government has imposed these taxes since the Civil War, and the rates are high. The State governments claim that they are entitled to use consumption taxes on "articles of widespread use but not of first necessity." Moreover, in States like North Carolina, in which large amounts of tobacco are grown and in which great tobacco factories are located, there is a natural feeling that since tobacco represents one of their major industries they should be entitled to a substantial revenue from this source. But the Federal tax stands in the way. Even so, 13 States levy taxes on tobacco or cigarettes in addition to the Federal taxes.

A striking illustration of the danger of joint use of the same source is found in the stamp taxes on stock transfers. In its present mood public opinion is not sympathetic either toward the stock broker or the stock market, particularly in those districts which contain no stock exchange and comparatively few stock brokers. Spurred by revenue necessities, the State of New York recently doubled its stock-transfer tax at a time when the Federal Government was moved by a similar impulse. The result is a proposal or bill from the House of Representatives which imposes a minimum tax of 4 cents on each share of stock transferred and a maximum tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent of the selling price, while the exemption upon stock loans for short selling has been repealed, thus subjecting short sales to double the ordinary rates. This proposal, if enacted into law, may be enough, with the New York tax, to restrict activity in the chief security market.

Joint taxation of this character entails another evil which should, if possible, be eliminated. This is the waste involved in the duplication of administration, and the correlative annoyance to taxpayers arising from the necessity of complying with two or more sets of requirements with respect to the same kind of tax. The amount of money which such duplication involves probably runs into large figures.

IV. INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMPLICATIONS

Another major problem affecting the financial relations of the State and Federal Governments arises from those constitutional provisions which have been interpreted to inhibit the States from hindering interstate trade or commerce by direct taxation. The uncertainty of the constitutional law involved and the changing subtleties of the decisions which interpret that law deprive the States—it is hardly too much to say—of the free and natural use of those taxes most suited to corporations engaged in interstate commerce. A recent and learned commentator, E. F. Albertsworth, professor of law at Northwestern University, says that the States are "hemmed in and hamstrung" by the decisions declaring taxes or licenses to be direct restraints or burdens upon interstate trade.

After many years of serious thought, some of our most qualified students of taxation have reached the conclusion—which I still hesitate to share—that State taxation on business should be based upon or measured by gross receipts or gross income rather than net income. Such a tax is comparatively easy to administer; it yields a substantial revenue which is not subject to as wide fluctuations as is the net income tax; and it is possibly the best available measure of the benefit which business receives from government and for which business should legitimately be asked to pay.

But with business partaking to such a large extent of the character of interstate commerce, the usefulness of a gross-receipts tax is materially circumscribed by the inability of the State to tax directly the receipts from such commerce. Not only is the possible yield of such a tax greatly reduced, but there is unjustifiable discrimination in favor of those taxpayers engaged to a considerable extent in interstate commerce and against those who are primarily engaged in business within the confines of a particular State. The difficulties which the States have had in the taxation of public utilities doing an interstate business—particularly the railroads and telephone companies—are well known.

The same obstacle stands in the way of effective use of sales taxes, except those sales taxes which are most difficult to administer, that is, retail sales taxes. And even with respect to retail sales taxes, the interstate commerce restriction has, indirectly, an adverse effect.

In the first place there is the uncertainty as to when and under what conditions such sales taxes represent a direct burden upon interstate commerce. Our law books are replete with decisions dealing with this question, but it arises again and again. Only recently the Supreme Court was called upon to decide the question as to whether gasoline used in busses or airplanes carrying passengers in interstate traffic could be taxed by the State in which the gasoline was purchased.

Secondly, the inability of States to tax interstate commerce leaves such sales taxes vulnerable to easy violation. Take the gasoline tax. There has developed a gasoline-bootlegging racket of quite sizable proportions which, according to one competent authority, is depriving the States of $100,000,000 of revenue yearly. Much of this evasion is directly attributable to the purchase of gasoline in a State with a low rate of tax and its sale in a State with a high tax. The States can not adequately check the purchases and sales of the retail service station. Their control must depend largely upon supervision and check upon the refineries, the large distributors, and the shipments by the recognized carriers. But supervision falls down when the carrier is a bootlegger with a fleet of tank wagons, who can bring gasoline into the State without interference under the protection of the interstate commerce clause.

The same situation is found in connection with State tobacco taxes. A study recently made of the administration of State taxes on cigarettes shows that whereas in 1930 the per capita consumption of cigarettes in the entire country averaged 975, the five States which in that year levied a tax solely on cigarettes collected, on an average, taxes on only 431 cigarettes per capita. While we may not assume that the average actual consumption in these five States was the same as the average for the country, yet the figures would indicate that many a cigarette was smoked in these States on which the State tax had not been paid.

In addition to violation of the law, the restrictive effect of the interstate commerce clause upon State sales taxes produces a considerable amount of inequity. Such taxes, of course, find their way usually into the price at which the taxed article is sold to the ultimate consumer. Retailers in the taxing State who are located at or near the border of a State which does not tax that article, or which taxes it at a lower rate, are likely to find themselves in the unenviable position of having to absorb the tax themselves or of seeing their customers cross the line into the neighboring State in order to purchase the article at a lower price. It is not uncommon, for instance, to find service stations near State lines selling gasoline at the same price as that which obtains in the next State in which the tax is lower. Similarly, the competition which the merchant in the taxing State must meet from the mail-order houses which can sell free of tax, since such sales are interstate commerce, is a serious evil.

Governor Gardner, speaking before the North Carolina General Assembly, said about a year ago:

"Any tax that we add to sales within the State helps to turn the scale against business in North Carolina and in favor of business outside of North Carolina. I can not favor any system of taxation that imposes this additional burden on the retail merchants of North Carolina, and that penalizes business within and encourages business without the State." (U. S. Daily, March 26, 1931, at 205.)

V. OTHER CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS ON STATE TAXATION

Because they are rather closely related to the problems already discussed, and because their solution may go hand in hand with the solution of the conflicts in State and Federal taxation, mention may be made of certain active problems arising from constitutional limitation upon State taxing powers, although these problems are not involved in the relationship between the State and Federal taxing powers. These problems are (1) the taxation of the obligations and instrumentalities of other jurisdictions, and (2) the allocation to a particular State, for purposes of taxation, of the appropriate share of a subject of taxation which can not be wholly assigned to one State. Both of these problems have particular reference to State income taxes. These are extremely difficult questions, and the specific forms in which they arise require that they be submitted again and again to the courts for determination. We can never be sure, in many cases, about the validity of certain provisions of State income tax laws until their effect is determined by the courts of last resort. And even then we can not be certain, as will be readily understood by those who have been interested in the recent decisions of the Supreme Court as to the power of a State to include income from bonds and instrumentalities of the Federal Government in a franchise or excise tax measured by net income.

In May, 1929, the Supreme Court rendered its decision in Macallen Co. v. Mass. (279 U. S. 620), holding that under the Massachusetts corporation excise tax, interest from Federal bonds could not be included in the measure of the tax. Because of the stress laid by the decision on the necessity of considering the true substance and operation of State tax laws rather than their form or name, and the finding that the Massachusetts law "in substance and effect imposes a tax upon Federal bonds and securities," the decision was believed by many of our best lawyers and tax experts to be a substantial modification, if not a reversal, of a long line of prior decisions which drew a distinction between direct taxes on income or capital stock and excise taxes measured by income or capital stock—a distinction with little economic or practical difference.

But in less than two years, in January, 1931, came the decision in Educational Films Corp. v. Ward (282 U. S. 379), holding that royalties derived from Federal copyrights might be included in the measure of the New York corporation franchise tax. The decision reaffirmed the distinction which was thought to have been discarded in the Macallen case.

And on the 11th of this month came the decision in Pacific Co. v. Johnson, holding that the inclusion of interest from Federal bonds in the measure of the California corporation franchise tax, was permissible. The decision reached was contrary to that made in the Macallen case, yet it would be most difficult to find any substantial distinction in the facts presented in the two cases. Though the court does not admit it in so many words, it is plain that in less than three years after its promulgation, the Macallen decision has been definitely overruled. As stated in the minority opinion, "We think there is no escape from the conclusion that if the Miller and Macallen cases were followed the legislation here under review would be condemned. To base a distinction of these cases from the pending case upon differences so lacking in substance as to be in effect no differences at all, simply adds to the confusion already too great in this field of taxation."

Similar confusion exists with respect to the power of the Federal Government to tax the income derived from State instrumentalities, as is amply shown by such conflicting cases as Gillespie v. Oklahoma (257 U. S. 501), Group No. 1 Oil Corporation v. Bass (283 U. S. 279), and Burnet v. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., decided less than three weeks ago.

A more important problem—perhaps the most important problem involved in the use of an income tax by the States—is the question of allocating or apportioning the net income of corporations engaged in interstate business to the particular States in which they operate. Nearly every conceivable formula for apportioning such income is to be found in our State laws. Some States allocate solely on the basis of one factor, such as tangible property or gross sales; others allocate on the basis of a combination of factors, with varying methods of combination. Under such different measuring sticks, it is not difficult to see how a corporation may well be taxed on more than its entire net income. To state a simplified case, a corporation which did all its manufacturing in Connecticut, but sold all its product in South Carolina, would theoretically be taxed on its entire net income by each of these States, since Connecticut's allocation formula is based solely on property, while South Carolina's is based solely on sales. It is true that cases as bad as this seldom, if ever, arise; but there can be no doubt that serious inequity arises from lack of uniformity in these allocation formulas.

The problem of apportionment, moreover, which has caused much trouble to the courts, and to the taxpayers, has been so difficult that the courts are inclined to sustain any method of apportionment prescribed by the statute, provided it is not deliberately unfair or discriminatory. On the other hand, the Supreme Court has recently (in Hans Rees Sons v. North Carolina, 283 U. S. 123) invalidated a tax levied by North Carolina, under an apportionment formula based on property, where the taxpayer "proved" that it earned within that State less income than the amount reached by use of the formula. But the court's decision will probably be of little help, as the average corporation doing interstate business would find it most difficult to furnish such convincing proof as that supplied by the taxpayer in the North Carolina case. We can not and should not rely on the courts to solve this problem. While the courts may continue to render sound and helpful decisions in isolated cases, inequitable treatment, disputes, disgruntled feelings, and waste of time and money will continue until the problem is deliberately met with a cooperative effort to solve it. Certainly it is not too much to ask that the States join in a determined effort to avoid multiple taxation upon the income of corporations doing interstate business.

Such, then, is the pass to which we have come as a result of the shortsighted, drifting course we have pursued and our failure to view in a comprehensive way the effects of the relationships between the Federal and State Governments and between the States in matters of taxation. Our present system of taxation, if we can be said to have a system, is permeated by inequity, uncertainty, and administrative difficulties; the cost of collecting taxes is much too great, as is also the cost to the taxpayer in determining his tax liability and in furnishing the tax collector with the information required for the same purpose. We have too much tax competition, too much litigation and dispute. State tax systems have been prevented from developing along logical and effective lines, and the tax burden has fallen with unequal and crushing weight upon real property. We are sorely in need of simplification and uniformity; we need a much greater degree of cooperation and coordination in the framing of fiscal policies.

How can we achieve a better-ordered, coordinated scheme of State and Federal taxes? Not by hasty action, but by beginning at once to give the subject the sustained study and discussion without which no satisfactory answer can ever be reached. One solution that has been advanced is a thoroughgoing separation of the revenue sources of Federal and State revenues. Much of our difficulty would be solved if we could assign certain forms of taxes to the Federal Government alone and others to the States alone. Overlapping would be eliminated, cost of administration would be reduced, and each jurisdiction would be free to exploit its revenue sources without the necessity of keeping an eye open to what the other is doing. Something could undoubtedly be done along this line, but it is doubtful that this remedy would be sufficient. It seems impracticable to assign to either the States or the Federal Government alone such important types of taxes as the income tax and the estate tax. Under any logical plan of separation the Federal Government would be assigned those taxes which it can administer more effectively than the States; yet the States have particular need for these taxes. To take them away completely from the States would only result in a still heavier burden on real estate. Furthermore, any complete plan of separation would probably prove too inflexible in the long run and might become a source of friction between the States and the Federal Government.

Recognizing these difficulties, some observers advocate an extension of the principle now used in the Federal estate tax—the allowance of a limited credit against the Federal tax for a similar tax levied by the States. Perhaps, if such a credit were made conditional upon the State tax being administered under certain uniform provisions (excepting rates, of course), a large degree of simplification would be achieved. For example, a uniform method of allocation and apportionment of income arising from interstate business might be secured.

But here again there are serious objections. Such a credit would practically force the States to adopt the taxes involved and to adopt such rates as would take up the full credit—as the experience with the Federal estate tax credit has amply demonstrated. I am opposed to such a solution as tending further to undermine the sovereignty of the States, to concentrate authority in Washington, and to lessen the supervision and control which the taxpayer should exercise over the taxing power.

A third remedy which has been suggested is the enactment by Congress of a law permitting the States to tax directly interstate commerce under prescribed conditions and in accordance with specified methods—somewhat along the lines of the Federal act governing the taxation of national banks by the States. There is much to be said in favor of such a proposal. It would solve the difficulties arising from the restrictions upon the State in the taxation of interstate business, which I have already discussed, and would foster natural and effective methods of State taxation of business and State taxes upon sales or consumption. But such a law might be unconstitutional, although a strong case may be made out for its validity if properly drawn. There is a good chance that the court would uphold a law designed to promote equitable taxation, which would permit and compel the equal taxation of interstate and intrastate business, and which would relieve the courts of constant wrestling with the nice problem of determining whether a tax operates to put a direct burden on interstate commerce or only an indirect and incidental burden.

Others have stressed the urgent need of uniform State legislation with respect to some forms of taxation, particularly the income tax. If such uniformity could be secured, undoubtedly many difficulties could be erased. But the attempt to bring the States together and effect a compromise of their conflicting interests would obviously be a formidable task, though it might be accomplished if the taxpayers affected—chiefly corporations doing an interstate business—would array themselves solidly behind such a movement.

Considering the obvious objections and limitations to the various plans for eliminating or reducing the evils which beset us in this field, the only safe conclusion is that there exists an urgent need for systematic, unbiased, and comprehensive study of these problems, before we can hope to secure the coordination in our State and Federal systems of taxation which we so sorely need. Such a study should be made by some commission on which the Federal and State Governments shall be adequately represented by men of ability and breadth of view. Half of the members of this commission could be appointed by the President and half by the governors' conference. I have no doubt that the funds necessary to defray the small expenses of the commission for research and investigation could be secured without great difficulty, even in these times of financial stringency and enforced economy, for the possible benefits to be gained would far outweigh the cost. Though the task is a formidable one, the longer we delay tackling it the more difficult it will become. In view of the immense popular interest which now undoubtedly exists, this would seem to be an auspicious moment to make a start.

ABSENCE OF MEMBER

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce that the absence of my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. MURPHY, is due to his illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask about the program for to-morrow, so that we will know what is to be considered.

Mr. RAINEY. On to-morrow we will consider Muscle Shoals legislation, and on the next day the War Department appropriation bill.

THE EMERGENCY BILL AND WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman going to make the same request to extend his remarks and incorporate a letter every week? The gentleman got that request last week. I thought I was rather generous in granting him that concession that time, but I did not think it was going to be a weekly performance.

Mr. GARBER. This letter is from the regional manager of the Veterans' Bureau at Oklahoma City in reference to matters which have been under consideration in the House to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, this gentleman has some official capacity. The other was a very insignificant official. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, the economy bill as reported by the Economy Committee proposed curtailment of governmental expenses to the extent of $206,000,000. As passed by the House, however, its total curtailments are estimated to be approximately $37,800,000.

Although consuming five or more weeks of the session in hearings and investigations, the Economy Committee did not have sufficient regard for the membership of the House to furnish any evidence whatever supporting its proposals of curtailment of expenses. To present a bill composed of 10 titles, any one of which presented legislative proposals sufficient for several separate bills, unsupported by any evidence showing the need or effect of its provisions was an affront to the intelligence of the membership of the House. No wonder various provisions, unsupported by evidence or reason for enactment, were emasculated from the bill, the membership declining to accept the mere word of the Economy Committee upon matters affecting the various departments of government and repealing important provisions of the law which had been enacted only after careful study and thorough investigation based upon substantial evidence of competent witnesses and amply supported by material presented during consideration in the general procedure of the House.

There may have been provisions of the bill having much merit which, when redrafted, revised, supported by hearings and open discussion in orderly procedure, would warrant their enactment. But the individual membership passing upon such provisions can not afford, in the exercise of their responsibility direct to the constituents, simply to take the "I say so" of the Economy Committee in brutal violation of the consideration the committee owed to the membership in furnishing at least the information it had received in consideration of the important questions presented.

Sections 901 to 910, inclusive, of Title IX, so loosely written as to be susceptible of several different interpretations increasing the uncertainty as to their significance and probable effect, was a proposed revision of some of the most important features of veterans' legislation. These proposals, destructive of years of experimentation, revision, amendments, and constructive legislation, were fortunately stricken from the bill on motion and the subject matter referred to a committee of 14 Members, 7 to be appointed from the Senate and 7 from the House, with instructions carefully to examine into and report needed changes in veterans' legislation.

As the provisions in the economy bill will be construed as a recommendation by the Economy Committee to the special committee for its consideration, we briefly state our objections to such proposals.

I shall not undertake to discuss the 10 provisions applicable to veterans, but will confine my remarks to several of the more important and significant of them.

Section 901, embodying the "need" provision which has been earnestly and vigorously opposed whenever it has been suggested to apply to veterans' laws, with certain exceptions would prohibit the payment or granting of allowance, compensation, retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, pension, hospitalization, or domiciliary care administered by the Veterans' Administration to any person whose net income is $1,500 or more if single, or $3,500 or more if married, with $400 additional for each dependent, for the year preceding the date of enactment of this act or the filing of application for benefits, whichever is the later date. It further provides that annually a person must show to the satisfaction of the administrator that his net income was below the amount specified in order to be entitled to continue to receive benefits which may have been awarded. If his income status changes during the year, upon submission of proof showing reduction of income below the specified figures when prorated monthly, the administrator may, effective as of the date of administrative determination, allow such benefits as may otherwise be authorized. Government insurance, allowance, compensation, retired pay, or pension would not be considered in computation of income.

The exemptions provided in this section are:

1. Those persons who have attained the age of 65 years.
2. Those persons who served in the active military or naval forces and actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service. To come within this exception the veteran must show some causative factor, such as an injury or extreme exposure arising out of and in the course of the performance of his duty and directly resulting from such performance of duty.
3. Those persons who are temporarily totally disabled or permanently and totally disabled as a result of disease or injury acquired in or aggravated by active military or naval service. To come within this exemption the veteran need only show entitlement to service connection for his disability under the general law as governing payment of compensation or pension and be actually totally disabled.
4. All widows and dependents entitled to compensation or pension on account of the death of any person who served in the active military or naval service.
5. Those persons who were actually engaged in combat with the enemy, who served in a zone of hostilities, or who were actually under fire.

This provision of the bill, with the exceptions noted, says, in effect, to our veterans, "If you need it and will prove to us that you do need it, we will give you a helping hand." It is not so much the denial of material benefits in that provision which makes it so unpalatable to our veterans and to the people generally. It is the requirement that our veterans come to the Government with outstretched hands and proof of their financial need in order to secure the benefits which the American people wish them to have. Every veterans' organization has condemned that "pauper clause." Our veterans do not want it under any circumstances. To place our compensation system on a basis of financial need is in open defiance of the principles of its enactment, namely, a measure of appreciation for honorable service and in recognition of disabilities suffered in line of duty, and our veterans, as well as the American people, resent any move, direct or indirect, intended or inadvertent, to place them in the category of paupers.

It is not clear just what effect this section would have on the presumptive service section of the law with regard to compensation cases but it appears that it would at least materially limit its application.

But though its effect on the privilege of presumptive benefits for compensation purposes apparently rests largely upon a question of interpretation, section 903 of the bill specifically denies its operation in officers' retirement cases and limits these benefits to officers who have served as members of the Military or Naval Establishment between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and who have actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service between the dates mentioned, or who have served a period of 90 days or more between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, and actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as a result and directly attributable to service subsequent to November 11, 1918, and prior to July 3, 1921.

Such requirements for proof that disease has actually been contracted in line of duty and is directly attributable to service are based on the theory that if a thing is true, it can be proved so, and entirely disregard the fact that the presumptive service clause was enacted only after experience had convinced us that such a theory is impractical and leads to that injustice and discrimination which we have been fighting and have partially overcome through the enactment of our liberalizing amendments to the original laws for veterans' relief.

Are we to scrap all that we have gained in experience in solving this problem of veterans' relief and return again to the strict application of the letter of the law, denying its spirit and intent? Shall we repudiate our policy of giving the veteran the benefit of doubt and place veterans' relief upon a strictly material basis?

There were nine classes of officers in the World War. These were the regular officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; the provisional officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; and the emergency officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and the Army.

Who were these emergency officers? They were the platoon commanders, the company and battalion commanders, who led their men in the most desperate fighting against rifle and artillery fire, machine guns, flame projectors, poison gas, led them through barbed wire, mud, and blood, with the destructive forces of hell itself turned loose against them. Their courage and sacrifices stirred the admiration of the world at the time; but it was 10 years before we were able to enact the emergency officers' retirement act and so place them on an equality with the eight other classes of disabled officers who fought in the World War.

The War Department records show that 2,191 Army officers were killed in action or died of wounds received in action in the World War. Of this number, 93 per cent came from one class—the emergency Army officers for whose retirement on a parity with the other classes of officers the American Legion, composed of 85 per cent enlisted men, worked tirelessly for a decade.

The report of the committee on this section of the bill states:

When the act of May 24, 1928, was enacted into law, your committee believed that it was generally understood that the class of officers to be affected were those who had actually incurred their disabilities in line of duty as the result of some causative factor arising out of and in the course of the performance of duty in the active military or naval service. In the light of certain rulings by the Attorney General, however, several thousands of ex-officers have been paid emergency officers' retirement pay, although they have had to rely for service connection for their disabilities on certain liberal presumptions provided for compensation purposes in the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

And so the committee drafted the provision of the bill requiring a showing of disability actually contracted in line of duty, and specifically denying to them the benefits of presumptive service connection. There were 6,000 Regular Army officers in the Army at the beginning of the war. Since that date and to 1926, 1,109 Regular Army officers were retired for disability, and 645 Regular Army officers were retired for reasons other than disability, a total of 1,754 Regular Army officers retired since the beginning of the war. Surely such retirement has been generously accorded in recognition of service well rendered—and it is right that it should be so. But is this narrow policy which we were asked to adopt with reference to our emergency officers in conformity to the purpose of the original act, namely, to place them on a parity with other classes of officers? We maintain that it is not. What, then, would be our justification for seriously considering an amendment which would discriminate against a class of officers second to none in heroism and personal sacrifices?

April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, is defined in the original World War veterans' act as the World War period, and persons serving during that time were classed as veterans of that war. But section 906 of this bill provides that unless active military or naval service was rendered between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, no compensation shall be payable for disability or death resulting from injury suffered or disease contracted during the active service in an enlistment entered into after November 1, 1918, and would transfer from the compensation to the general pension rolls of the Regular Establishment the names of persons now receiving compensation benefits, and reclassify the veteran who served in an enlistment after November 11, 1918, as a peace-time soldier, not a veteran of the World War nor entitled to be treated on a parity with war veterans.

Section 908 is in effect a refusal to adjust a wrong in behalf of the deceased veteran's dependents. It would repeal sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, which provided in substance that if an insured at date of lapse of the insurance was suffering with a compensable disability and at date of permanent total disability or death is entitled to uncollected compensation or the $60 bonus, or both, that such uncollected money shall be applied to cover the unpaid premiums, and to the extent that such money covers said premiums so much of the insurance will be deemed not to have lapsed.

Section 908 would say to the needy widow, "We grant that your husband should have been receiving compensation prior to his death and that, if he had been, perhaps his insurance would not have entirely lapsed and you and your children would now be provided for; but unfortunately it is now too late. By his death he has canceled our responsibility in the matter." Claims wherein the insured actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, as a result of and directly attributable to actual combat with the enemy during war service, and as a result of such disease or injury dies or has died or becomes or has become permanently and totally disabled, are excepted from this section of the bill, though, in view of the strict requirements for positive showing, it would seem that there would be few cases so definitely capable of establishment as meritorious where the compensation status would not have been adjusted and the payments duly made.

There should be no limit on the application of justice. Where benefits are provided, the only limitation on them should be through failure to establish merit of the case. To say that a case meritorious to-day would not be equally meritorious to-morrow, is to defer to an arbitrary, tyrannical rule which can not be justified from any reasonable standpoint. Our veterans' laws have been drawn in an effort to correct wrongs, to give the benefit of the doubt to the veterans, and, in short, to deal with this class of our citizens in the spirit of justice and gratitude. We have fallen short of this ideal in many ways, but working and profiting by experience we have, through liberalization and amendment of the laws, corrected many discriminations and extended many needed benefits.

The high-hearted, courageous, self-sacrificing spirit of our boys in 1917 was as much a factor in the termination of the war as were the forces of our material strength. It was an indomitable spirit based on a sense of justice and loyalty to a Government regarded as the greatest friend an American citizen has—and so our boys cheerfully answered its call and went out to lay down their lives for such a friend.

But is this a friendly attitude expressed in the veterans' provisions of this bill, in this proposed hurried limitation and destruction of benefits granted only after careful investigation and thorough consideration? It were far better never to have enacted such benefits for our veterans than to grant them in our plenty and hastily withdraw them when times are "hard," as if they were mere careless, undeserved gifts, and the Government an indulgent benefactor. If we had enacted these amendments, while we might have saved a certain sum in dollars and cents, it would have been at the expense of ideals of unselfish sacrifice and unquestioning loyalty, of faith and trust in a Government which while it may demand all, is deeply appreciative and as generous in its gratitude as it is exacting in its demands. We can not afford, we dare not risk, such costly economy.

EXEMPTION FROM QUOTA OF FATHERS AND MOTHERS OVER 60 YEARS OF AGE OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (H. Res. 211) on the bill (H. R. 8174) to exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 211

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8174, a bill "To exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens."

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and any amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

MR. WARREN, CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE HOUSE ON THE STATE OF THE UNION

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I trust it is not amiss, Mr. Speaker, to refer at this time to the ability and impartiality with which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] presided as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union during the consideration of one of the most difficult of all the bills of the session. [Applause.]

STOCK-EXCHANGE SECURITIES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a time when the phrase coined by Chief Justice Marshall was more than appropriate, it is now, when we are seeking to tax stock-exchange securities and all transfers of stock to such an extent that it will be impossible to make any transfers of stock in the future.

Chief Justice Marshall said, "The power to tax is the power to destroy," and it would seem that what Congress is bent on doing is to destroy all possibilty of making transfers of stock from one individual to another.

It has ever been a prolific source of revenue to both the Federal Government and to the States to tax issues and transfers of capital stock, particularly the State of New York, which has seen fit for over 20 years to tax transfers of stock, and it has ever been a great source of revenue to the State government.

Under the stress of war conditions back in 1917 our Federal Government has likewise embarked upon a system of taxing transfers of stock under its laws, so that for many years past any person who saw fit to sell his securities was obliged to pay not only to the State but also to the Federal Government a tax which was fixed by the Federal Government at 2 cents for each $100 par value of stock and by the State government of the State of New York at the same figure.

A few months ago, in order to balance the budget of the State of New York, our governor recommended to the legislature of the State, and the legislature promptly enacted, a bill doubling our State transfer tax, so that instead of 2 cents per share of $100 or less par value the tax that the State of New York now charges on transfers of stock is 4 cents on such transfers.

Protests against this cumulative legislation has been uttered not only by holders of securities but by our national stock exchanges, which feel that by passing such legislation we will legislate out of business any transfers of stock in the future.

Now the Federal Government is seeking to obtain additional revenue by doubling this tax from 2 cents to 4 cents on the transfer of each share on stocks which sell at the par value of $100 per share or less, but—and this is significant—this tax shall not be less than one-quarter of 1 per cent of the selling price of any such share.

It therefore means that where the selling price of stock is $25 per share the tax on it will not be 4 cents per share, but will be 6¼ cents per share, and where the selling price is $100 the tax will be $2.50 per share, and so forth in like proportions. This so-called proviso really fixes the tax on stocks which sell at one-quarter of 1 per cent of its selling price, while in the case of stocks that do not sell it will be 4 cents per share.

It will therefore be necessary for one who deals on the New York Stock Exchange or who sells securities in the State of New York not only to pay 4 cents to the State government on each transfer of stock but at least the same sum of money to the Federal Government as well, so that it will cost 8 cents to transfer each share of stock, irrespective of the price for which the stock was bought, and, in the case of stocks which have a real selling value, one-quarter of 1 per cent of their selling price.

The practical result of this legislation will be that every share of stock now held by any individual will be worth 8 cents less than it otherwise would be worth, and in the case of stocks which have a real selling price they will be worth one-quarter of 1 per cent less.

Does Congress really intend to exercise its power of taxation for the purpose of destroying all possible source of revenue from this activity? True, the condition of the Treasury requires attention. True, we must balance our Budget, but it is very doubtful whether this source of revenue will yield much to the Government when increased to such an exorbitant figure as to make all transfers of stock highly unprofitable.

In taxation particularly, we must never lose sight of the fact that the only sound and intelligent way by which taxes may be imposed is where taxes themselves are easily collected and certain of collection. Where a tax is too high, it usually drives out the business which is sought to be taxed, and as a result instead of an increased revenue it diminishes itself. We see instances of it before our eyes every day. For instance, if we increase our postage rates, fewer letters are sent. If we fix a tax on railroad fares, railroad traffic suffers. If we impose a sales tax, sales diminish, and if we impose surtaxes which are too high we drive capital out of business.

The Federal Government's revenues were never as high as during the period during which taxes were continually diminishing and during which the amount of taxation increased while the sources of taxation were being gradually eliminated.

I do not wish to advocate a complete cessation of taxes on transfers of stock. We had a transfer of stock tax for many years and it worked out fairly and properly; but I am afraid that by increasing it beyond what the business can carry, we shall be unable to collect even as much as we have heretofore collected under the present taxes.

Until a few months ago a total tax payable in New York was 4 cents per share, which included 2 cents to the Federal Government and 2 cents to the State. Now, the State of New York has increased its tax of 4 cents a share, and anybody wishing to transfer stock in New York must pay 6 cents on each transfer. This is decidedly a very high figure, probably the highest figure in the history of our country and the highest figure which can possibly still be imposed on transfers of stock to make them enforceable. If this tax be further raised as now contemplated, it will drive out any possibility of a successful marketing of stocks and will drive out of business all the stock exchanges in the country.

Particularly will this tax be onerous on the small exchanges which deal with stocks selling at par values of less than $100.

If this additional tax be imposed, it will be impossible to sell any stocks which have a par value as small as are stocks customarily traded on the New York Curb Exchange and any exchanges throughout the country where the par value of stocks traded is less than $100 per share.

We may have our own views on the importance or necessity of stock exchanges in the business life of our country. There may be ever so much opposition to their methods of doing business or to their necessity in our modern business life. But we must not lose sight of the fact that the time will come when the business life of the country will again demand a free and steady market for securities and will demand that stock exchanges be in a position to do their work unhampered by any burdensome restrictions on the sale of securities.

Those of us who have lost money in the panic of 1929 might have our own views about the exchanges, and may perhaps think that the country would be better off without them, but such is not the fact.

A study of the history from the early seventeenth century, when merchants in the large European centers had to band themselves together to establish exchanges in which goods or securities were freely dealt with, will convince an unprejudiced observer of the fact that the time will never come when exchanges could be dispensed with. They perform a useful function, are necessary markets for the sale and exchange of goods and securities, and while there may be abuses that should be cured by legislation, nevertheless nothing should be placed in their way for a successful carrying on of their work within their proper sphere.

We must not lose sight of the fact that in the early years of our economic history it was not the banks but the exchanges of the country which promoted our early pioneering industries. It was the exchanges which were making it possible for our young industries to develop while banks would do nothing to promote their interests. It was only by the help of exchanges that oil, mining, and other pioneering ventures have reached the position in the country which they now occupy.

But let us forget the exchanges for a while. Let us bear in mind the fact that the latest official statistics show 18,000,000 individual stockholders in the United States, or approximately 1 to each American family, every person, be he ever so humble, owning a share of stock in any of our industries will be affected by this proposed legislation, and it will make it impossible for the 18,000,000 men, women, or children security holders in the United States to market their securities.

It is not necessary to sell securities in the stock exchange, but securities are often traded in directly from person to person.

Do we wish to destroy security values in the hands of any person to the extent of one-quarter of 1 per cent of their selling price?

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 460. An act to give war-time commissioned rank to retired warrant officers and enlisted men;

S. 2428. An act to provide for the confirmation of a selection of certain lands by the State of Arizona for the benefit of the University of Arizona;

S. 2967. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; and

S. 3953. An act to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE ECONOMY BILL

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Speaker, on or about the second week of April, 1932, the newspapers of the country carried the news that a proposal was submitted to the Economy Committee of the House of Representatives to transfer the expenses for the Philippine Scouts, a unit of the United States Army, to the government of the Philippine Islands.

Immediately after I learned of the nature of the proposal I communicated, on behalf of the people whom I represent, with the chairman of the committee, as follows:

APRIL 12, 1932.

Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE,
Chairman Economy Committee,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCDUFFIE: I am writing most respectfully to make a few observations regarding the proposal submitted to shift Army expenses involving approximately $5,000,000 annually to the government of the Philippine Islands.

It is proposed, as I understand, that the expenses for the Philippine Scouts should be borne by the Philippine government. The Philippine Scouts, as you and the members of the committee undoubtedly know, form a part and parcel of the Army of the United States in the Philippines. The Army personnel in the islands consists at present of approximately 10,000, some 6,500 of whom are Filipinos. This organization should not be confused with the Philippine Constabulary, which is the insular police force of approximately 7,000, the expenses for which are and have been borne by the Philippine government.

The Philippine Scouts are of your creation, not ours; they are America's Army, not ours. To transfer the expenses for this part of the United States Army to the Philippine government would be strange and unprecedented.

The proposal is made in the guise of economy in the Federal Government. The amount involved would be a mere bagatelle to a government great and wealthy, but it would be burdensome to a government like ours.

The approval of this proposal would establish a bad precedent. It means that officials in no way responsible to the Philippine government could enlarge the Army in the Philippines, it being under the administrative control of a department of the United States Government, increase the expenditure, and then saddle it on to our Government. Theoretically, therefore, a unit of government under the American flag could thus be plunged into bankruptcy.

This step, if carried out, would be a most dangerous precedent, one which should serve as a warning to every State, Territory, or possession of the United States. Once such a policy is inaugurated, there is no reason why Army expenditures could not be shifted to the government of a State or Territory, at least for that unit of the Army or personnel domiciled within the boundaries of a State or Territory. This would mean ruinous imposts foisted upon a State, Territory, or possession of the United States.

In the particular case under consideration it would be violative of our budgetary autonomy. For several years we had enjoyed virtual financial autonomy in our domestic affairs through the concessions of increased autonomous powers by the United States Government. With this proposal enacted into law by Congress, the Filipino people would never know exactly just what expenses our government may be called upon to bear, and it would mean in effect that not only would our budget be unbalanced but it would be subjected everlastingly to the danger of incurring unforeseen deficit.

But the principle involved more strongly than the amount of money which this proposal entails should weigh even more heavily upon the minds and consciences of the committee members.

Without bringing out other ramifications of this question, I most earnestly appeal to the high sense of justice of the committee and trust they will not permit the inclusion of this particular proposal in their program.

Very respectfully,

CAMILO OSIAS.

A copy of the foregoing letter was furnished each member of the committee.

A memorandum was also prepared by the Philippine delegation now in Washington, which was circulated for purposes of information. I hereby subjoin the document:

MEMORANDUM ON PROPOSED TRANSFER OF EXPENSES OF PHILIPPINE SCOUTS (UNITED STATES ARMY) TO PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT

The proposal to transfer the cost and upkeep of the Philippine Scouts from the United States Government to the Philippine government is unjustified. The Philippine Scouts are a part of the Regular Army of the United States. They were organized by the Congress of the United States for purely American purposes. They are not an organization subject to the jurisdiction of the government of the Philippine Islands but are at all times controlled by the American Government.

Practically since the completion of the work of pacification of the Philippine Islands, the Philippine Scouts have not been used for the maintenance of public order in the Philippines. This function is intrusted to the Philippine constabulary, a Philippine national organization created and supported exclusively by the Philippine government. The Philippine constabulary is being kept at a strength adequate for that purpose.

On the basis of these facts it would be most unfair to compel the government of the Philippine Islands to bear the cost of the Philippine Scouts, which, as has been stated, is not a Philippine organization but is a part of the United States Regular Army, especially at this time, when the Philippine government is succeeding in balancing its budget only with great difficulty. This will be made evident by a mere recital of the laws authorizing the organization of the Philippine Scouts.

HISTORY OF THE ORGANIZATION OF THE PHILIPPINE SCOUTS

By the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, "to increase the efficiency of the permanent Military Establishment of the United States," the authority to organize the Philippine Scouts was granted to the President of the United States, as follows:

"SEC. 36. That when in his opinion the conditions in the Philippine Islands justify such action, the President is authorized to enlist natives of those islands for service in the Army, to be organized as scouts, with such officers as he shall deem necessary for their proper control, or as troops or companies, as authorized by this act, for the Regular Army. The President is further authorized, in his discretion, to form companies, organized as are companies of the Regular Army, in squadrons or battalions, with officers and noncommissioned officers corresponding to similar organizations in the Cavalry and Infantry Arms. The total number of enlisted men in said native organizations shall not exceed 12,000, and the total enlisted force of the line of the Army, together with such native force, shall not exceed at any one time 100,000.

"The majors to command the squadrons and battalions shall be selected by the President from captains of the line of the Regular Army, and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowance of the grade of major. The captains of the troops or companies shall be selected by the President from first lieutenants of the line of the Regular Army; and while so serving they shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of captain of the arm to which assigned. The squadron and battalion staff officers, and first and second lieutenants of companies may be selected from the noncommissioned officers or enlisted men of the Regular Army of not less than two years' service, or from officers or noncommissioned officers or enlisted men serving, or who have served, in the volunteers subsequent to April 21, 1898, and officers of those grades shall be given provisional appointments for a period of four years each, and no such appointments shall be continued for a second or subsequent term unless the officer's conduct shall have been satisfactory in every respect. The pay and allowances of provisional officers of native organizations shall be those authorized for officers of like grades in the Regular Army. The pay, rations, and clothing allowances to be authorized for the enlisted men shall be fixed by the Secretary of War, and shall not exceed those authorized for the Regular Army.

"When, in the opinion of the President, natives of the Philippine Islands shall, by their services and character, show fitness for command, the President is authorized to make provisional appointments to the grade of second and first lieutenants from such natives, who when so appointed, shall have the pay and allowances to be fixed by the Secretary of War, not exceeding those of corresponding grades of the Regular Army."

By section 37 of this same act, the President was also authorized "to organize and maintain a provisional regiment of not exceeding three battalions of infantry, for service in Porto Rico, the enlisted strength thereof to be composed of natives of that island as far as practicable."

The Philippine Scouts, organized under section 36 of this act, and the Porto Rican regiment, organized under section 37 thereof, are in effect parts of the Regular Army, and the entire expense connected with their service is paid from United States appropriations. The purposes of their creation were not dissimilar. It will be seen from the provision with reference to pay and allowance of the enlisted men that there was no thought in maintaining in those insular possessions armed forces of the United States at a cost less than would be necessary for an equivalent of American troops sent from the United States. Enlisted men in the Philippine Scouts receive only half the pay of soldiers in the Regular Army.

Pursuant to the act of February 2, 1901, the Philippine Scouts were organized by order of the War Department, dated September 28, 1901. From the date of their organization the Philippine Scouts have always been considered and administered as part of the Regular Army in the Philippines. When American troops have been withdrawn from the Philippines for any purpose they were always replaced by Philippine Scouts.

In 1917, when the American garrisons in the Philippines were withdrawn, Philippine Scouts were increased in strength to replace American troops.

EXISTENCE OF PHILIPPINE SCOUTS DEPENDENT UPON PRESIDENT

An examination of the provisions of section 36 of the act of February 2, 1901, relating to Philippine Scouts will show that they have been maintained substantially without change under the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, and in the act of May 10, 1926. Under these laws the number of enlisted men and officers who constitute the Philippine Scouts is determined by the President. He is empowered to increase their strength up to 12,000 or reduce it without restriction.

"The pay and allowances of whatever nature and kind to be authorized for the enlisted men for the Philippine Scouts shall be fixed by the Secretary of War."

The national defense act provides that "the number of enlisted men of the Regular Army shall not exceed 280,000, including the Philippine Scouts."

Briefly, the United States maintains the Philippine Scouts at a strength prescribed by the Government of the United States without reference to any authority of the Philippine government. The law creating the Philippine Scouts and Porto Rican Regiment has been modified from time to time, but these troops have always been parts of the Regular Army and have been maintained for the convenience of the United States at a strength fixed by the President and supported by the United States Treasury.

On April 25 the Committee on Rules heard the members of the Economy Committee on H. R. 11597, which originally embodied in section 302 the proposal to which reference has been made. The pertinent provisions were these:

SEC. 302. (a) All expenses incurred on and after July 1, 1932, on account of the Philippine Scouts shall be charged to the government of the Philippine Islands. The Secretary of War shall certify periodically to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands the expenses incurred on account of the Philippine Scouts, and the amount of such expenses shall be collected from the Philippine government by the Secretary of War and deposited to the credit of miscellaneous receipts in the United States Treasury.

(b) The President is authorized at any time to disband the Philippine Scouts or to reduce the personnel thereof.

I was given the privilege to appear before the Committee on Rules, and on that occasion I made this brief statement:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can get through with what I have to present in about two minutes.

My first point is to request that, regardless of the rule which may be secured by the Economy Committee, section 302 of the bill under discussion, which has to do with the transfer of all expenses incurred on and after July 1, 1932, on account of the Philippine Scouts to the Philippine government be omitted. I make bold to make this petition, for I am invoking a precedent set by the Seventy-first Congress with respect to the immigration bill. The Committee on Rules cooperated with the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to strike out the provisions relating to Philippine immigration from a general immigration restriction bill. The elimination of this highly controversial provision would facilitate action on the balance of this bill.

My second point is that the approval of this proposal will establish a practice unheard of in the history of our relations. The Philippine Scouts are a part and parcel of the United States Army. This section of the bill charges the Philippine Government such amounts as the Secretary of War may certify, and empowers him to make the collection from the Philippine Treasury. This would be tantamount to levying ruinous imposts on our Government for something which it did not create or organize.

Subsection (b) authorizes the President "at any time to disband the Philippine Scouts or to reduce the personnel thereof." Mr. Chairman, I beg to call attention to the fact that the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, already vests authority in the President to organize this particular unit of the American Army in the Philippines not in excess of 12,000 or to reduce the personnel practically without restriction.

I plead with the members of the Committee on Rules and the Economy Committee to help us eliminate section 302 (a) from this bill. I am confident that no Member familiar with the early tradition and history of his country could knowingly and conscientiously vote in favor of this unjust and unjustifiable proposal.

After reconsideration the Economy Committee decided to eliminate the objectionable features from the bill.

I wish to express the gratitude of the people of the Philippine Islands and of myself to the Economy Committee, the Committee on Rules, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the favorable action taken on this matter. It is one more proof that the Congress wishes to do that which is just and right to the government of the Philippines. It also clearly reveals that the Members of Congress and the Filipinos are one in their desire that a relationship which had its genesis in misunderstanding and war shall terminate in peace and friendship.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, under leave to extend my remarks to H. R. 11597, to effect economies in the National Government, which was attached as a rider to H. R. 11267, legislative appropriations bill, I make the following observation: The Economy Committee submitted report claiming that savings of approximately $200,000,000 would be effected if their plan was adopted. Their plan embodied four parts, namely:

First. Dealing with personnel and reduction of salaries of Federal employees.

Second. Miscellaneous items recommended to be reduced or eliminated.

Third. Consolidation of agencies and bureaus.

Fourth. Had to do with relief of veterans of past wars.

I opposed plan No. 1, the reduction of Federal employees' salaries. However, as an alternative to the specific amendment as submitted to increase the exemption to $2,500 per annum per Federal employee, which was in line with the temper of the House, I naturally voted for the larger exemption, because statistics in the record show that by cutting everyone's salary 10 per cent from the President down to the lowly laborer only eight days of the present Budget deficit would have been met in time. To cut everybody's salary 10 per cent over $5,000 would have meant that the Budget deficit would have been met in time for one-half day only.

We have been told that what the country needs is an increase in purchasing power of the consumer, and now are told that the country's need for the psychological effect is a reduction in salaries of Federal employees. How in the name of common sense can you increase the purchasing power of the country by reducing employees' salaries? Certainly it stands to reason that if an employee's income is lessened, then naturally his purchasing power is reduced, and thereby has a resultant telling effect on the business in the communities. For example, in the city of New Orleans we have thousands of Federal employees who are receiving salaries under $2,500 annually. Who will suffer? Not only will employees suffer but also will the merchants and business in general suffer.

The slashing of Federal salaries is insignificant as to balancing the Budget. It is especially insignificant when one considers the far-reaching drastic effects such a move would have in face of an already intolerable economic, chaotic condition, from which the Nation as one should strive incessantly to emerge. Further it is repellant in view of the bad psychological effect a reduction by the Government in the salaries of their employees would bear upon the employers in other lines of business and industry who would so willingly take advantage of such an occurrence, with a general reduction in salaries to follow.

Plan No. 2, vocational education: Under this plan the annual appropriation amounting to $7,167,000 would have been reduced in the sum of 10 per cent of that amount and a like sum for each succeeding year, so that after 1942 these appropriations would have been abolished. I voted to eliminate this provision from the economy bill. Man has always been subject to disabling injury and disease. The increase of diseases and accidents growing out of the concentration of people in communities and work places has created a condition that demands attention. Despite the splendid efforts and actual achievements of organized safety movements the total number of accidents occurring annually has grown steadily

These are the people who may be rehabilitated through the process of vocational education established throughout the several States and aided by the Federal Government through this congressional appropriation for the Federal Board of Vocational Education. Experience has shown that vocational rehabilitation has to be accomplished through the case rather than the group method. Each person presents a special problem which requires individual treatment. The objective is to fit the disabled person for the best possible type of employment in which he can or may profitably fit, so as to be made economically independent and not a social burden. Statistics show that since the national vocational-education program was inaugurated in the year of 1920, 40,000 such disabled persons were rehabilitated and returned to self-supporting employment.

During the fiscal year 1928–29 the several States engaged in this rehabilitation service returned to remunerative employment between 5,000 and 6,000 disabled persons. These individuals were fitted for over 500 different kinds of occupations. Between 15,000 and 16,000 disabled persons are at this time in process of rehabilitation under the auspices of the several State rehabilitation departments. So in weighing the good this work can accomplish as against the expenses for the Federal Board of Vocational Education and the consequent added burden to society, I voted to strike out the provision that would have gradually meant death to these congressional appropriations.

Army Transport Service, Naval Transportation Service, and Panama Railroad Steamship Line: I voted to retain these Government services for the reason that these form an integral part of our national defense, for statistics are to the effect that it would be more costly to the Government to discontinue these services.

Plan No. 3: This calls for Federal departmental reorganization. According to the provision of section 401 of the economy act as passed by the House of Representatives May 4, 1932, it is declared to be the policy of Congress to group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purpose; to reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head; to eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort and to segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character; and to this end the President is given limited power or authority by Congress to carry out the provisions of this declaration of policy by Congress. I voted for sustenance of this particular provision in face of the fact that the Federal Government must face some sort of a retrenchment program, and wise economy must be practiced at this particular time.

Plan No. 4: Would have cut down relief and hospitalization to veterans of all wars and military expeditions. This entire section was eliminated from the economy bill and, instead, a congressional committee was recommended to look into this feature of proposed economy. Of course, I voted to strike out this provision from the legislative appropriations bill's rider.

I voted to create and organize a Public Works Administration because it is believed that substantial economies and increased efficiency in the construction activities of the Federal Government will be secured through the enactment of this legislation. The purpose, the committee report says, is to form a service agency for all departments and establishments * * * construction activities now form only an incidental part of the duties of many scattered agencies and the work is necessarily in the hands of subordinates.

In short, it is contended that this new department will mean superior results in management and execution; substantial economies; an effective system of administrative overhead, control, and coordinated activity; furnishes the means by which overlapping and conflicts of jurisdiction may be readily adjusted; facilitates the standardization of administrative processes and procedures in construction work; furnishes necessary foundation for a properly organized and administered budgetary system for legislative consideration in the appropriation of public moneys for such construction activities correlated along functional lines; decreases the number of agencies with which those wishing to transact business with the Federal Government must contend; and, above all, permits the centralization of general business operations, such as purchasing and the custody and issuing of supplies and the maintenance of libraries, blueprint plants, specification writers, inspectors, and field supervisors.

This provision further provides that military and naval engineers may be detailed to any division of the Public Works Administration for which they are qualified, as through their training and experience in rivers and harbors, navigation, and flood-control work, military and naval engineers are now better prepared to deal with the large problems they must face in a war emergency.

Under the economy bill as passed by the House of Representatives the committee estimates that the savings under Titles I, II, III, and VII will amount to $42,314,000.

It is pertinent to point out that under Title I, salary-reduction section, it was calculated by the committee that $67,000,000 would be saved; but as amended, with $2,500 exemption, only $12,000,000 was saved. Fifty-five million dollars was to be taken from the pay of the low-salaried Federal employees, as 70 per cent of all the pay roll is in the class under $2,500 per annum.

It is unthinkable that the people whom I have the honor to represent would be willing to tax the underpaid Federal employees to the extent of $55,000,000 to help balance the Budget, in view of what has happened in this country in recent years.

It is true that a dangerous deficit was created over two years by the refusal of the Republican administration to cut expenses and raise taxes to balance the National Budget. In 1930 out of a total expenditure of $3,846,605,149 only $1,274,850,467 were spent for operating the Government. The difference went for interest and premium on the public debt, debt reduction, grants to the States, pensions, public works, special business enterprises (Panama Canal), investments in securities of the Federal land and intermediate credit banks. Therefore, it is plain to understand that, when the House Committee on Appropriations decided to economize, cuts had to be made out of a comparatively small per cent of the expenditures of the Government. The House Appropriations Committee did adopt in the various supply bills cuts ranging from 2 per cent to 11 per cent, and thus far the Senate has reduced those appropriations by a level of 10 per cent.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATION PASSED AND ITS EFFECT

The first important legislative bill passed by this Congress was the granting of a moratorium to the European nations. This measure was primarily designed to relieve the depression, which existed in this country at that time, and now exists, and which exists to a greater degree in the other countries. I recall, the President of the Republic of Germany, a country with which we had been in war, writing the President of the United States for aid, and he intimated that unless this aid was given they (Germany) might suffer a governmental financial collapse, and with it would go the collapse of the smaller nations around Germany—resulting in stoppage of trade, business stagnation, and all loans to Germany, private and public, endangered. The result of this legislation, Congress ratifying the moratorium, added $250,000,000 to our Budgetary requirements this year, and the next fiscal year will add $270,000,000.

Then the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created, for which $500,000,000 were appropriated, to provide emergency financing facilities and relief for financial institutions, financially aiding agricultural, commercial, and industrial interests, and for other purposes.

The quarterly report of this corporation filed with Congress April 1, 1932, shows that loans were made as follows:

1. To 858 banks and trust companies, including $2,173,000 to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of 7 closed banks, $158,182,242.06.
2. To 30 building and loan associations (none located in Louisiana), $4,879,750.
3. To 18 insurance companies, $7,080,000.
4. To 2 joint-stock land banks, $775,000.
5. To 1 livestock credit corporation, $496,990.
6. To 2 agricultural credit corporations, $21,200.
7. To 8 mortgage loan companies, $6,517,000.
8. To 16 railroads (including $7,335,800 to 2 railroad receivers), $60,787,757.

As to the railroads, I believe it was generally understood that the money would be loaned to a railroad substantially for refinancing; in other words, to prevent outstanding securities from defaulting, because of the wide ownership of railroad bonds by insurance companies, savings banks, national banks, and trust companies.

FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM (IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES)

On February 15, 1932, the House of Representatives passed what is known as the Glass-Steagall bill, with three propositions involved. One authorizes the Federal reserve bank to make loans where it is considered desirable and prudent; to group the banks on the joint liability, not less than five being considered a group. Second, authorizes the Federal reserve banks to make loans to individual banks on paper that is regarded as satisfactory to Federal Reserve Board but upon security and collateral not eligible for rediscount. Third, authorizes the Federal reserve banks to accept direct Government obligations as a basis for currency in place of eligible paper upon which currency is issued under existing laws. These are, briefly, the provisions of the legislation.

The debate in the House on this bill reflected that the banking and credit machinery of this country had drifted into unhappy days—the big bankers, who claimed a monopoly on wisdom and good morals in banking, have taken the Federal reserve system and perverted and debased it. They turned it from service to legitimate business and commerce into an instrument for use in promotion of speculation and international high finance by men who proved unworthy of the trusts imposed in them and who have been shown to be as ignorant as they were unscrupulous.

They gathered junk from the four corners of the earth and fed it into the banks of this country to the wreck and ruin of thousands of such banks and the innocent depositors.

This bill, designed to make possible expansion, not a wild inflation, for a year under control of the Federal Reserve Board, has my approval.

TAX BILL—BALANCING THE BUDGET

The next legislative bill passing the House was the tax revenue act of 1932. To my way of thinking, the elimination of the sales-tax provision of the bill was a great victory for the common people. I opposed the sales tax because I believed it unsound in principle, and such a tax would be harsh and, indeed, burdensome and unjust in operation upon the great multitude comprising the American general public. It contravenes, in my humble opinion, every accepted theory of taxation. Not even in the greatest crisis of the World War did our Government attempt to consider the adoption of such a sales-tax measure.

After the defeat of the sales tax a substitute tax measure was adopted and while I did not personally vote for all of the substitutes comprising the 1932 revenue act as passed by the House, yet they were adopted by the committee. Higher taxes were levied by the House on large incomes, inheritances, and estates, and we have the word of the leaders of Congress that with the passing of the tax bill and an economical consolidation of activities of the governmental departments the Budget will be balanced. Even though the Budget is not balanced this year, why can it not be balanced over a period of three to five years? Why attempt to make the employees of the Federal service pay such a large amount under the guise of economy?

Before I vote for the lowering of salaries of Federal employees by smoke-screen economy, I would like the economy wave to commence with the executive department, the numerous secretaries, automobiles, expensive cars for Cabinet members, private elevators for departmental heads, expensive office equipment, entertainment funds for Foreign Service men, their allowances, the huge amount appropriated for enforcement of prohibition, which is admittedly ineffective. Instead of Cabinet members protesting curtailment of appropriations in their departments, they should make appropriate economies in their respective departments.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, our country today is faced with a condition unparalleled in the 150 years of its history, one which threatens the breaking down of our present economic system. In this, the wealthiest of all nations, there are more than 8,000,000 capable workers, with millions more of their dependents, who are suffering because of unemployment.

We are in the midst of the most violent and sudden economic changes our country has ever experienced. To adjust ourselves to these changes a new social policy must be adopted. Of all the principal measures advocated for this purpose, those that provide shorter hours of labor and further restriction of immigration from all countries offer the most logical and direct steps without placing an additional burden on the Public Treasury.

Mass production made possible by the progress of mechanical invention and by the application of high-grade efficiency, created a new era and changed this Nation from a static agricultural to a dynamic industrial country. This notable change is reflected in the fact that within the past 10 years not 1 per cent of all foreign immigration into the United States has settled upon the farms. The consequent growth in urban industrial centers has raised up certain unforeseen and difficult problems. We can not stop progress. We must recognize that we are living in the machine age. We must deal with the fact that the economic status of the workingman has been profoundly affected. There is to-day a labor-saving device for every branch of industry. This condition has displaced hundreds of thousands of working men and women and has been one of the primary causes for the serious unemployment condition of this present day.

The workingman is not responsible for these present conditions of unemployment. The dynamics of a mechanical age is the cause. In 1929, the last so-called normal year, the railroads of this country were operated by 250,000 fewer employees than in 1920. Synchronized music has displaced over 9,000 musicians, many of them artists of notable talent.

The number of mechanics employed in the manufacture of automobiles, including bodies and parts, between the years 1925 and 1927, decreased by 56,796, while the number of automobiles increased. In the men's clothing trade a power machine operated by not more than 2 persons displaced 200 skilled clothing cutters. In the iron and steel industry, on an average, 1 man now does the work that 45 men used to do. On a trans-Atlantic liner there used to average 120 stokers; now three men dressed in spotless white do this work by merely turning a valve. The New Edison Co. has installed an automatic mechanism that operates an electric distributing station, which supplies enough power to light 300,000 homes, without one human being in the plant; an operator 3 miles away handles the switch and has perfect control at all times.

Students of agriculture tell us that while it took 3 hours of human labor to produce a bushel of wheat in 1900, in 1932 3 minutes of machine labor will do the same thing. The relation is 60 to 1. Thus, mass production, stimulated by mechanical invention, has taken its toll of man power in every industry. This displacement must be compensated for by a 5-day working week, and if necessary by shortening the working hours to avoid the disaster of widespread unemployment on the one hand and overproduction on the other.

Are we to go on displacing men, taking millions of workers out of the consuming market, constantly increasing our facilities and powers to produce, without developing a market corresponding with our ability to produce? There was not enough of attention paid in the past to the market situation, the adjustments that were necessary to absorb these men who were constantly being displaced. We have absolutely failed to adjust working time corresponding with our increase in the facilities of production. We have gone ahead attempting to work 6 days a week, and 8, 10, and 12 hours per day under the new order, just as we did under the old. We have not enough work to keep men employed 6 days per week, 8 hours per day and 10 hours per day. That is out of the question because of the wonderful mechanical development that has made men more efficient.

There must be an adjustment of the working time in order to take up the slack of unemployment.

Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, in testifying before the subcommittee of the Committee on Manufactures, United States Senate, which had under consideration S. 2615, a bill to establish a national economic council, stated:

> To eliminate unemployment we have only to cut the work week to 35 hours and put everybody to work; there is work enough for all at five days per week and seven hours per day. Now, would it not be better to distribute the work available so that all would be given five days per week, seven hours per day, than to have a situation existing such as the present, with 8,300,000 unemployed men in this country.

These economic changes and this displacement of man power call for important readjustments.

There are two schools of thought dealing with this problem. First, there are certain groups of industrialists and employers of labor who, for their own selfish interests, are taking advantage of unemployment and the surplus in the labor market to bring down the standards of wages and of living. These misguided men, if permitted to do so, would gladly reduce labor to the condition of serfdom that it was in before organized labor, through the means of collective bargaining, elevated it to its present condition.

In contrast to this selfish school of thought we have the advanced humanitarianism fostered by American working men and women who maintain that one of the primary functions of the Government is to protect life and make it easier and happier for the toiling masses who are so deeply responsible for the production of this Nation's wealth. Fortunately for all of us, the example of this intelligent humanitarianism is felt in many spheres of industry; thank heaven, there are many enlightened employers in this country. They are working with organized labor to stem the tide of reaction.

Congress last session inaugurated the wise policy of putting men to work upon public buildings, and now it would take this employment from them by refusing to appropriate money to carry on work already planned, thereby sending tens of thousands out into the streets to join the army of 8,000,000 unemployed, where they will face privation and starvation.

The people of this Nation can be expected to speak in no uncertain terms on this most important unemployment question, and will decide between a wise economy to eliminate governmental expenditures that in the slightest degree might be considered extravagant, and unwise, unjust, and cruel economy, which will add untold misery and suffering amongst the masses of this country.

When Mr. William Randolph Hearst proposed as a remedial measure a bond issue of $5,000,000,000 I heartily and promptly indorsed that method of relief, because I recognized a sincere effort to relieve suffering and put men and women back to work.

A solution of our present problems is not to be hoped for as long as there exists a division of responsibility in regard to unemployment between Federal, State, and local governments. What we need is to put an end to dangerous dilatory tactics and bring all parties together in practical organization and unselfish cooperation. Only thus can we remedy the conditions which now imperil our national and domestic happiness.

The United States Steel Corporation reduced wages 15 per cent, which reduced the buying power of their employees $40,000,000 a year, and as a result they bought $40,000,000 worth less of goods. It requires the maximum buying power of the people to keep the wheels of industry moving. How is industry to be restored and kept going if the purchasing power of the people is destroyed by wage reductions? With the development of our producing power in America through the introduction of mechanical devices and other scientific methods of making men more efficient, thus increasing their efficiency every year so they produce more and more, and at the same time a reduction in their buying power, how can any economist reckon or figure how they can buy back the goods they produce? If we are going to increase production, we must increase the buying power of the people in a way that will correspond to that increase of productive capacity.

Mr. Speaker, I declare to you that the problems of this country to-day are primarily problems of labor—the stabilization of its employment and the maintenance of its purchasing power unimpaired. These problems must be met and solved by Congress. Never before in our history have there existed conditions which called so loudly for a united legislative action. The misguided industrial leaders who would further oppress labor, if they could, are eager to take advantage of the surplus of man power. They should be defeated by an act of Congress shortening the hours of labor to five days a week and restricting immigration to the least possible minimum.

The thoughtless oppressors of labor should see the handwriting on the wall, for it is written there that if the labor movement in this country under present sane leadership should fail, the inevitable end is communism and the destruction of our present industrial and economic system and those small souls who are wandering in the darkness will be the first to fall victims of their own folly.

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Speaker, the growing tendency toward the expansion of governmental activities by the creation of new bureaus and departments, with additional personnel, each encroaching on private business and the resulting increase in the cost of Government, is always noted by the Appropriations Committee of the House, which has the duty of writing the annual appropriation bills.

The members of the Appropriations Committee have generally sought to curb the increase in expenditures, but we have year after year been overruled by the House and have continually witnessed the amounts carried in the various appropriation bills increased by the House and Senate. As long as business prosperity continued in the Nation, the efforts of the Appropriations Committee against the ever-increasing cost of government was as "a voice crying in the wilderness." Let it be said to the credit of Congress that the demand for appropriations does not originate with Congress but comes from well-organized minority groups that flood the mail of Congressmen and fill the public press with propaganda for the new activities.

On the 19th of February, 1932, I introduced House Joint Resolution No. 302, which conferred upon the President the authority to abolish, combine, and consolidate commissions, boards, departments, bureaus, and divisions of the National Government.

On February 20 the Rules Committee reported House Resolution 151, which was adopted by the House on February 23. Under this resolution a select committee of seven Members of the House of Representatives was appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and it was the duty of this committee to submit its recommendations with reference to economies to be effected and also its recommendations, on the reorganization of Government bureaus.

On April 25, 1932, the Select Economy Committee reported to the House H. R. 11597, being a bill to effect economies in the National Government. This bill provided:

Title 1, compensation reduction of Federal employees.
Title 2, suspension of promotions and filling of vacancies.
Title 3, miscellaneous provisions.
Title 4, reorganization of executive departments.
Title 5, public works administration.
Title 6, national defense reorganization.
Title 7, consolidations of Bureaus of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection.
Title 8, interdepartmental work.
Title 9, adjustment of veterans' benefits.
Title 10, special provisions.

The Economy Committee reported that in their judgment the passage of H. R. 11597 would result in a saving of $210,000,000 in the annual cost of government. On April 27, under a special rule, H. R. 11597 was offered as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill, which was then under consideration by the House, and the consideration of this bill by the House extended through from Wednesday, April 27, until Wednesday, May 4.

I now propose to briefly report the consideration of H. R. 11597, title by title, the more important amendments offered, and my vote with reference to such amendments.

Title I provided for a reduction of 11 per cent in the salaries of Federal employees, with an exemption of the first $1,000. A Federal employee drawing an annual salary of $2,000 would be reduced 11 per cent after allowing a $1,000 exemption, the total reduction amounting to $110. Under this plan a Congressman would receive a reduction of $990 in his salary. The first amendment bearing on salary reduction was offered by Mr. HARDY, of Colorado. In this amendment he sought to increase the reduction in Congressmen's salaries from $990 to $1,000. Believing this amendment, if adopted, would create a parliamentary situation unfavorable to real economy legislation, I voted against the Hardy amendment, which was rejected. An amendment was offered by Mr. O'CONNOR, of New York, and as amended increased the salary exemption from $1,000 to $2,500. I voted against this amendment, which was adopted.

Mr. MCREYNOLDS, of Tennessee, offered an amendment reducing salaries as follows: $2,500 to $3,500, reduce 11 per cent; $3,500 to $5,000, reduce 15 per cent; $5,000 to $7,500, reduce 20 per cent; $7,500 and over, reduce 25 per cent.

I voted for this amendment, which was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY, of Massachussets, offered an amendment to strike out Title I, compensation reduction of Federal employees.

I voted against this amendment, which was rejected.

Title IV of the bill carried provisions which were in substance the provisions contained in the resolution which I introduced on the 19th of February. Under the provisions of Title IV, the President was authorized to abolish, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies and bureaus of the Government. Sections 406 and 407 of this title provided that any orders issued by the President to abolish or consolidate agencies or bureaus should not become effective until confirmed by Congress. I offered an amendment to strike out sections 406 and 407, but this amendment was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon offered an amendment to strike out Title VI, the national defense reorganization act.

Title VI provided for combining the War Department and the Nacy Department into a Department of National Defense. In my opinion this consolidation would strengthen our national defense and materially reduce the cost thereof.

I voted against this amendment, which was adopted.

Mr. BULWINKLE, of North Carolina, offered an amendment to strike out Title IX—adjustment of veterans' benefits.

The special Economy Committee estimated this readjustment would result in a saving of over $48,000,000.

I voted against this amendment, which was adopted.

The amendments heretofore mentioned were offered in the Committee of the Whole House and the votes were not record votes.

However, the O'Connor, Martin, and Bulwinkle amendments, having been adopted in the Committee of the Whole, were submitted to the House for a record vote.

I again voted against all three of these amendments, but they were all adopted in the House on a record vote.

Mr. MCDUFFIE, of Alabama, offered a motion to recommit with an amendment reducing the salary exemption from $2,500 to $2,000.

I voted for this motion, but it was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEYER, of Iowa, offered a motion to recommit with an amendment known as the "furlough of Federal employees" plan that would have effected a saving of $60,000,000.

I voted for this motion, but it was rejected.

The various amendments adopted by the House reduced the estimated savings made possible under the bill from approximately $210,000,000 down to approximately $42,000,000. I opposed all of those amendments.

The reductions, amounting to $42,000,000, are only for one year, and therefore, while helpful, are not very significant when considered in relation to the total expenditures for governmental purposes. There is, however, one provision of this bill which may be productive of great savings. The substantial features of the Holaday resolution included in the bill as passed gives to the President authority to abolish, consolidate, and rearrange the various agencies and bureaus of the Government. Under this provision I believe that it will be possible for the President to effect substantial reductions in the cost of Government by abolishing certain bureaus and activities of doubtful value, and by consolidating other bureaus that now overlap in their activities and with a general rearrangement of various agencies of the Government reductions may be made in personnel with a material decrease in the cost of government. What future savings may be effected under this provision will depend upon the action of the President and also upon the action of Congress in confirming such Executive orders as may be issued.

Mrs. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out some of the reasons why Title IX of the economy bill should be eliminated. The title was placed in the bill without hearings and without sufficient study. Before radical changes are made in regard to veterans' benefits, a most careful investigation should be carried on by people who have dealt with veterans' matters. I heartily favor the appointment of a committee to make an exhaustive study of veterans' legislation. I believe many economies could be brought about without working a hardship upon the disabled. It would be extremely helpful if a conference could be called by the President which would include the veterans' committees of the House and Senate, members of the Appropriations Committee, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and also representatives of the veterans' organizations. As a result, I believe benefits would accrue to the taxpayers as well as the veterans.

The laws pertaining to veterans' benefits are the outgrowth of years of study and effort on the part of Congress to meet the vast problems of rehabilitation and care of veterans of wars and their dependents as well as for certain former members of the regular establishment and their dependents. The problem confronting this country at the time the World War was in progress was approached with full knowledge of the tremendous responsibility resting upon the Federal Government which had called over 4,000,000 men to arms against the enemy. It has been difficult to secure satisfactory legislation to meet the most urgent demands upon us. It has been the paramount purpose to extend reasonable relief to these veterans in so far as the country could meet the demands justly placed upon it.

H. R. 11597, Title IX, contains nine sections designed to destroy, without due deliberation on the part of Congress, a system of relief developed over the years, and which would suddenly place the veterans and their dependents in a state of need, producing in many instances misery and untold suffering for those who served their country in time of need and for their dependents.

Section 901 of this bill would deny disability allowance, compensation, emergency officers' retired pay, pension, hospitalization or domiciliary care to any person receiving a net income of $1,500 or over, if single, and $3,500 or over, if married, for the year preceding the enactment of the proposed act or the filing of application of benefits, whichever is the later.

Although certain exceptions are made from the provisions of this section, the saving claimed by the committee of $13,315,000 would be effected by denying benefits to 28,300 persons, representing groups for whom the Federal Government has provided relief after thorough study of needs and legislative precedents. I doubt very much if 50 per cent of that saving would be effected. Income-tax tables used by the Economy Committee to arrive at these figures are misleading. Certainly the proportion of disabled veterans within these income-tax brackets would run far below the average—probably 50 per cent less. The 7.8 figure would be nearer 3.9 therefore in applying income-tax figures to veterans, cutting down the estimated savings by 50 per cent. Only a small preferred group of those men in the actual combat zone would be exempt from the reductions proposed, and those experienced in the rehabilitation of the disabled know how unfair that is. The disabled man finds it just as hard to find employment and thus rehabilitate himself whether his disability was received in the very front line or in the rear or in camp in this country. He went where he was sent, as any good soldier does.

Even emergency hospital treatment would be denied to veterans whose income was greater than the sum fixed by the bill. There would be thrust upon the States a sudden burden which could not be carried. I have stated in a previous speech how overcrowded the civil neuropsychiatric hospitals are all over the United States, and there is nearly as bad a situation in regard to the civil tuberculosis hospitals. The carefully developed plan of hospitalization designed to reestablish the disabled would fail, with a loss to the Government. The existing laws should serve as a sufficient safeguard to give preference in hospitalization to those unable to pay for it.

The arbitrary line of applying income-tax-exemption amounts to hospitalization is indefensible. That may be an applicable basis to use in regard to compensation or other cash allowances, but to deny hospitalization, for which $50 a week might easily be charged to a man earning $30 a week, is an entirely different thing. If there is to be an arbitrary amount fixed as the dividing line between free hospitalization and no hospitalization, it should be far higher than the income-tax basis.

Section 902: That part of section 902 (7) of the present law which relates to reduction of pay of veterans while maintained by the Government in an institution relates only to insane persons without dependents. Its original purpose was to protect the estates of such veterans against unnecessary charges for fees of guardians and to avoid unnecessary expenditure by the Government.

The present law also provides that if such person shall recover his reason and shall be discharged from the institution as competent, such sum shall be paid to him as will equal the difference between the amount that has been paid in compensation and the amount that was otherwise due. This seems only just, as the man who has been insane will need that money. When he leaves the hospital, he must adjust himself slowly to the outside world, and no one will want to employ him, so he will be under great hardship.

This bill would authorize the reduction of compensation, pension, allowance, or emergency officers' retired pay to an amount not in excess of $20 per month in the case of any person, sane or insane, maintained in a soldier's home, hospital, or institution for a period of 30 days or more. Provision is made that if such person has a wife, child or children, or dependent parent or parents, the difference between the $20 and the amount to which the veteran would otherwise be entitled may be paid to such dependents. No provision is made that in the case of competent veterans any amount withheld under this section shall later be paid.

The benefits paid to veterans as a result of disabilities incurred in service are extended upon the theory that the amounts paid compensate the veteran for the disability resulting from such service. It is clear that the Government, with all its bounty, can not fully compensate these men for the losses, diseases, and injuries suffered while serving in defense of the Nation. In cases in which benefits have been or are now being paid, at various rates, some in excess of $200 per month, the veterans have adjusted their lives to the amounts received and have incurred obligations in their efforts to adjust themselves to civilian life. A reduction of these benefits without warning, and solely because they accept treatment designed to assist in their reestablishment, is contrary to the theory of veterans' relief and would result in undue suffering and injustice.

Section 903: A bill to authorize retirement of disabled emergency officers was first reported favorably to the House of Representatives on February 2, 1921 (H. Rept. 1284, 66th Cong.). This report stated that it was the intent of Congress, at the time of the passage of the selective service act, that the men in the Regular Army and those in the temporary army should have the same status and be on the same footing in so far as pay, pensions, hospitalization, and treatment are concerned. The present law was enacted May 24, 1928.

Thousands of able men were called from their places in civilian life to serve as emergency officers as leaders of the armed forces during the World War. Many were seriously disabled and rendered incapable of returning to their civilian pursuits. The amount of retired pay now given fails in thousands of cases to equal the monetary loss sustained by these men. The opponents of the law have been prompted to advocate its limitation or repeal because there have been cited instances in which it appears that men may receive benefits to which they do not seem entitled. Human ingenuity has failed to place on statute books laws that will dispense equal justice in all cases. Modification of the law applicable to the many for the purpose of depriving a few of its benefits would impose penalties upon many men who were so disabled by their war service as to be permanently and totally disabled. Even though some modification were deemed necessary, it should be thoroughly studied in order that no profound injustice will result. For instance, in the mental cases, those men are in no condition to secure the evidence necessary. It was for this very reason that the presumptive clause was put in the bill.

Section 904: The bill would amend section 203 of the World War veterans' act by repealing the language which provides for a per diem allowance of $2.65 per day for the period of travel and observation in connection with examinations for service-connected cases. This provision was placed in the law so that veterans would be saved from undue monetary loss in complying with Government requests to report for physical examinations incident to disease or injury incurred in service. Many men receive small amounts of compensation, some as little as $8 per month.

Many men would be unable to comply with the request to report for examination unless the Government had included in the present law that provision which authorizes a per diem allowance of $2.65 per day, which is designed to compensate him for loss of wages or loss of income while away from business. The result would be to impose an injustice upon every veteran affected by the amendment, and to result in undue hardship upon those who are less able to stand the denial of the benefit so long extended. Many veterans sorely in need of treatment and entitled to the benefits of hospitalization would be denied such benefits for the reason they could not afford to leave their employment without the reimbursement of $2.65 per diem.

Section 905: This section of the bill would amend section 205 of the World War veterans' act, to place further restriction upon payment of compensation and pension for retroactive periods. This section was preceded by section 305 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, which permitted review of compensation awards with authority to reduce, diminish, or increase such awards in proportion to the degree of disability as of the date disability began, but not earlier than the date of discharge. On June 7, 1924, this section was changed to section 205, World War veterans' act, and amended to recognize the restriction in section 210, World War veterans' act, formerly section 310, war risk insurance act. Retroactive reductions in compensation are forbidden except in case of fraud, and it is provided that reduction or discontinuance of compensation is to become effective the first day of the second calendar month after the reduction or discontinuance is determined.

The bill would revise section 205 to provide that no allowance, compensation, or pension shall be awarded as a result of a review of a claim by the Veterans' Administration or review upon application by the veteran if the time limit for appeal has expired for any period more than six months prior to date of administrative determination. Many times a veteran may file a claim without knowledge of the evidence that may be required by the Government before the claim may be allowed. If the Government requests affidavits of comrades, it frequently takes many months or years before comrades in arms during a prior war may be located. The reason for the delay may not be shown by the Government record, but by the terms of the bill the veteran would be unable to receive the benefit to which he was otherwise entitled for any period more than six months prior to final decision on the claim. This is an entirely new departure in veterans' legislation, as it has always been recognized that the veteran should not be denied retroactive benefits where, through no fault of his own or due to circumstances beyond his control, his claim has been filed but not completed in a minimum length of time.

Section 906: Section 300 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, permitted the payment of compensation to men who entered the service prior to February 9, 1922, "if disability was incurred or aggravated in line of duty," or to those injured in an enlistment entered into before April 6, 1917, but where service continued on or after April 6, 1917. That section was repealed and reenacted June 7, 1924, by the World War veterans' act, as amended, as section 200, which omitted the "line of duty" requirement, but restricted the payment of compensation (except in cases in which accrued rights were saved) to those persons disabled in the military or naval service between April 6, 1917, and July 2, 1921.

Section 906 of the bill would deny the payment of compensation to persons who entered service after November 11, 1918. Although actual hostilities ceased at the time of the armistice on November 11, 1918, there was then no assurance that hostilities would not be resumed. Many young men theretofore unable to join the armed forces because of their youth later came into the service at a time when there was a probability that hostilities would be resumed. The laws then in force offered to these men compensation for disabilities incurred in line of duty. To many of them and to dependents, on account of their death from service-connected cause, compensation has been awarded and paid until the present time.

It would be ungrateful and unfair on the part of the Government to take from them at the present time of economic need the right given to them for service in a period when the country faced the distress of war. The effect of this section would be to establish a new World War period which would be more restrictive without considering the justifiable basis upon which the period, April 6, 1917, to July 2, 1921, was adopted at the time of enactment of the World War veterans' act, 1924, and the prior legislation, the war risk insurance act.

Section 907: This section was originally section 405 of the war risk insurance act of October 6, 1917, later amended and changed to section 19. It has at all times given a claimant a right to file suit on an insurance contract after disagreement as to a claim filed with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration.

This bill would amend section 19 of the act to provide that a court may consider only the testimony of a person whose statement has been submitted to the Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration prior to denial of the claim sued upon. If the testimony of any other person is offered, the court would be required to stay the proceedings until the statement of such person is submitted to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. This provision of the bill would seek to apply not only to suits filed in the future but also to suits pending on the date of the enactment of the proposed amendment.

This would result in encouraging dilatory tactics that would indefinitely defer the justice in the case that might be secured only after final determination by the court and would deny to the veteran his right to speedy justice. The Government would be given the knowledge of all evidence to be filed by the claimant in the court, while a corresponding right would not be extended to the claimant. The courts having jurisdiction of the subject matter in toto should not be hampered in any way but should have all testimony available.

Section 908: This section of the bill would repeal sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, which were evolved from section 408 of the war risk insurance act of August 9, 1921, which provided that if a veteran was entitled to compensation at the time the insurance lapsed, such insurance would not be considered as lapsed if the compensation was of a sum equal to or in excess of premiums due. This was liberalized by later amendment, and section 309 was added to the law to permit revival of insurance by use of the uncollected $60 bonus.

The bill proposes the repeal of sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, as amended. It seems only fair that these sections be continued in the law so that a disabled veteran and his dependents may not be denied the right to insurance, a benefit that would otherwise be denied, because of the delay of the Government in adjudicating his claim. Considering the length of time this statute has been in effect, the real relief it has afforded, and the fact that the few belated adjudications thereunder now being made are meritorious, it is not understood why the change is proposed.

The following is an index to changes in Title IX of H. R. 11597:

INDEX TO CHANGES IN TITLE IX OF H. R. 11597

Section 901: New legislation.

Section 902: Amends the first two paragraphs of subdivision (7) of section 202, World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 23, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in section 23 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, December 24, 1919.

House Report 266 and Senate Report 339, Sixty-sixth Congress, reads as follows:

"Section 5 relates to persons who may be confined in an asylum or hospital for the insane maintained by the United States, where no guardian or curator of their property has been duly appointed. The director, after due investigation, may order all moneys payable to him to be held in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of such person. It also provides that funds so held may be disbursed by the director at his discretion to the chief executive officer of the asylum or hospital in which such person is an inmate, to be used by such officer for the maintenance and comfort of such inmate and account to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance."

Amended on March 2, 1923, House Report 668 and Senate Report 1067, Sixty-seventh Congress.

Section 202 (7) W. W. V. A.: Superseded by section 202 (7) of the World War veterans' act; June 7, 1924, Senate Report 397, page 4, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended March 4, 1925, House Report 1518, page 6, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended July 2, 1926, House Report 1217, page 4, Sixty-ninth Congress, Senate Report 1105, page 4, Sixty-ninth Congress; amended March 3, 1927, House Report 2288, page 2, Sixty-ninth Congress; amended July 3, 1930, Senate Report 1128, page 7, Seventy-first Congress.

Section 903: Amends the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928; House Report 1082, Seventieth Congress, and Senate Report 115, Seventieth Congress.

Section 904: Amends section 203 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 303, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in first paragraph of section 303 of the war risk insurance act of October 6, 1917.

House Report 130, part 3, page 11, Sixty-fifth Congress, reads as follows:

"SEC. 303. Required to submit to examinations. May have own physician present. Payment of reasonable traveling and other expenses and loss of wages incurred for examination. Suspension of compensation during refusal to submit. Consequences of unreasonable refusal to submit to treatment not deemed to result from the injury."

Section 203, W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 203 of World War veterans' act, June 7, 1924. No reference in report. Amended July 2, 1926.

House Report 1217, page 9, and Senate Report 1105, page 5, Sixty-ninth Congress, read as follows:

"20. Section 9 of the bill amends section 203 by providing an allowance of $2.65 per day to men undergoing observation or examination by the bureau. This allowance is to be in lieu of reimbursement for loss of wages now authorized by law. In many instances it has been found that farmers, commission merchants, etc., have been unable to secure reimbursement because no actual loss of wages can be shown. The committee felt that all men should be placed on the same footing. Consequently this amendment is recommended."

Section 905: Amends section 205 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 305, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in the act of October 6, 1917, and known as section 305 (H. Rept. 130, pt. 3, p. 10, 65th Cong.); amended August 9, 1921 (H. Rept. 104, p. 8, and S. Rept. 231, p. 11, 66th Cong.).

Section 205, W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 205, World War veterans' act, June 7, 1924.

Senate Report 397, page 4, Sixty-eighth Congress, reads as follows:

"33. Retroactive reductions in compensation are forbidden except in case of fraud, and it is provided that reduction or discontinuance of compensation is to become effective the first day of the second calendar month after the reduction or discontinuance is determined."

Section 206: Amends section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 300, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in the war risk insurance act of October 6, 1917.

House Report 130, part 3, page 2, Sixty-fifth Congress, reads as follows:

"The second risk indemnified against is that of loss of life or limb. This forms the subject matter of the present pension legislation and legislation giving gratuities of a half year's or a year's pay in case of death in the service.

"The bill proceeds upon a new basis. It follows the analogy of the workmen's compensation acts. It deals with the soldier and the sailor as a military employee of the Government. It offers not a gratuity in the shape of a pension, but a compensation if in the course of the service he suffer injury or contract disease.

"Pensions, especially since the day of service-pension legislation, have come to be looked upon as Government charity, and the present pension legislation is both inadequate and unjust. It is of the utmost importance, both for the practical results and for the psychological effect upon the men, their families, and the people of the country that a new point of view be established. This is accomplished by following the analogy of the workmen's compensation acts by designating the payments to them as compensation and not as pensions and by separating the administration of this law absolutely and completely from the administration of the pension laws. The pension legislation is not repealed; the old soldiers and their families are not affected by the bill; it applies only to those now in or hereafter entering the service. For them this bill is a substitute for the pensions and gratuities."

Amended June 25, 1918, House Report 576, pages 11–12, Sixty-fifth Congress.

Amended December 24, 1919, Senate Report 339, page 2, Sixty-sixth Congress.

Amended August 9, 1921, House Report 104, pages 7–8, and Senate Report 231, pages 9–10, Sixty-seventh Congress.

Amended March 4, 1923, House Report 1704, page 1, Sixty-seventh Congress.

Section 200, W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 200 on June 7, 1924, enlistment on or after April 6, 1917, and before July 2, 1921; Senate Report 397, page 3, and House Report 763, pages 5–6, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended March 4, 1925,

House Report 1518, pages 3-4, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended July 2, 1926, House Report 1217, pages 3-4, and Senate Report 1105, pages 3-4, Sixty-ninth Congress; amended July 3, 1930, Senate Report 1128, pages 5-6, Seventy-first Congress.

Section 907: Amends section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 405, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in the second proviso of section 405 of war risk insurance act of October 6, 1917, House Report 130, part 3, Sixty-fifth Congress, amended by section 13 of act of May 20, 1918, House Report 471 and Senate Report 429, Sixty-fifth Congress.

Section 19, W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 19 of the World War veterans' act, June 7, 1924, House Report 763, page 4, and Senate Report 397, page 2, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended March 4, 1925, House Report 1518, page 2, Sixty-eighth Congress; amended May 29, 1928, House Report 1274, page 1, and Senate Report 1297, page 1, Seventieth Congress; amended July 3, 1930, Senate Report 1128, pages 1-3, Seventy-first Congress.

Section 908: Repeals sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 408, W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in the third proviso of section 408 of the war risk insurance act, as amended. August 9, 1921, Senate Report 231, page 12, Sixty-seventh Congress, and March 4, 1923, House Report 1704, pages 2-3, Sixty-seventh Congress.

Section 305 W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 305 of the World War veterans' act, June 7, 1924 (S. Rept. 397, p. 5, 68th Cong.); amended July 2, 1926 (H. Rept. 1217, pp. 7-8, and S. Rept. 1105, p. 7, 69th Cong.); amended May 29, 1928 (S. Rept. 1297, p. 7, 70th Cong.).

Section 309 W. W. V. A.: This provision was first placed in the act of July 2, 1926, World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (S. Rept. 1105, pp. 7-8, 69th Cong.).

House Report 1217, page 8, Sixty-ninth Congress, reads as follows:

"36. Section 20 of the bill adds a new section to the law to be known as section 309. This section permits revival of insurance in cases where the $60 bonus provided by the act of February 24, 1919, was not paid, and which, if applied to the payment of premiums when due, would have equaled or exceeded the same. In view of the fact that this $60 bonus was not paid to the estate of the individuals who died, or to their heirs, it was felt that it should be allowed to apply to payment of insurance premiums if it was sufficient to cover those due at the time of lapse."

Section 909: Amends section 500 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended.

Section 13 W. R. I. A.: This provision was first placed in section 13 of the war risk insurance act as amended May 20, 1918. (H. Rept. 471, 65th Cong., and S. Rept. 429, 65th Cong.)

Section 500 W. W. V. A.: Amended and superseded by section 500 of the World War veterans' act, June 7, 1924. No reference in report. Amended March 4, 1925. (H. Rept. 1518, p. 10, 68th Cong.)

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives is on trial at the bar of public opinion, and upon the action of the majority of its membership depends whether it shall merit the anathemas of a patient and long-suffering people or settle down to sane and speedy action to balance the Budget and reduce governmental expenses. Public sentiment is aroused by the desperate plight of our country, and it is no time to split hairs about whose salary is to be cut or whose pet project is to be curtailed. What the country needs and what it demands is prompt and decisive action which will restore confidence and certainty as to the immediate future.

The people know that we possess no magic wand to produce prosperity by any miracle, but there are certain undebatable and indisputable facts patent to all upon which Congress must act or be condemned. Not to act upon these vital matters will bring deserved censure.

One of these obvious facts is a colossal deficit. There can be no return to prosperity with the Government running into the red almost $6,000,000 every day. What have we done about it? An economy bill was brought before this House in good faith by our leaders on both sides of the aisle and it was cut to ribbons by the votes of those who paid no attention to their leadership, but in evident defiance of public opinion and the pleas of responsible and patriotic party leaders led by the President of the United States, emasculated that measure to such a degree that it should merit the contempt of every self-respecting Member of this House. It was a pitiful legislative abortion. Planned to economize and reduce, it did neither to any degree worthy of the name. Both of these ends can be attained without seriously crippling any department or necessary bureau, and it is the imperative duty of this House to move swiftly to that end regardless of the inevitable protests of those whose selfish personal ends are always opposed to economy if it happens to interfere with their particular interest.

When the House had before it a tax bill which was equitable and so written that it would not have been a hardship on any one and would have raised the revenue necessary, with a corresponding economy measure, to balance the Budget, the House in a wild and irresponsible fit of obsequious devotion to what was termed the interest of the "common people," scuttled it with an uproarious outburst of applause. Yet we hear members complain about the denunciation by the press of both parties of the dereliction of Congress which it avers has deserted the country in its hour of need and heeded the seductive voice of interested lobbies. Do we not deserve it?

What is the remedy? First, pass a tax bill to raise more revenue and, second, reduce expenses so that the combined legislation will balance the Budget. This the House has miserably failed to do, and then winces when reminded of it by the President. In the early weeks of this session the House rose nobly to the occasion and passed the Reconstruction Finance act and other remedial legislation with a fine disregard of political lines, and the country was reassured and responded favorably to these temporary measures patiently waiting for the promised tax measure and the trimming of expenses to balance the National Budget.

Our legislation in the early weeks of this session, which reassured the public and had a most wholesome effect upon the morale of the people, the stability of our banks, and the solvency of our other financial and industrial institutions, has been eclipsed and nullified by the failure of Congress bravely and firmly to set to work, and at the risk of the political life of its Members, if need be, to pass an adequate tax bill and to reduce salaries and appropriations, thus balancing the Budget, and then adjourn and go home and explain to the dear people why it did not do so sooner.

In February, 1925, in a speech in opposition to the increase of salaries for Members of Congress, I said:

> The increase in cost of government, Federal, State, and municipal, has shamed the phophecy of the pessimist. At the present time the cost of our Federal Government for one year exceeds the entire cost of government from 1790 to 1861. The increases in the cost of State and municipal governments have been likewise prodigious.

Since that time the cost of government has increased more than a billion dollars. Is it not time that Congress get down to "brass tacks" and correct these extravagances? The income of the farmer has all but disappeared and the wages of employees in every line of industry have been reduced. Why should we hesitate to reduce the salaries of those who work for the Government? They should thank God they have a job and sacrifice with the rest of the people until our country enjoys a better day. It will not be unjust to them when we are sailing fairer seas.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, the large deficit in our National Treasury has not only necessitated the provision of means by which additional taxes may be raised but it has also necessitated the drastic reductions in governmental expenditures. A special Economy Committee, appointed by the Speaker of the House, was authorized to make an investigation as to the manner in which national expenditures may be reduced and to report an economy bill to the House. This investigation was made and the bill was reported.

The substance of the bill was to cut the salaries of Federal employees over and above the sum of $1,000, 11 per cent, which would also include the same reduction in the salaries of Senators and Congressmen. Additional provisions of this bill are as follows:

Suspension of Saturday half holidays for Government employees; estimated saving of $9,000,000.

Reduction of salaries of Federal employees; estimated saving of $67,300,000.

Suspension of the provision of law permitting compensation for overtime and night work and work on Sundays and holidays; estimated saving of $5,600,000.

Reductions in printing and binding of paper and stationery; estimated saving of $5,000,000.

Provision for the consolidation of the Army and Navy Departments into one department, to be known as the department of national defense; estimated savings undetermined, but very substantial amount.

The estimated saving through the provisions of the economy bill as a whole is approximately $200,000,000.

When the bill came before the House for consideration, the galleries were filled with Government employees, who were vigorously protesting against the reduction of their salaries. A situation was then presented as to whether or not the Congressmen would yield to the insistent demands of the employees or to the demands of thousands of citizens of their home districts who were not able to be present and speak in their own behalf.

The Congressmen from the large cities, who have many Federal employees therein, were vigorously opposing salary reductions, yet offering no substantial substitute for the raising of money to take the place of the savings that might be made in salary reductions.

All Federal employees receiving a salary not exceeding $1,000 were not subject to the 11 per cent reduction under the bill. Early in the consideration of the bill an amendment was proposed to increase the exemption to $2,500. I voted against this amendment, for I believed it unfair to the people of Kansas who have not been privileged to receive $2,500 per year, but who must respond liberally in taxes for the support of the Federal Government and the various subdivisions thereof. I did not believe such an exemption would be fair, in view of the fact that a substantial portion of the money to pay such salaries would have to be derived through the new revenue act, which imposes direct taxes upon the people of this country, thereby increasing the burdens on an already overtaxed people.

The rights of the great masses of the people were disregarded in the action taken upon this amendment by its adoption, thus increasing the exemption.

In the face of such increased exemption, the House then proceeded by its vote to continue the Saturday half-holiday provision of the law, thus permitting Federal employees to have a half day off on Saturdays with full pay even though the exemption of $2,500 was allowed. I voted not to allow the Saturday half holidays. Farmers throughout the sixth district of Kansas have worked from 12 to 16 hours per day and received practically nothing for their labor and long hours, yet they would be compelled to make a contribution to aid the Government employees to have a Saturday half holiday with full pay.

Many of the Congressmen believed that it would be fair and just that the salaries of the Senators and Congressmen should first be reduced, thereby setting an example to the employees that Congress was willing that each Member might be personally affected before extending reductions to the employees of the Government. I voted to reduce my own salary 20 per cent, but this amendment also was disallowed. In the bill, as finally passed by the House, the salaries of all Government employees, including the salaries of Senators and Congressmen, over $2,500, will be reduced 11 per cent. In the adoption of the exemption from $1,000 to $2,500, the estimated saving in this portion of the bill was reduced from sixty-seven million to approximately twelve million.

I have voted during this session for many millions of dollars' reductions in Federal appropriations, but it seems that the combinations of various interests militate against such reductions, and while appropriations have been very drastically reduced during this session, yet there are many instances where still greater reductions could have been made without detrimentally affecting the proper functioning of the Government.

Congress has not yet responded as generously for farm relief as is needed to place that business on a parity with industry. There can be no permanent economic recovery until the farmer enjoys reasonable returns for his industry and toil. Give him this opportunity and the wheels of progress will again revolve and the sunlight of prosperity will shed its light of happiness and contentment throughout our land.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 4, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, May 4, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

JUDICIARY

(10 a. m.)

To limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts (H. R. 10594, H. R. 11508).

FLOOD CONTROL

(10.30 a. m.)

Hearings on Missouri project.

AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

Hearings on Farm Bureau bills.

RULES

(10.30 a. m.)

Hearings, immigration bills.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

549. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the fifteenth annual report of the Federal Farm Loan Board, covering operations during the calendar year 1931 (H. Doc. No. 36); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

550. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 30, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on Poplar and Temperance Rivers, Minn.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

551. A letter from the acting chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, transmitting certain preliminary data prepared for the immediate use of the Senate in partial response to the requirements of Senate Resolution No. 156, for information on depreciated currencies and international trade thereunder; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. DICKSTEIN: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 11552. A bill to provide for review of the action of consular officers in refusing immigration visas; without amendment (Rept. No. 1193). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAMSPECK: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7232. A bill providing for settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men for extra pay provided by act of January 12, 1899; with amendment (Rept. No. 1194). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 211. A resolution for the consideration of H. R. 8174, "A bill to exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens"; without amendment (Rept. No. 1195). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SWANK: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11010. A bill to amend the statute relating to patent disclaimers; without amendment (Rept. No. 1196). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KELLY of Illinois: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11019. A bill to limit inventors to priority of two years before filing applications for patent; without amendment (Rept. No. 1197). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PATTERSON: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11087. A bill to abolish the statute permitting renewal of patent applications; without amendment (Rept. No. 1198). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DIES: Committee on Patents. H. R. 10157. A bill to expedite prosecution of patent applications pending more than three years; without amendment (Rept. No. 1199). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SIROVICH: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11016. A bill to limit the life of a patent to a term commencing with the date of the application; without amendment (Rept. No. 1200). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RICH: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11017. A bill permitting single signature in patent applications and validating joint patent for sole invention; without amendment (Rept. No. 1201). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11018. A bill to empower assignee of inventor to file divisional, continuation, renewal, or reissue application; without amendment (Rept. No. 1202). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MOBLEY: Committee on Patents. H. R. 11054. A bill to prevent fraud, deception, or improper practice in connection with business before the United States Patent Office, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1203). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. JONES: Committee on Agriculture. S. 263. An act to promote the conservation of wild life, fish, and game, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1204). Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5417) for the relief of Lieut. Francis H. A. McKeon, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TIERNEY: A bill (H. R. 11809) to amend section 5219 of the Revised Statutes, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SELVIG: A bill (H. R. 11810) providing for payment of $25 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of Minnesota from the funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H. R. 11811) to provide for emergency construction of highways and other authorized public works to aid in increasing employment, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. YON: A bill (H. R. 11812) to establish markets in the large cities of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MITCHELL: A bill (H. R. 11813) restricting the appointment of employees by Members of Congress of the United States in certain cases; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LEAVITT: A bill (H. R. 11814) to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act of 1924, as amended; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. COLLINS: A bill (H. R. 11815) to provide that transferors for collection of negotiable instruments shall be preferred creditors of national banks in certain cases; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. COLTON: A bill (H. R. 11816) to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration; to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development; to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon public range, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: Resolution (H. Res. 211) for the consideration of H. R. 8174, "A bill to exempt from the quota fathers and mothers over 60 years of age of United States citizens"; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SOMERS of New York: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 379) to authorize payment of foreign debts in silver under certain limitations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H. R. 11817) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Lawrence F. Judge; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BURCH: A bill (H. R. 11818) granting a pension to Luther C. Thomas; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CARDEN: A bill (H. R. 11819) for the relief of T. J. Morrison; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COLLINS: A bill (H. R. 11820) for the relief of Charles B. Cameron, Frank K. Ethridge, and Hardy R. Stone; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 11821) granting a pension to C. C. Campbell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DISNEY: A bill (H. R. 11822) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda J. Harp; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11823) granting an increase of pension to Tabitha C. Steward; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DRANE: A bill (H. R. 11824) for the relief of the Tampa Marine Co., a corporation, of Tampa, Fla.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ELLZEY: A bill (H. R. 11825) for the relief of Anthony Wenzel Kaukusch; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 11826) granting a pension to Sarah J. Marcum; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FISH: A bill (H. R. 11827) granting an increase of pension to Minerva C. Bedford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11828) granting an increase of pension to Agnes E. Silvernail; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11829) granting a pension to J. N. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11830) for the relief of Lillie R. Culbertson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H. R. 11831) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. King; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARLAN: A bill (H. R. 11832) granting an increase of pension to Martha E. Emrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11833) granting a pension to Frank J. Perin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 11834) granting a pension to Frances E. Baldwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KVALE: A bill (H. R. 11835) granting an increase of pension to Nora Mitchell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOVETTE: A bill (H. R. 11836) for the relief of Julia Wardrep; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11837) granting a pension to Aaron J. Blevins; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11838) for the relief of Benjamin H. Pope; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11839) for the relief of Cecil E. Phipps; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11840) for the relief of Isaac M. Donnelly; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11841) granting a pension to Dora M. May; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11842) granting a pension to Paul Holcomb; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11843) for the relief of Kate Jennings; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11844) for the relief of the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H. R. 11845) for the relief of Edward F. Shea; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11846) granting a pension to Delia Conley; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11847) for the relief of Joseph Peter Joyce; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11848) for the relief of William Walter Shyne; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MOREHEAD: A bill (H. R. 11849) granting an increase of pension to Emily F. Dougall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARKER of New York: A bill (H. R. 11850) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Simpson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11851) granting an increase of pension to Agnes E. Coons; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 11852) granting a pension to Bertha Hiller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11853) for the relief of William Randolph Grimes; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. SWANK: A bill (H. R. 11854) granting a pension to Sarah E. Wilkerson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWICK: A bill (H. R. 11855) granting an increase of pension to Aldisa Black; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TABER: A bill (H. R. 11856) granting an increase of pension to Ellen Hewitt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITLEY: A bill (H. R. 11857) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Blum; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11858) granting an increase of pension to Elvie I. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11859) granting an increase of pension to Alice R. Hollister; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H. R. 11860) granting an increase of pension to Mary Knadle; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7385. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the New York Tow Boat Exchange, expressing the opinion that the functions and duties of the Steamboat Inspection Service have been carried out efficiently and satisfactorily to all concerned by its present administrative head, and urge that the present Supervising Inspector General of the Steamboat Inspection Service shall be retained as the directing head in the event the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection Service are consolidated; to the Committee on Economy.

7386. By Mr. DEROUEN: Petition of J. S. Brock, Louisiana State bank commissioner, New Orleans, La., opposing the Glass banking bill and also the Steagall guaranty of deposits bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7387. By Mr. HORR: Petition of 600 citizens of Bremerton and Seattle, Wash., urging Congress to authorize funds for the immediate construction of a machine-shop building at the United States navy yard, Bremerton, Wash., and stating their approval of House bill 6018; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

7388. By Mr. JAMES: Telegram from La Paige, adjutant of Cloverland Chapter, No. 23, American Legion, of Iron Mountain, Mich., requesting support of any motion made to strike out of economy measure items referring to veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7389. Also, telegram from Marquette County Chapter, No. 22, Disabled Veterans of the World War, Marquette, Mich., requesting support of any motion to strike out of the economy measure all items referring to veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7390. Also, telegram from Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Houghton County Chapter, No. 27, of Houghton County, Mich., through Bert M. Obenhoff, commander, asking support of any motion to strike out all items in economy measure referring to veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7391. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of R. S. Spaulding, E. D. Stratton, J. B. Scott, J. Carmichael, and Eugene Strange, committee, submitting resolutions adopted by citizens of Blum, Tex., favoring payment of adjusted-service certificates and opposing any reduction of benefits affecting World War veterans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7392. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of William H. Stanley (Inc.), New York City, favoring the Hawley bill with reference to duties on wood pulp, lumber, and other items, including salmon; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7393. Also, petition of the New York Tow Boat Exchange, New York City, favoring the coordination and consolidation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection Service to be known as the bureau of navigation and steamboat inspection service; to the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries.

7394. Also, petition of American Fruit Growers, New York Division, New York City, favoring reduction of governmental expenditures; to the Committee on Economy.

7395. By Mr. SELVIG: Petition of M. H. Dahl, Andrew Larson, and 81 other citizens of Hawley, Minn., and vicinity, urging enactment by Congress of the farmers' farm relief bill (Frazier bill) in order to free the farmer from the tremendous interest burden; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7396. By Mr. SMITH of West Virginia: Resolution of Groups 3 and 4 of the West Virginia Bankers Association, protesting against the amendment to the Glass bill making provision for state-wide branch banking for national banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7397. Also, resolution of Groups 3 and 4 of the West Virginia Bankers Association, protesting against the Davis-Kelly coal bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7398. By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: Petition of Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church of New Bethlehem, Pa., urging protection of reindeer herds in Alaska; to the Committee on the Territories.

7399. By Mr. SWANSON: Petition of James A. Walls and 110 others, of Fontanelle, Iowa, against any modification of the prohibition laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7400. By Mr. THOMASON: Petition of certain railroad employees, supporting House bill 9891, and in opposition to House bill 10023, known as the railroad pension bills; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7401. Also, petition of citizens of El Paso, Tex., opposing further appropriations for able-bodied ex-service men; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1932

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., LL. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful Father, who through Thy blessed Son hast taught us to take no anxious thought for our life; help us to cast away all faithlessness and murmuring, that we may rely with perfect confidence upon Thy love and goodness, finding in our Saviour's life the guidance needful for our country's weal as to-day we walk with painful steps and slow. May Thy will be wholly done in us; and if this weary flesh would have aught else than what Thou deemest best, do Thou control and sustain us both in body and soul, that we, being submissive to Thy love, may find our rest in Thee both in the life that now is and in that perfect life which one day shall be ours. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. FESS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8083) providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy in 1932, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 460. An act to give war-time commissioned rank to retired warrant officers and enlisted men;

S. 2428. An act to provide for the confirmation of a selection of certain lands by the State of Arizona for the benefit of the University of Arizona;

S. 2967. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.; and

S. 3953. An act to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain."

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Kendrick	Schall
Austin	Davis	Keyes	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	King	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	La Follette	Shortridge
Bingham	Fess	Lewis	Smith
Blaine	Fletcher	Logan	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	Long	Steiwer
Bratton	George	McGill	Stephens
Broussard	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Glenn	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrnes	Gore	Morrison	Trammell
Capper	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hayden	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Howell	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Hull	Pittman	Waterman
Costigan	Johnson	Reed	Watson
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	White
Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from A. W. Sharp, of Fort Smith; the Bradley Lumber Co. of Arkansas, signed by C. L. Foretich, of Warren; and W. M. Harrison, general manager Long Bell Lumber Sales Corporation, of Pine Bluff, in the State of Arkansas, praying for the imposition of an adequate tariff on lumber in the pending tax bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from Max D. Miller, of Marianna; the Arkansas Soft Pine Bureau and Southern Oak Flooring Industries, both of Little Rock; L. J. Arnold, of Crossett; Z. K. Thomas, manager Southern Lumber Co., of Warren; and F. W. Scott, Union Saw Mill Co., of Huttig, all in the State of Arkansas, praying for an embargo on imports of Russian lumber and the imposition of an adequate tariff on lumber imported from other countries, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented the memorial of the Southern Michigan Fruit Growers' Exchange, of Lawton, Mich., and sundry other grape growers of the States of Michigan, Arkansas, California, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the imposition of a tax of 11 cents a gallon on unfermented grape juice, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COSTIGAN presented a petition of sundry citizens, being miners and prospectors, of Creede, Colo., praying that they be allowed a stay until July 1, 1933, on the legal demands of annual assessments upon mining claims, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. ASHURST presented a communication from sundry citizens, being railway mail clerks, of Little Rock, Ark., indorsing his stand in opposition to Federal pay cuts, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REDUCTION OF FEDERAL SALARIES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I present a letter in the form of a petition from the Independent Retail Grocers' Association of Arizona. Not desiring to encumber the RECORD with the enormously large number of petitions that I have received, I will ask that this one be read and appropriately referred. It is similar to many others I have received.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and was read, as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 27, 1932.

Whereas it has been brought to our attention that there is pending in Congress legislation having for its purpose the reduction of salaries of governmental employees; and

Whereas the large majority of employees who will be affected under such legislation are earning $1,500 or less per year, it appears to this association such legislation can not materially benefit the taxpayer or the country at large in its efforts to adjust and balance the Budget; and

Whereas such legislation is of a class nature, and will be injurious to small merchants, and particularly retail grocers, with whom the largest portion of small salaries is spent; it will be detrimental to their business to encourage such legislation; and

Whereas such legislation, if enacted, will retard the buying power of the wage-earning classes, with a consequent detrimental effect on all manufacturers, and will lend strength to large interests who are only awaiting some such loophole to begin a general campaign of wage reduction throughout the entire Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, This association strenuously objects to the enactment of such legislation, and a copy of this resolution be sent to the Arizona Members in Congress requesting their active opposition to any such measure.

INDEPENDENT RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION,
WILLIAM Y. MURDOCH, Executive Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4340) authorizing the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Oklahoma to hear and determine certain claims of the Seminole Nation or Tribe of Indians, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 936) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4095) to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same" by extending its provisions to provide for the punishment of stealing from passenger or Pullman cars, or from passengers on such cars, while such cars are parts of interstate trains, and authorizing prosecution therefor in any district in which the defendant may have taken or been in possession of the stolen articles, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 637) thereon.

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing of America, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BINGHAM:

A bill (S. 4565) to amend the railway labor act; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4566) to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to hear and consider the application of the Railway Express Agency relative to certain refunds; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 4567) to provide for the settlement of claims against the United States on account of property damage, personal injury, or death; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. LOGAN introduced a Senate bill, No. 4568, which see under a separate heading.)

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill, but before doing so I should like to ask the Chair to what committee bills relating to loans and the rates of interest on loans to veterans should be referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Bills and joint resolutions relating to the subject matter referred to by the Senator from Nebraska have, in the regular course of procedure, been referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NORRIS. I introduce two bills on that subject, and ask that they may be referred to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4569) relating to loans to veterans on their adjusted-service certificates; and

A bill (S. 4570) relating to payment of premiums on certain contracts of Government life insurance; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. COSTIGAN:

A bill (S. 4571) granting an increase of pension to Thomas N. Pray (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4572) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine claims of certain bands or tribes of Indians residing in the State of Oregon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 4573) authorizing the sale of the southerly end of the breakwater at Indiana Harbor, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4574) to extend the provisions of the national bank act to the Virgin Islands of the United States, and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4575) granting a pension to Fannie S. Greene (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4576) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to grant an easement for railroad right of way over and upon a portion of the helium-gas-bearing lands of the United States of America, in Potter County, in the State of Texas; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WATERMAN and Mr. COSTIGAN:

A bill (S. 4577) to authorize construction of the North Platte Tunnel project, Colorado; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4578) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjudicate the rights of the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians to compensation on a basis of guardian and ward; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH of Montana:

A bill (S. 4579) granting a pension to Bird Above; to the Committee on Pensions.

EXERCISE OF PARDONING POWER OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to be appropriately referred, and as it is only about 10 lines long, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4563) to further amend section 5330, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 4, 1909 (ch. 321, sec. 327, 35 Stat. 1151; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 658), was read twice by its title and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, by the judgment of any court or judicial officer of the United States, or any court or judicial officer of any Territory or possession thereof, in any criminal proceeding, any person is sentenced to two kinds of punishment, the one pecuniary and the other corporal, the President shall have full discretionary power to pardon, remit, in whole or in part, either one of the two kinds, without in any manner impairing the legal validity of the other kind or of any portion of either kind not pardoned or remitted.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask permission for about three minutes to explain the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, the bill relates to the pardoning power of the President of the United States. Under the present laws the pardoning power is found in section 5330 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 327, chapter 321, of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1151). The power is found in this language:

Whenever, by the judgment of any court or judicial officer of the United States, in any criminal proceeding, any person is sentenced to two kinds of punishment, the one pecuniary and the other corporal, the President shall have full discretionary power to pardon or remit, in whole or in part, either one of the two kinds, without in any manner impairing the legal validity of the other kind or any portion of either kind not pardoned or remitted.

The distinguished junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] in speaking of the Massie case the other day suggested that, in his opinion, the President had the power now to grant a pardon and cited a case where the pardoning power had been exercised in a case coming from Alaska. I doubt, under that section of the statute, whether the President has any such power, and I doubt whether he would be justified in following the precedent referred to by the distinguished Senator from Illinois; but if the bill which I have proposed should be enacted, there would be no question about the power of the President to grant a pardon where the conviction had been had before a Territorial court. It adds that language to the statute as it now exists. It simply allows the President to grant a pardon to anyone convicted in any Territorial court.

I believe that under the present conditions of affairs it is important that the bill be immediately passed. There have been many suggestions made which are not feasible and which probably would establish very bad precedents and some of which probably are hardly justified in relation to the situation in Hawaii at the present time. The passage of this bill would not disturb anything that exists over there, so far as the pardoning power is concerned. The governor would still have that right. It would simply mean that the President of the United States would have the power to review the record and exercise his discretion in the granting of a pardon. Congress has authority to do that. It may not have authority, and I do not think it does have authority, to do some of the things which have been suggested and which probably are embodied in some of the bills and resolutions which have been offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] a question. That Senator introduced a bill yesterday here relative to the pardoning of certain persons in Hawaii?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask to what committee that bill was referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, since the eminent Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has made an allusion to a view expressed by myself that, in my judgment, the President of the United States under the Constitution has the legal authority to grant a pardon to those of whom we have been speaking charged with offenses in Hawaii, I beg to say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Illinois making a statement? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg pardon. I will consume only a second of the time of the Senate.

Mr. President, the matter on which I placed my conclusion came up in the following manner: In the Territory of Alaska during the Wilson administration a man by the name of Stroud seemed to have been charged and convicted of the offense of murder. I was in the White House with other Senators on some mission with President Wilson having nothing to do with the case I refer to. As I passed to the door of the President, and old lady stood at the door of the White House office. There she was with her bent body, wearied with travel, her eyes streaming with tears. She had come in anguish in her sadness all the way from Alaska to seek some relief for her son. He was to die on the following Friday by being hanged. I, with others, including Mr. Tumulty, then Secretary to the President, and one or two Senators who were present, forced an immediate audience with the President. I took upon myself to present the poor old lady's case, knowing nothing of her whatever or of the offense with which her son was charged. I only pressed on the President the sad fact that she was the mother of the boy and had come so far in her bedraggled misery to plead for the life of her son.

The President, after hearing me, had some conference with some of the law officers by telephone—I am unable to inform the Senate further as to that—but at the end of our conference and my pleading, he granted a commutation. He commuted the sentence of hanging to one of life imprisonment. This was under the theory, as I assumed—was under the Constitution—as an expression of his power over the Territories. The suggestion came from some source, probably from the law department, that the act of the President in commuting the sentence as a matter of law was justified. The case is now of record. I do not know exactly what advice the President had, but I am offering now to the able Senator from Kentucky the fact upon which I urge this theory of the pardoning power of the President in such cases as parallel to the instance I had participated in from Alaska.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether the defendant was charged with a violation of a Federal statute upon some Indian reservation or upon some vessel which was in the jurisdiction of the United States, or whether he was charged with a violation of the homicide statute enacted by the Legislature of Alaska? In the former case undoubtedly I think the President had the power to pardon, but in the latter case I doubt it.

Mr. LEWIS. I must be very frank with the Senator and say that I have no other facts in my mind than that this poor mother had come in her distress to save her boy, and I lent my aid and did not make investigation further as to the details sufficient to reply to the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I crave a moment only in regard to the bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Arizona proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Congress is not lately elevating itself in the esteem of the American people, and it does many things with which I do not agree; but I think of all the things that would meet with a serious reaction and a sour note, it would be for Congress now to attempt to grant a pardon. The power to pardon in the Hawaiian case rests with the governor or with the President or with either or both of them, but even in the most remote flight of the imagination of any lawyer's mind it can not be conceived that the Congress can grant a pardon to anyone.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. HAYDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 244, after line 11, insert the following:

"SEC. 619½. Exemption of Indian arts and crafts: All articles of native Indian handicraft manufactured by Indians on Indian reservations or in Indian schools, including jewelry, blankets, rugs and other woven articles, baskets, pottery, bead and quill work, bows and arrows, leather work, hand carvings, canoes and boats, toys, paintings, and embroideries shall be exempt from any taxes imposed by this act."

APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. GLASS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the resolution (S. Res. 206) opposing reductions in appropriations for the Postal and Customs Services that would seriously disrupt such services, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 1, line 7, strike out all after the word "appropriations" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to a point where the Post Office and Treasury Departments would be required to make the wholesale dismissal of employees proposed by the heads of these departments."

INSURANCE CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I submit a concurrent resolution; and inasmuch as it simply provides for the correction of an error in the enrollment of a bill, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the concurrent resolution be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice President of the United States in signing the enrolled bill (S. 3584) to require all insurance corporations formed under the provisions of Chapter XVIII of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia to maintain their principal offices and places of business within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded, and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reenroll the bill with the following amendment in the nature of a correction, viz: On page 1, line 11, of the engrossed House amendment, after the word "corporation," insert the following: "kept in a branch-office agency of such corporation."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIAN FAMILY IDEALS

Mr. SHEPPARD. At the request of Rev. William Matthew Holderby, manager of the National Christian-Family Defense League, I offer a concurrent resolution urging the development of Christian family ideals in the United States. I ask that the concurrent resolution may be set out at this point in the RECORD, and with it a letter from Mr. Holderby explaining the measure, and that both the concurrent resolution and the letter may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution with the accompanying letter will be printed in the RECORD and referred, as requested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 28), submitted by request, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is as follows:

Whereas the United States of America is confronted with the conditions that have disturbed all of the nations of the world; and

Whereas it is manifest that these national disturbances in the fields of social, industrial, political, and religious life have been produced through failure to maintain family solidarity and caused a loss of the balance between the spiritual and material elements of national life; and

Whereas the alarming increase in the disturbance of domestic relationships and the increase of juvenile delinquency, as shown by court records, are signs of the ravages being worked to destroy the family, the unit that incorporates the basic elements of national integrity; and

Whereas statesmanship must concern itself for the perpetuation of the state by building a future citizenship in the strength of morality, and is warranted to draw upon every spiritual resource to achieve this end, for, as Washington said in his Farewell Address: "Both reason and experience forbid us to believe that the Nation's morality can continue after the exclusion of religious principles"; and

Whereas experience—the history of humanity—has demonstrated that a Republic like ours is strong and a blessing to its people and the world according to the moral character and intelligent religion of the people, for the strength and efficiency of any government by the people is in the character of the intelligence and morals of its citizens, inseparable from their religion, no non-Christian nation having ever retained its civil liberties; and

Whereas in this two hundredth anniversary of the birth of the first President of our United States of America it is the purpose of the National Government to honor his service to his country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That this Congress hereby appeals to the citizenship of the United States of America who are parents, pastors, and teachers, that they address themselves to serious and sustained effort to integrate within the family life of the Nation those ideals of spirituality represented by the simple virtues of the homely and humble life lived in the fear of God, that there be restored through the cooperation of those institutions growing out of the family—the home, the church, and the state—the balance between the spiritual and material, and that the remedy for these prevailing deteriorating conditions of society be effected through the inculcation in our growing youth of spirituality, morality, and good conscience toward the God of our Nation.

That it is the judgment of the Congress of the United States of America that only upon the lines herein suggested can there be the perpetuation of the home, the protection of the church, and the preservation of the state. In achieving these great ends it shall mean the crime checked, social conditions corrected, economic security maintained, industrial concord established, the future of the state assured, the conservation of our youth for future citizenship provided, and our Nation preserved for that destiny intended for it by the Almighty God.

The accompanying letter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is as follows:

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN-FAMILY DEFENSE LEAGUE,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1932.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Pursuant to your request at our last conference I am sending you this communication, that I trust will be the means of your calling to the attention of the Senate the matter that we discussed relative to their hoped-for action on a resolution germane to the subject of national defense as the idea of the family is built back into the life of the Nation.

I am very happy to inclose for you copies of the resolutions adopted by the State Legislatures of Texas, South Dakota, and Illinois that pertain to the subject. These resolutions are of record as noted on the attached pages in the different journals of the several State legislatures mentioned.

The National Christian-Family Defense League is the enlarged effort of the Christian Family Crusade, an organization incorporated according to the laws of the State of Illinois not for pecuniary profit. This movement already has conducted campaigns in several States of the Union and has received the cooperation of the Legislatures of Texas, South Dakota, and Illinois through resolutions adopted by these bodies supporting the cause of the American family. In typical city campaigns 41,000 were reached in Detroit, Mich.; 23,000 in San Antonio, Tex.; 19,000 in Houston, Tex.; and 12,000 in Tulare County (Calif.) campaign just closed. Out of the successful demonstration made in the aforementioned States it is planned to organize a simultaneous campaign in the 48 States of the Union, divided into 12 regional areas, these areas to include the 100 cities that are the centers of the 100 largest population areas of the United States, thus exhausting the total population area of the Nation as the field of operation. This effort is meant to be serious and sustained and not spasmodic.

The program is intended to build back into the mind of the people by public address, radiobroadcasting, the outdoor poster, and a national news service, the idea of the family; that it is the organizing unit of the home, the church, and the state, which has as its background the school. There is no partisan nor sectarian note intended in presenting the plea for family idealism. No controversial issues ever have been obtruded in the work previously conducted in a country-wide campaign by this organization. There has been given voluntarily the fullest recommendation as to its worth and helpfulness from leaders of the various faiths. The outstanding purpose of this effort will be to counteract the influences of those subversive movements that, in meaning to destroy the American family life, eventually would destroy the Nation.

Mr. Senator, your cooperation in securing the presentation of this appeal of the Congress to the Nation's citizenry in the way of their family responsibility will so recondition the state of the Union as to spiritual vigor and moral stamina as to secure the favor of God upon our people as no other act could do. This movement as initiated nationally will have a profound significance.

Very respectfully yours,

WM. MATTHEW HOLDERBY.

POLICY OF SENATE IN REDUCTION OF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 207), as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution (S. Res. 197) favoring a 10 per cent reduction by the Committee on Appropriations in the amount of appropriations in the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie over under the rule.

RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Lewiston Tribune, of Lewiston, Idaho, on the subject of "Recognizing Russia."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

RECOGNIZING RUSSIA

In Russia a few days ago Robert P. Lamont, who is there studying the livestock problem of the soviet, declared that the United States should be taking advantage of the great potential market afforded by a huge country that is endeavoring to industrialize itself. A short time afterward Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader of the Upper Chamber in Congress, came out for recognition of Russia, and Monday Representative H. T. RAINEY, of Illinois, Democratic leader of the House, took a similar stand. Senator BORAH and most of the progressive Republican Senators have long favored such action by this country. Thus sentiment in Congress seems to be crystallizing for trade with Russia.

The question of whether or not to recognize Russia is a good deal like the prohibition problem. Theoretically and in some moral aspects this country should not have anything to do with the communistic nation, but practically our isolation from the benefits of its large market places us pretty much in the position of cutting off our noses to spite our faces. Holding aloof from Russia makes Uncle Sam much like the rich, cultured, and sometimes deeply religious who will have nothing whatever to do with the poor and less fortunate citizens who may be the greatest users of the product on which the rich man founded his fortune and rose to eminence. It makes him like the rich "society churches" of the country that do more harm than good so far as spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ among the masses of the people is concerned.

Normal diplomatic relations have been established between the Soviet and the following countries: Afghanistan, Arabia, Austria, China, Danzig, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Lithuania, Mongolia, Norway, Persia, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, and Uruguay. Czechoslovakia has a trade treaty, but no diplomatic relations.

Why is the United States the only great power that has not recognized the Government of Russia? The official reason, as set forth last by the administration in September, 1926, is that Russia has repudiated the international debts of preceding governments, which amounted to some $260,000,000 on that date. Against this is the standing offer of the soviet to acknowledge these debts if the United States in turn would consider counterclaims arising out of the invasion of northern European Russia and eastern Siberia in the early years of the soviet, 1918–1920.

It seems quite obvious that the United States must soon meet the dilemma which is being forced on it and come to a decision as to whether or not it wishes to be on friendly terms with Russia and do business with it, or, on the other hand, to blacklist it and boycott its trade. The conditions which we dictated 10 years ago had some appropriateness then, but were such as a superior nation might impose on a weak nation. The situation has changed since then. Russia is once more powerful, its government is firmly established, and a friendly compromise of claims with recognition seems more appropriate than "take it or leave it" demands.

The only real argument in the way is the popular belief that in recognizing the Government of Russia we would approve the form of that government. That is pure moonshine. We would recognize not the form of government but the fact that the Russians have a government. Whether we like it or not it seems there to stay and we gain nothing by closing our eyes to the fact.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on Philippine independence delivered by J. D. Craig before the Third Annual Foreign Trade Convention held at Buffalo, N. Y., on April 14, 1932.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is generally recognized that political problems can not be separated from, nor intelligently solved, independent of closely related economic problems. When such attempts are made, political and social unrest and economic maladjustments of chaotic proportions are the penalty. Granting Philippine independence on the basis as proposed in the bills now pending before Congress attempts to do this very thing. The economic and social considerations are completely ignored, while the political angles are overemphasized by American and Filipino political leaders alike. They find justification for their respective stands in the constant reading of yards of resolutions in the sacred name of the "spirit of '76" and in the excessive reciting of declaration after declaration made at one time or another by every President since McKinley; all of which declarations say directly or indirectly it has always been the purpose of the people of the United States to recognize the independence of the Philippines when a stable government can be established there.

Since so many of our American legislators representing this and that selfish view attempt to draw analogies between the present situation in the Philippine Islands and the position of the thirteen Colonies at the time of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, either to justify their stand or possibly conceal their real motive in this issue, it seems only proper, therefore, to point out the complete lack of similarity of conditions in the two cases.

The thirteen Colonies were subjected to a long train of repeated injuries and usurpations under an absolute tyranny, but not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can any advocate of immediate independence of the Philippine Islands claim that the existing government in the islands has been one of grievous injuries and usurpations, having as its objective the establishment of an absolute tyranny. It might be said, however, that there is one possible similarity in so far as the question of taxation is injected into the issue, but it, too, is radically different in its purpose. George III hoped to retain the Colonies under England's sovereignty for purposes of taxation, whereas the representatives of the American people propose to liberate the Philippines in order that their products can be taxed by our prohibitive tariffs.

Aside from the fact that Congress does not have the power to alienate sovereignty of the United States in the Philippines, the lawmakers in Washington have selected the present time as most auspicious for terminating our commercial relations with what is now one of our best export markets—a time when political equilibrium throughout the area of the western Pacific and eastern Asia is badly shaken and when every element of stability in the Far East is threatened. It is the practically unanimous consensus of all responsible observers that should American leadership and guidance be withdrawn, and present commercial relations terminated, the whole economic structure of the Philippines would collapse, to be followed inevitably by political and social anarchy.

Could the Philippine people then muster adequate strength to defend themselves economically from the invasion of Japan, socially from the invasion of the expanding hordes of mass immigration from densely overpopulated China, or politically from the invasion of communist propaganda from Russia, which has already been so effective in promoting unrest and discontent among the peoples of the Far East?

SELFISH INTERESTS DEMAND SPEEDY ACTION IN FREEING PHILIPPINES

Almost without exception, every American advocating Philippine independence is actuated solely by the motive and desire to place a tariff on Philippine imports. To bear out this statement, one of the most aggressive proponents of Philippine independence—incidentally, a representative from a section where dairying and beet sugar are important industries—made the remark during the committee hearing on the Hare bill (H. R. 7233) that during the 14 years he has been a member of the Insular Affairs Committee the question of Philippine independence did not become a live issue until the economic features of it came to the front.

Others say:

"For the sake of our social and economic welfare, we should release the Philippines and give them their complete independence."

"The American farmer is urging protection from the free entry of Philippine products."

"In addition to being a millstone about the neck of the agricultural interests of this country, this Asiatic archipelago is a financial cancer preying upon its Treasury."

In justice to the Filipino people and to American capital invested in the islands, largely at the invitation and insistence of the United States Government, Philippine independence can not be granted on the basis as outlined in the bills now pending before Congress. From the standpoint of the Filipino, insufficient time is granted to prepare for the shock which must come with the severance of free-trade relations. From the standpoint of the American investors, who must withdraw from the islands on the severance of free-trade relations, insufficient time is allowed for the orderly liquidation of their invested capital. As to why adequate provision was not made in the bills is even more difficult to explain after studying the reports accompanying these bills as reported out of the committees.

In the report accompanying the Hawes-Cutting bill—to be considered soon in the Senate—we find the following:

"Obviously the existing free-trade relations between the United States and the Philippines can not be terminated abruptly without serious injury to Philippine economic interests and American trade with the islands. Investments made on the basis of free trade must be given sufficient time for adjustment or liquidation without loss."

The report accompanying the Hare bill as reported by the House committee states:

"Abrupt termination of that relationship (free trade) would destroy many of the basic industries of the Philippines; it would seriously imperil the future of the free Philippine nation and forfeit much of the gains the people have made under the guidance of the United States."

Thus you see both reports acknowledge what is necessary, yet both bills proceed to ignore it. How can an economic structure, molded entirely on a free-trade basis over a period of 23 years, be remolded as these bills provide to a nonfree-trade basis in 8 years, as provided in the House bill, or even 10 years, as provided in the Senate bill, without complete collapse?

What, then, is the real reason for this hasty and ruthless termination of our trade relations with the islands; and who, if any, is to be benefited? The answer, although not generally understood, is simple and easily explained. The visible opposition to the continuance of present trade relations is voiced by growers of beet and cane sugar, by cottonseed-oil interests, by the dairy industry, by certain agricultural organizations speaking for all of these various industries, by cordage interests, and by various labor organizations who see a great menace to the Pacific coast in future unrestricted Philippine immigration. The sole benefactor will be the Cuban sugar interests.

To understand clearly and appreciate fully the significance of this statement, it will be necessary to explain in some detail the noncompetitive nature of the principal Philippine products entering the American market—Philippine coconut oil and Philippine sugar.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURE SUFFERS NO INJURIOUS COMPETITION FROM PHILIPPINE COCONUT OIL

Unquestionably every right-thinking American citizen wants to give our farmers real help, not mere bogus remedies. Granting Philippine independence for the express purpose of levying our present tariff of 2 cents a pound on the coconut oil entering this country from the Philippines is not going to benefit the farmer one iota, as he has been led to believe would be the case by his paid representatives in Washington. The farmer might just as well complain of rubber coming into the country on the alleged ground that it competes with our domestic hides and leathers.

The major part of the agitation for a duty on coconut oil comes from the representatives of the dairy industry, who contend the levying of a 2 cents per pound tariff on Philippine coconut oil is necessary to protect the butter producer. The controlling factors which set the price of domestic butter are, first, the price of foreign butter plus the duty, and, second, the rate of domestic butter production. Neither the rate of consumption nor the price of oleomargarine in the United States is a factor in setting the price of domestic butter. This statement is based on indisputable facts readily available in Government publications.

Assume that the cost of the margarine manufacturer's supply of coconut oil could be inflated to the extent of the 2-cent tariff. It can easily be seen that margarine prices could not be altered in any way to affect the wide difference in price which exists between butter and margarine. A pound of the average grade of nut margarine contains only 0.53 pound of coconut oil.

If, therefore, the oil cost were increased by a duty of 2 cents per pound, it would be equivalent to increasing the cost of each pound of margarine 1.06 cents. Allowing 10 per cent profit on this additional cost, a pound of nut margarine would then cost 1.16 cents more than at present, an amount insignificant in comparison with the spread which now and always has existed between butter and margarine. For years this price difference has been from 15 cents to 26 cents per pound, the average difference over the 10-year period being 21.9 cents. If this average price difference of 21.9 cents can be reduced only approximately 1 cent with a tariff-inflated coconut oil price, it is indeed difficult to see how the dairyman has anything to gain from the placing of such an impediment on the importation of Philippine coconut oil.

REPRESENTATIVE OF DAIRYMEN SAYS TARIFF ON PHILIPPINE COCONUT OIL WILL NOT REDUCE BUTTER-OLEOMARGARINE PRICE SPREAD

Under cross-examination before the House Committee on Insular Affairs, one of agriculture's leading representatives admitted

they had little to gain in shutting out coconut oil, as evidenced in the following colloquy between Congressman LOZIER, a member of the committee, and this official spokesman of agriculture, Mr. A. M. Loomis, the Washington representative of the National Dairy Union and the American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers:

"Mr. LOZIER. Let me ask you a question, and I am seeking information, inquiring not in a spirit of controversy. The spread between oleomargarine and butter is generally pretty definite, varying, of course, at times. Would any tariff duty imposed on coconut oil be sufficient to narrow or destroy that spread so that there would not be a very considerable difference in the price of oleomargarine and butter?

"Mr. LOOMIS. It is only a small factor in that particular situation. I have always been able to, and always sure that I was correct, in broadening my interests in this matter to a much broader basis than the mere narrow competition of coconut oil in oleomargarine with butter."

A very large portion of the agitation for Philippine independence as a step to aid agriculture is based on this very point, the alleged competition between butter and oleomargarine made from Philippine coconut oil, yet one of agriculture's own witnesses testifies it is only a small factor in that particular situation.

COCONUT OIL DOES NOT COMPETE WITH COTTONSEED OIL

After the dairy interests the most fertile field for those who seek to foster misinformation in respect to Philippine coconut oil is in the cottonseed-oil industry, yet it is impossible to see wherein they have a legitimate basis for such propaganda as indisputable scientific facts support the statement that coconut oil can not be used for the same purpose for which the great mass of our domestic vegetable-oil production is used, namely, in cooking oils and fats and salad oils. Coconut oil is not suitable; hence is not interchangeable with domestic fats and oils for use in cooking fats. In simple, nontechnical language it can be said that there is no possible means by which the chemists may treat coconut oil or change its composition to make it acquire properties which are in any way comparable with those of the fats and oils of American agriculture and vice versa, domestic fats and oils can not be treated or their composition changed in any way to make their properties remotely resemble those of coconut oil.

Although practically all of the complaint on coconut oil comes from the dairy industry and from cottonseed-oil interests, only about 23 per cent of the coconut-oil importations go into the manufacture of oleomargarine, which, after all, can not be said to compete with butter in any sense of the word. Moreover, no coconut oil enters into competition with cottonseed oil since they are used in entirely different fields of consumption. About 75 per cent of all the coconut oil consumed in the United States is used in industries where it can not be replaced or for which no other fat or oil, domestic or foreign, can be substituted.

COCONUT OIL INDISPENSABLE IN MANUFACTURE OF MODERN SOAPS

The official spokesmen of the dairy industry, who have been the most militant opponents of Philippine coconut oil, never reveal to the dairy farmers that 50 per cent to 62 per cent of the coconut oil consumed in this country goes into soap, and another 15 per cent into the manufacture of confectionery and fancy biscuits. For these uses coconut oil is as indispensable as rubber in the manufacture of an automobile tire, and no more interchangeable with any other fat or oil produced in the United States than rubber is with leather in the manufacture of this same tire.

American agriculturalists are intentionally producing no oils and fats for soap making, and the necessary lathering quality in soap can not be obtained from any oils or fats produced in the United States. This quality is incorporated in the soap only by liberal proportions of coconut oil in the soap formula.

The soap industry has already advised the appropriate congressional committees that for technical reasons no domestic or imported vegetable oils or animal fats are satisfactory substitutes for coconut oil in the soap kettle, and if the price of coconut oil is unnecessarily inflated by the addition of a tariff the increase in price must necessarily be passed on to the consumer.

The placing of a tariff on Philippine coconut oil is, after all, absolutely absurd for the reason that copra, the raw material from which coconut oil is produced, is on the free list and enters the United States duty free from all countries. The placing of a tariff on Philippine coconut oil can not in any way affect the coconut-oil consumption of the United States. It can only accomplish the complete ruination of the crushing industry in the Philippines, their second largest industry.

To use the words of Mr. Vicente Villamin, prominent Filipino economist and lawyer, "The much-talked-of Philippine coconut cow may after all, upon closer examination, be found to be really nothing more than the old American bull."

CUBAN SUGAR, NOT PHILIPPINE SUGAR, THE REAL COMPETITOR OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

It is not difficult to demonstrate conclusively that there really is no competition between Philippine coconut oil and the products of American agriculture. It is even easier to show that Philippine sugar does not compete with American beet and cane growers. The real competition to domestic sugar comes from Cuban sugar.

The United States' requirements of sugar for the years 1929 and 1931 were supplied as follows:

Country	1929	1931
	Per cent	Per cent
United States (duty free)	17.47	24
Hawaii, Porto Rico, Virgin Islands (duty free)	20.00	26
Philippines (duty free)	10.40	12
	47.87	62
Cuba (20 per cent preferential tariff)	51.88	37
Java and others (full-duty sugar)	.25	1
	52.13	38
Total	100	100

In 1929 the consumption of duty-free sugar in the United States was approximately 48 per cent, but in 1931 it had increased to 62 per cent. The duty-free sugar from the Philippines accounted for only 2 per cent of this increase. The inevitable consequence of this increase in duty-free sugar was that while of our total consumption, Cuban or part-duty sugar furnished approximately 52 per cent in 1929, it fell to 37 per cent in 1931. Just as fast as duty-free sugar supplies increase, the duty-paying sugar supplies must recede correspondingly from this market. In actual tonnage the United States market for Cuban sugar shrank by over 1,000,000 tons from 1929 to the end of 1931. During that same period domestic beet and cane sugar increased 300,000 tons. This change conclusively proves that any increase of duty-free Philippine sugar production makes no inroad on our domestic sugar, but like any other duty-free sugar it does displace part-duty-paying Cuban sugar, from which it is perfectly clear that—

First. Cuban sugar interests are the ones who want to shut Philippine sugar out of this market to make that much more room for Cuban sugar; and Second. The domestic sugar is not injured by Philippine sugar.

It is generally conceded that Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands have already practically reached their limit of possible production. On an average, our domestic sugar production increases less in 10 years than our consumption increases in one year. Who, then, can claim that our duty-free sugar suppliers will be able to increase their yearly production to a point where all of the part-duty-paying sugar, amounting to approximately 2,500,000 tons yearly, will be replaced entirely by the duty-free sugar? To expect the Philippines to produce this additional amount necessary to bring the supply of duty-free sugar up to 100 per cent of our consumption is fantastic, as from the beginning of history to 1931 their greatest annual export was only 727,566 tons. But until such time as our production of duty-free sugar can be increased to take care of our total consumption, domestic beet and cane sugar growers will feel absolutely no competition from any of the other duty-free sugar-producing sections in our insular possessions. The only menace is to Cuban and other duty-paying sugars, and to them only.

The Cuban sugar interests realize that sentiment against Philippine sugar can be created only by misleading the American people into believing it is our domestic farmers who are hurt. For years they failed to fool the American people and bring about Philippine independence in the guise of liberty for the Philippines. They now turn to the guise of accomplishing it in the name of the American farmer.

IF DOMESTIC SUGAR WANTS REAL PROTECTION, THEN TERMINATE CUBAN PREFERENTIAL TARIFF

Philippine sugar is not a factor in determining the price of domestic sugar produced in the United States. The price of raw sugar in the United States is determined by world sugar prices plus the duty paid on Cuban sugar coming here. This statement is confirmed by the United States Tariff Commission and by the United States Department of Commerce.

As practically all of the duty-paying sugar now entering the United States comes from Cuba, it pays only 2 cents of our 2½ cents full duty; hence domestic sugar gets protection only to the extent of the Cuban preferential. If domestic sugar, therefore, wants more protection, it should be agitating, not for the exclusion or limitation of Philippine sugar, but for the termination of the Cuban preferential. Then domestic sugar would get the protection of the full 2½ cents sugar duty. That, and that only, will bring real benefit to domestic sugar.

It must be remembered that it was during 1929–30 that domestic sugar made its great fight for a higher tariff on sugar. In this fight Cuban sugar took a very active part, as was uncovered in the Senate lobby investigations conducted just following that time. In all of the mass of correspondence back and forth between the representatives of domestic and Cuban sugar interests not one word was said of Philippine sugar competing with domestic sugar. But if there is any lingering doubt in the minds of anyone here that Cuban sugar is the sole beneficiary from the exclusion of Philippine sugar, that doubt can be eliminated by referring briefly to the testimony of Mr. H. H. Pike, jr., of the firm H. H. Pike & Co., an old Cuban sugar commission house in New York, as it appears in part 5, pages 1855 and 1856 of the Senate lobby investigation hearings.

"Senator WALSH. What difference does it make to you how high the tariff is?

"Mr. PIKE. As you put the tariff up, you make an already tremendously profitable business behind a tariff wall still more profitable. If you put the tariff wall high enough——

"Senator WALSH. What difference does it make to you whether the existing beet-sugar factories in the United States make a profit or do not make a profit?

"Mr. PIKE. That is what I am telling you. If you put the tariff wall high enough, you are going to increase production, not of the beet factories necessarily, but of the production back of the tariff wall to a point where Cuban production of sugar will be reduced to the absolute minimum.

"Senator WALSH. I understand perfectly now.

"Mr. PIKE. And when you reduce the Cuban production of sugar, you reduce the opportunity of my firm to do a sugar business, because we are doing a Cuban sugar business.

"Senator WALSH. I understand now, that is, as far as the present factories are concerned, it is a matter of no consequence to you at all whether the tariff is high or whether it is low, but what you are afraid of is that the business will expand in the United States?

"Mr. PIKE. No, sir; I know that it will not expand in the United States. It will expand in the island dependencies. It will expand in the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, but the United States business has been running along for the past seven years with a tariff one-half cent higher, according to our own Government figures, than is necessary, and it has not expanded. Mr. Lippitt——

"Senator WALSH. So you are not afraid about any further expansion in continental United States? What you are afraid of is expansion in the island possessions?

"Mr. PIKE. Yes; that is true.

"Senator WALSH. That is your interest in the thing?

"Mr. PIKE. And furthermore, if you will look up the records you will find that a man who is thoroughly conversant with the beet situation, Mr. Lippitt, is on record as having said that beet growing in the United States can not expand materially, and I do not think there is anybody better informed than Mr. Lippitt on that subject. (Mr. Lippitt is an executive of one of the largest beet-sugar companies in the United States.)

"Senator WALSH. So that all you are troubled about is expansion in the island possessions?

"Mr. PIKE. I am naturally troubled about any expansion which is going to hurt the Cuban production.

"Senator WALSH. Exactly. You do not contemplate any expansion in continental United States; and, accordingly, what you are afraid of is expansion in the island possessions?

"Mr. PIKE. That is approximately it."

After hearing the above testimony, can anyone have the slightest doubt that Cuba is most effectively in the fight, and, moreover, expects to be the outstanding direct beneficiary?

I repeat again that the prime purpose of the demand for Philippine independence and the elimination of Philippine sugar from this market is to enable Cuban sugar to increase its market here to the extent that Philippine sugar can be excluded. If free trade is suddenly terminated, as proposed in the provision of the present bills pending before Congress, the Philippine sugar industry will be paralyzed to a greater extent than our industries would be if we suddenly abolished our protective tariff system.

ECONOMIC VALUE OF FREE-TRADE RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE PHILIPPINES

So much attention has been centered on this alleged competition caused by the entry of Philippine products into the United States that everyone has completely lost sight of the importance of the Philippine Islands as an actual and potential market for United States products, and particularly for the products of the farm and dairy industries. Potentially, it is a much more important market, not only for possible future developments within the islands but in connection with the general trade of the Orient.

In 1930 only one country, Mexico, exceeded and only one other country, Canada, tied the Philippines in the per cent their purchases from the United States were of their total imports. Only 13 countries of the whole world bought more from us in 1930 than did the Philippines. In 1931 they climbed to sixth in importance among our foreign-trade outlets.

Merely for the purpose of comparison your attention will be directed to four other countries in this same Asiatic area as the Philippines and which produce the same products as the Philippines. From them undoubtedly would come many of the tropical products we now secure in the Philippines as a result of our advantageous free-trade relations. According to the Department of Commerce, of their total imports they bought from the United States the following percentages of their total imports during the year 1930:

	Per cent
Netherlands (Dutch) East Indies—Java	10
British East Indies	8
British Malay	3
Ceylon	1
Philippines	64

PHILIPPINE IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES AMOUNTED IN 1930 TO $78,000,000; IN 1929, $92,500,000

During the year 1931 the Philippines increased their purchases from us to 72.5 per cent of their total imports. In terms of dollars our foreign trade with the Philippines in 1930 amounted to $78,183,000 and in 1929 to $92,593,000.

In 1930 the Philippines bought from us 61 per cent of their meat and dairy products, 46.1 per cent of our total exports of milk, and 89 per cent of their flour came from the wheat of American agriculture milled in American mills.

The acreage necessary to produce that flour alone was about one-third of the entire area devoted to beet sugar or two-thirds the total area devoted to cane-sugar production in the United States. Of our total exports of cotton cloth, 17 per cent went to the Philippines.

It has been estimated by the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, under whose jurisdiction the Philippine Islands are placed, that the application of proposed tariffs to be levied in the Philippines on imports from the United States on the granting of independence will reduce their value approximately 70 to 72.5 per cent, in view of which our present Philippine market will be of little value to American exporters.

Our exports to all countries for 1930 compared with 1929 show a decrease of 27 per cent, 55 per cent to Oceania, and 24 per cent to the Philippines. Oceania is in the same part of the world and produces the same products as the Philippines. It can, therefore, be seen that the Philippines are a far more steady and dependable outlet for our products than are the average countries of the world. The United States was in fine shape with all the world on a free-trade basis and it a tariff-protected country. But now there is a fast-growing tendency for other countries to place tariffs or export taxes on their products, particularly aimed at the United States, with a result that we are finding it more and more difficult to find outlets for the steadily increasing products of our farms and manufacturing industries.

When we are attempting to develop our foreign commerce by spending millions of dollars to support the work of the commercial attachés of our State Department, of the trade commissioners of the Commerce Department, and of the agricultural trade commissioners of the Department of Agriculture, does it not seem ridiculous that we should turn around and deliberately destroy one of our best foreign-trade markets for the sole purpose of benefiting certain selfish interests who are clamoring for a special consideration of a kind that is not in accord with the best general interests of the industries and people of the United States as a whole? It savors of biting off our nose to spite our face, and in the end agriculture, in whose name this blunder is to be committed, will be by far the heaviest loser. With what we have all been through during the past two trying years it should be evident to everyone that isolation and self-sufficiency do not work out practically. When this and that selfish group tries to gain some small advantage and is eventually successful society as a whole must pay dearly.

In the end what will become of the Philippines? We are talking of finding new channels of trade and new outlets for our world commerce and are finding it to be more and more difficult. Isn't it going to be impossible for the Filipino people to find new markets for their entire output, as they must do when they are shut off from the free-trade market in America, which incidentally was forced upon them in 1909, much against their wishes? The Filipino people will not be able to compete with Java, Formosa, Sumatra, and other neighboring countries without greatly reducing their standards which we have brought them up to in our thirty-odd years of development.

They have been told that they must diversify their crops, but it is like President Hoover telling western wheat farmers to diversify their crops and cut out wheat. In place of wheat what can the farmers produce of which there is not already an exportable surplus? Some of them recently turned to soybeans, and within the short period of a little over a year a few counties in Illinois alone have produced more soybeans than the United States can consume. The result is that they are now being exported and sold on the international market at Rotterdam at a price which nets the Illinois farmer considerably less than the amount of the tariff placed on soybeans in the last tariff revision.

With such a record as the Filipino people have, and when our exports are dwindling so rapidly, does it not seem unfair and unjust to destroy them industrially by paralyzing their two principal industries and then just at a time when it will cause a much larger and unnecessary decline in our own foreign trade? In short, the American people were almost willing to go to war with Japan in order to retain the open-door policy in China, yet they are willing to sit idly by and permit their Congress to kick out one of their 10 best customers. It is difficult to understand such inconsistencies; in fact, impossible to explain them, except on the grounds that proper investigations have not been made by the interested parties.

THE KIND OF INVESTIGATION CONGRESS SHOULD MAKE BEFORE ACTING ON PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE LEGISLATION

The question naturally arises then, What kind of an investigation should be made by Congress before determining definitely and for all time the political status of the Philippine Islands? Just on this point, it has been frequently argued that the uncertain future political status of the Philippines militates gravely against future investments. This statement requires explanation. Whether that status is defined or not, there will be no fresh investments in the present tariff-protected industries, for politics have already made them highly speculative. Investments in the unprotected industries, however, are not fundamentally affected by Philippine independence and further expansion of these tropical industries should be encouraged by the Filipinos, even to the extent of inviting more American capital to come into the islands.

To make a completely thorough investigation of the Philippine problem, Congress and the President, acting with leading Philippine government officials, should delegate a committee to go to the Philippines to study all of the various ramifications of this question right on the ground where its members would have access to the people who can supply the facts, and who are vitally interested in its solution. This committee, in so far as it is possible, should be composed of nonpartisan, outstanding statesmen, selected from each House of Congress, the executive branch of the Government, preferably the Secretary of War, and competent Filipino business leaders, not those individuals motivated purely by political aspirations. Selection of the Filipinos should be made jointly by the Governor General and the president of the Philippine senate. Above everything else, those Members of Congress selected for this committee should not be taken from sections in which there are selfish interests clamoring for Philippine independence. For example, they should not represent those sections producing cane sugar, beet sugar, cottonseed oil, dairy products, or where there is a strong urge to shut out completely Filipino immigration.

The members selected should be impartial, inspired, influential leaders, scholars in the field of political economy, men whose ideals for justice and truth outweigh any political party allegiance, and who are not moved or led by the clamor of paid lobbyists to serve their own selfish interests. If this suggestion were not followed, it is quite probable members representing selfish interests would be inclined to influence or try to limit free admission of testimony and information which might be opposed to the views of these particular individuals who have already prejudged the issue because of their selfish interests.

COMMITTEE SHOULD EMPLOY SERVICES OF QUALIFIED EXPERTS TO ASSIST IT

The committee should be provided with impartial specialists or experts to advise and assist it on the type of investigation and the nature of the information to be obtained in order that an honest and complete study can be made of all of the various angles of this problem. Some one thoroughly versed in all the phases of government finance would be essential if the financial structure of the islands is to be properly analyzed. Obviously, it is essential that a complete audit of the financial and banking structure of the country should be made. Within three days following the passage of the Hare bill in the House of Representatives, and after impassioned speeches had been made to the effect that the Philippine government is one of the very few which to-day has a balanced budget, the information comes out of Manila that the insular government is confronted with a serious deficit. The new Governor General is immediately forced to call hasty meetings of his cabinet in order to devise means of curtailing expenditures and, if possible, of raising additional revenue in order that the budget can be balanced.

Similarly, an outstanding trade expert, some one prominent in the field of educational activities, and some one qualified to direct investigations on social problems, embracing health, should accompany this commission for the purpose of advising and guiding the investigations to be made on each of the different issues with which this whole problem is so befogged.

It is essential to have the investigations carried out by a congressional commission. Otherwise the Members of Congress might not be inclined to consider their findings as thoroughly and as fairly as might be the case were some commission, like the Tariff Commission, appointed to make the special investigation. For example, if the Tariff Commission makes a finding which serves the purpose of some particular selfish interest, it is used; but, if the finding is the reverse, the report of the Tariff Commission is unfortunately frequently completely ignored.

MOST OF THE HEARINGS SHOULD BE HELD IN THE PHILIPPINES—NOT IN WASHINGTON

This congressional commission should go through the islands just as Secretary Hurley did and hold its hearings in several of the more important centers. Only in this manner is it possible to reach the basic facts and true conditions which must be known and understood if the problem is to receive an intelligent solution. The way the issue has been handled thus far is very contradictory and inconsistent. One person makes a statement setting forth certain facts. Immediately some one else ventures forth with an explanation that that information is incorrect and just the reverse is true. The statement just made concerning the financial condition of the government in the islands is an illustration. Also, much has been said concerning the Moro problem. Many Filipino and American sponsors of independence contend that there is no Moro problem. Others contend that it is a very serious question, and in granting independence we are deliberately betraying the Moro people who occupy 40 per cent of the territory of the Philippine Islands. It is pretty generally conceded by all interested observers that the Moros have not reached the stage of development comparable with that of the Christian Filipino, for which there are very definite reasons. It should be determined what percentage of the population is really capable of self-government, what would become of those not capable for this honor, and how they would be protected against exploitation.

THE WELFARE OF THE FILIPINOS SHOULD DOMINATE THE CONSIDERATION GIVEN THE FUNDAMENTALS OF THE INDEPENDENCE ISSUE

Surely if we are to maintain our policy unblemished with these islands a policy which has represented a new conception in colonization, which has had as its fundamental purpose the introduction and development of the basic conceptions of free government and not commercial exploitation, the problem must be considered very largely from the standpoint of the Filipino and not solely for the deplorable purpose of bringing unfair profit and advantage to various selfish interests in the United States and Cuba. Political autonomy must be granted in such a way and at such a time that there can be no possibility of the failure of these islands to occupy an honored place in the family of independent nations.

It is deplorable that this tremendously important problem is being considered almost entirely from the standpoint of sugar, coconut oil, cordage, and immigration, and at a time when the dogs of war are running wild in the Orient.

The Philippine problem is largely one of economics, and like most of our problems of economics, an effort is being made to solve it largely by politics. Actually one of agriculture's leading representatives testified that in demanding Philippine independence he was going exactly on the theory he followed a few years ago when he wanted to put an embargo on bananas, because if bananas were barred, everyone would eat more apples. At that same time another one of agriculture's present Washington representatives was in favor of shutting out bananas for the reason that they might replace potatoes, because like potatoes, bananas are rich in starch. Apparently one of these gentlemen considered that bananas competed with apples, while the other one considered they competed with potatoes. One of them classed bananas as a fruit and the other one as a vegetable. There is, of course, a distinction between bananas and coconuts in the present case, as has been brought out by the Italian fruit vendor who said to his customer, "No pincha the banani; pincha the coconutti."

Certainly a permanent and lasting nation can not be founded on the basis of the terms proposed in the Hare bill, which has recently been jammed through the House of Representatives under the most drastic gag rule that its leaders could apply, when 40 minutes were allotted for the consideration of the destinies of 13,000,000 people. To quote the words of the Congressman from Massachusetts, the Hon. CHARLES UNDERHILL, "What a travesty! What a tragedy! Forty minutes to found a nation—40 minutes to establish in perpetuity one of the great countries of the world, 40 minutes to determine the fate, the life, and the death of 13,000,000 people. If this action is taken, I will say in all seriousness, without reflecting upon the individuals in the House, but on the House as a whole, that patriotism is dead, that honor lies bleeding, and that self-interests and politics are paramount to the welfare of the world."

There can be no denying that the Hare Philippine independence bill, which the House of Representatives has passed, is a bill of fear; it embodies the fear of Japan, the fear of immigration, the fear of sugar, the fear of coconut oil, the fear of cordage. The words of a Texas Representative [Mr. CROSS] describe this fear of Japan. "Remember their [Philippines] retention is a national menace. We are holding a lightning rod and beckoning the lightning, Japan, to strike; and when she does, our billion dollar Navy will go into Davy Jones's locker, for Mars is as sure to use this archipelago as an incubator to hatch a war between the two nations as that the night follows the day."

In concluding let me say that the granting of Philippine independence at this time and under the provisions provided would be looked upon throughout the Orient as the abandonment of the wards we have undertaken to protect. Our prestige so greatly needed to keep peace in the Orient would be seriously impaired. The repercussions would go far beyond the Philippines, for let us not forget that the general prestige and the authority of the white race in that part of the world are in decline. Is it not true with the British in India, the French in Indo-China, the Dutch in Java, and generally with Europeans in China? With the present proposed action, will it not likewise be true with the Americans in the Philippines?

Until world forces, social and political, are better organized and their strength better proven than they are to-day, an independent Philippines is far more likely to involve us and most of the Orient in wars than were we to continue our sovereignty over them. A change in the status of the Philippines at this time can only inflame most dangerous possibilities.

BUTTER SUBSTITUTES USED IN GOVERNMENT INSTITUTIONS

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table supplementing the figures in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 8, 1932, at pages 3528 and 3529, with reference to the use of butter and butter substitutes in Federal institutions. I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD, together with a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and a memorandum showing the grand total of butter and butter substitutes for all Government institutions.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 18, 1932.

Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR BLAINE: Reference is made to my letter of January 25, transmitting a partial report regarding the amounts of butter, butter substitutes, and food substitutes for other animal fats used in the Indian Service from June 30, 1928, to June 30, 1931.

Inclosed herewith is a supplemental report covering the 16 units of the Indian Service which were not included in the first report.

The report is now complete; but if additional information is required, I will be pleased to furnish same upon your request.

Very truly yours,

RAY LYMAN WILBUR.

Supplementary schedule showing amounts of butter, butter substitutes, and food substitutes for other animal fats used in the Indian Service during the fiscal years 1929, 1930, and 1931

Unit	Butter substitutes (pounds)			Fat substitutes (pounds)			Butter (pounds)
	1929	1930	1931	1929	1930	1931	1929	1930	1931
Choctaw-Chickasaw Sanatorium, Okla	1,596	1,776	1,580
Crow Agency, Mont			30			320	518	880	1,184
Five Civilized Tribes Agency, Okla
Hopi Agency, Ariz	600	900	1,120	1,713	2,780	3,995	234	366	1,316
Mount Pleasant School, Mich	3,240	3,720	4,800	4,000	4,000	4,000	600	600	300
Neah Bay Agency, Wash
New York Agency, N. Y
Pawnee Agency, Okla		540	900	1,000	1,152	2,400			1,000
Pierre School, S. Dak	1,000	1,500	2,276	1,489	3,000	5,000	602	600	3,250
Sacramento Agency, Calif							59	1,614	723
Santa Fe School, N. Mex	300	1,767	3,430	103	5,839	4,215	67	739	930
Shoshone Agency, Wyo	210	210	400		2,786	2,053	637	514	1,462
Southern Pueblos Agency, N. Mex
Turtle Mountain Agency, N. Dak			480	320	285	972	674	667	704
Walker River Agency, Nev				240	1,040	600
Winnebago Agency, Nebr			120			100			375
Total	6,946	10,413	15,136	8,865	20,902	23,655	3,391	5,986	11,244

These additional figures bring the grand totals for all Government institutions, found on page 3529, to the following:

	Pounds
Butter	2,347,255
Oleomargarine or other butter substitutes	1,167,416
Vegetable shortening or lard substitutes and cooking and salad oils	1,432,900

REDUCTION OF TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 206) submitted by Mr. BINGHAM on the legislative day of April 29 (calendar day, May 3), 1932, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with a view to making the 10 per cent reductions referred to in Senate Resolution 197, should not reduce the appropriations for the Postal and Customs Services to a point where such services would be seriously disrupted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I have been in entire sympathy with the movement started by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to reduce the totals carried by appropriation bills 10 per cent. I confess that my motive was largely due to the belief that there were too many Government bureaus doing too many things which the Government had no business doing. Many of them were engaged in operations purely of a paternalistic nature, which we had been induced to authorize at a time when we had a great deal of money to spend, when there was a large surplus in the Treasury, and many people were anxious for these good things to be done. I had hoped that we might obtain a very appreciable reduction in the number of these paternalistic bureaus, about which many of us have serious doubt as to whether they are constitutional. I do not intend to argue that question at this time. I know that many constitutional lawyers contend that, under the clause in the preamble relative to the general welfare, the bills creating such bureaus are constitutional. At any rate, they have been passed in great numbers for many years.

In the Treasury and Post Office bill, Mr. President, there was an item of approximately $108,000,000 for public buildings. Although four of the public buildings provided for were in the State of Connecticut and the appropriations for them amounted to quite a considerable sum of money, I did not feel that this was a good time in which to take money from the taxpayers in order to construct those public buildings, and I hoped that the 10 per cent reduction might largely come out of the sum for public buildings. However, under the able leadership of those interested and who believed that it was necessary that we should spend money on public buildings at this time in order to reduce unemployment, that provision was stricken out and a very few minutes thereafter we voted, without very much argument as to the effect on the Post Office and Customs Service, to instruct the committee to reduce the appropriations for the two departments 10 per cent.

I voted for that reduction, Mr. President, but on looking into the matter further and on hearing the evidence which has been presented by various persons I have come to the belief that such a reduction in the Post Office and Treasury Department appropriations—two departments which are absolutely essential to the operation of the Government—would not only work a very serious hardship to hundreds of letter carriers and other post-office employees and employees of the revenue department and the Customs Service, throwing them out of employment, closing many customhouses—I do not know whether it would close any post offices or not—but would result in a very serious dislocation of the proper business of government.

Therefore, Mr. President, I have come to the conclusion that my vote was wrong, and I have submitted this resolution to give the committee latitude, so that they need not make a 10 per cent reduction on what is left in the bill if they find that that reduction will seriously cripple these essential services of government.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. In view of what the Senator has said, and because he has been convinced that there was an error of judgment on his part, and doubtless on the part of the Senate, in passing these resolutions, does not the Senator think we ought to go back and reconsider the bills that have been passed wherein we put in operation the cut to which the Senator now objects?

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I fear that my good friend from California is going to help defeat this resolution by attempting to have us undo that which we have already done. My object at this time is to help the Appropriations Committee, now engaged in writing up the bill, to act under a provision which would see to it that the essential services should not suffer. I hope the Senator from California will not insist on doing anything more than that at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, with the Senators' permission, I desire to emphasize that if what he says now is accurate—and I believe it to be wholly so—what we have just recently done with certain appropriation bills was something that we ought not to have done at all. So I think we ought to go back and take up the appropriation bills with which we have dealt and deal with them again without the peculiar cut in the manner that it was accomplished here.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from California if he proposes to ask the President to withdraw his signature to the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, Mr. President. I should look to see the Senator from Connecticut do that, under the confession he has made this morning.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the Senator is not fair. I know my friend from California always aims to be fair. The confession which I made this morning that I was wrong in voting for this reduction in the Post Office and Treasury bills is because those are essential services of the Government, as I look upon it; and many of the provisions in the agricultural bill, which I regret to say we did not reduce as much as we should have done, and in the other bill—notably the provision for spending many millions of dollars in attempting to enforce an unenforceable law—ought to come out.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not want the Senator to think that I was critical of his position this morning. I think the fact that he made the confession that he did does him infinite credit, and I am wholly in accord with what he says in that regard.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that as a result of the 10 per cent cuts the appropriation bills that have already been passed suffered a great deal more than the bill now before the Senate. I have not any doubt but that the Senate will have to pass a deficiency appropriation bill, at least to cover some of the items.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Since the Senator from Connecticut has the floor, with his permission I should like to ask if the Senator from Utah will not furnish us a bill of particulars with reference to the two bills which have passed and in which such hardship has resulted?

Mr. SMOOT. In the case of the Interior Department appropriation bill I think the 10 per cent cut will have to be changed before this Congress comes to an end.

Mr. BORAH. Not only will it have to be changed, but no doubt we will have to increase the appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. BORAH. There is no doubt at all about it. That is the tendency of things. We never cut and always increase expenditures.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to be recognized?

Mr. BORAH. I wanted to ask if the Senator is now asking consideration of this resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. It has come over from the preceding day under the rule. It is now before the Senate, I understand, under our rules, and is up for consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate knows what the resolution means. As I understand, the resolution is that it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of House bill 9699, and so forth—should not reduce the appropriations for the Postal and Customs Services to a point where such services would be seriously disrupted.

Just what does that mean? What is the rule by which we can determine that matter?

Mr. BINGHAM. I suppose by the rule of common sense, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. I should suppose that the committee would apply that rule without this resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee were directed by the Senate to cut the bill 10 per cent whether they thought it would disrupt the services or not.

Mr. BORAH. No; we did not say that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. BINGHAM. Well, they were instructed to cut the bill 10 per cent.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Nothing was said about disrupting the services, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Connecticut think there is any desire on the part of anyone to disrupt the service? Not at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. No, Mr. President; and that is one reason why I have submitted the resolution. When we passed it I do not think there was any intention to disrupt the Customs Service, the Revenue Service, or the Postal Service; but I think we did it hastily, and without proper consideration of what action we were taking.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that each resolution or motion was argued from three days to a week; I have forgotten just how long. I think the shortest argument by the Senate was three days, and the longest one was about a week, before we actually passed on them. The Senate considered the matter in its every phase, and passed this resolution regarding the Post Office and Treasury bill.

What has been done? We have held the hearings. The subcommittee, presided over by my distinguished friend from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], suddenly stopped its proceedings about a week ago. There have been no further meetings of the subcommittee. None has been called. We are just stopped as we were; and why we need another resolution I can not imagine.

I, for one, do not believe there is a man on the Appropriations Committee who desires to disrupt the service of the Government in any way; and if the resolution of the Senate is carried out I do not believe it will be disrupted in any way whatsoever. The questions that the Senator from Connecticut has submitted here to-day can all be passed upon by the Appropriations Committee if the Senator from Nevada will call his subcommittee together in the usual way, and then let the Committee on Appropriations pass on the matter. There is no reason in the world why every question that is now suggested by the Senator from Connecticut can not be considered by the committee, and a report made to the Senate, and then the Senate can pass on the matter with all the facts before it. That is what I think ought to be done.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Tennessee has just said, I trust he will have no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed, I do object to its passage. I have the most serious objection; and I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. As I participated in a feature of this matter producing the result, I should like the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to please state wherein the service, in his opinion, as the Senator from Connecticut asserts, would be disastrously affected.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Illinois, I will refer to a number of statements I have recently made on the floor of the Senate. I do not think it is necessary to go into them in detail now. After the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee was passed I requested the officials of the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department to furnish data as to where these cuts could be made with the least damage to the service. I also asked them to give us the information on which the data were based.

I have received much information from the departments showing that this cut would result disastrously to the services involved. It will result in tens of thousands of men being thrown out of the Postal Service. It will result in curtailing the service in its various branches to the American people, and it will work harm in many respects.

The Treasury Department has shown clearly that the 10 per cent cut in the balance of the bill, after the building program was overwhelmingly eliminated by the Senate, would amount to about $14,000,000. It would therefore be necessary, under the 10 per cent cut, to reduce personnel to a very large extent. The department estimates that over 6,000 employees of the Treasury Department would have to be dismissed. One result would be the loss of internal-revenue collections of something like $95,000,000. This 10 per cent cut, if insisted on, would result in closing the customs offices in the interior States and consolidating other customs offices on the coast, and one result would be the cutting down of the efficiency of the Customs Service in stopping the smuggling of opium and other dangerous drugs. It would also result in a letting up on the checking of the importation of alien laborers from foreign countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. ODDIE. These aliens would come in here and compete with American labor which is now out of employment.

The Senator from Tennessee takes the stand that the Government can cancel certain ocean mail and air mail contracts in the Post Office Department bill. I contend that the Appropriations Committee has no authority to do that. That is something that is beside the activity of the Appropriations Committee. The Government has made its binding obligations in the form of contracts, and those contracts can not be canceled without going into the courts.

For these reasons I have introduced this morning a resolution asking that the previous action of the Senate be rescinded. I think it will have a better effect than the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut, which I believe is too vague. It will leave the committee up in the air.

I admire the courage of the Senator from Connecticut and his anxiety to correct this situation and improve it; but I believe that a plain, simple resolution on the part of the Senate rescinding its past action in this matter would be wiser and better. Then the bill will go back to the Appropriations Committee, which will give it most careful consideration, as it already has done. It has held very extensive hearings, covering several weeks, which are published, and which I call to the attention of the Senate again. The committee will do its utmost in economizing, in cutting out every service that can be cut out, in reducing expenditures as much as they can be reduced without disrupting the service of the Government and causing a wholesale discharge of Government employees.

Mr. FESS, Mr. McKELLAR, and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Nevada has not the floor and can not yield to anybody.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Vice President to have recognized the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NORRIS. I think not. The Vice President recognized the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who asked the Senator from Nevada a question, and he proceeded to make a speech.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senator from Illinois for making my answer possibly too long.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to it, not the least.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. Then to whom does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I had originally presented in debate a list and schedule wherein I thought there should be reductions presented on the floor, and in an argument sought to sustain the matter; I may add, all embodying the items referred to in this debate. Now, hearing the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] present how the reductions will be disastrous to the service, and knowing that the Senator from Nevada, as chairman of the subcommittee, had investigated the subject, I particularly was anxious for information on that subject from him. It has been imparted. I have no further reason for holding the floor on that subject. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, like the other Senators, I want to congratulate the Senator from Connecticut on his confession. He voted for the resolution which is now staring him in the face, but he was not the only one who voted for it. He is the only one who has made a confession, however. If we are entering into the confessional part of this argument, before we act on the resolution we ought to extend to other Senators the right to make similar confessions, and if a majority of them confess, as the Senator from Connecticut has done, then it would be proper to pass the resolution. Otherwise, while we might think very highly of the Senator from Connecticut for making his confession, that ought to end it; it is a matter personal with him. None of the other sinners, so far as I know, have confessed, and if they will not confess, what is the use of wasting our time on this resolution?

Mr. President, the resolution states that the committee should not reduce the appropriations of the Postal and Customs Services to a point where such services would be seriously disrupted. Did anybody think they were going to do that? Do we not give the idea, when we are picking out this particular service and saying that it must be disrupted, that we do not care a continental how we disrupt all other services? All the other services, taken care of in all the other bills where we arbitrarily cut the appropriations down 10 per cent, may be disrupted, but we must look upon these two services as preferred; they must not be disrupted.

Mr. President, if we were to follow the advice of the Senator from Tennessee, we would not discharge any of the men about whom the Senator from Nevada is so anxious. We would not have to interfere with the services, unless taking away the subsidy which some of the shipping trusts have gained by virtue of the contracts they have with the Government would result in the discharge of somebody, or in creating a hardship.

Are we so tender in our mercies, after we pass the 10 per cent reduction resolution, that we shall try now to follow the departments by shouldering all the reductions upon the little employees of the service? If the committee is making a mistake, it seems it is in following the advice of the Post Office Department, which does not want to cut down anything in the Post Office Department. They cry aloud from the mountain tops for economy in the Government, but it must be economy somewhere else. So they say to the Senator from Nevada that if we cut this appropriation 10 per cent, it will mean that the clerks in the post offices getting from $1,400 to $2,000 a year are to be discharged. It does not mean that the payment of $5 or $6 for carrying a letter from one port to another in a ship equipped with refrigeration space, where it can not, certainly, get too warm, is to be cut out. The Post Office Department does not want to cut down on that.

It does not mean that the monopoly of carrying the mail through the air at fabulous rates is to be cut down. No; it means that the little fellow in the country post offices is to receive less in his job, that the rural carrier is to be discharged, and that the city carriers are to be removed, because if we apply the 10 per cent principle, and, in addition, the 10 per cent that is lost on the millions of subsidies, for which we never ought to pay a cent, it is going to make a 20, 40, or perhaps a 50 per cent reduction when it comes to the little fellow who is working. So it seems to me the committee ought to use its own judgment; in other words, do what the Senator has said in his resolution, as nearly as it can. I supposed the committee would do that, anyway, without any instructions.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I was going to ask why should the Senator from Connecticut assume that the Committee on Appropriations is going to disrupt these departments?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know of any reason, unless he listened to the Senator from Nevada, who was following the Postmaster General, who said, "We are going to make this reduction by cutting out the little fellows, and letting the subsidies, brazen as they are, and unreasonable and unfair as they are, stand." And the Senator from Connecticut says, "That is a contract." Is there not a contract with the other fellow, whom we have taken in through the civil service? Have we any contractual obligations with those employees? I think we have, although they are contracts which we can set aside. We can decline to appropriate to carry out these subsidy contracts, which are unconscionable, and whose very legality is now in question, as I understand it, before the Comptroller General.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will refer first to what the Senator just said. Not only has the matter been referred to the Comptroller General but I am going to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to have the Comptroller General of the United States summoned before the committee to give his views on that subject. Of course, I do not know what the Comptroller General will hold; but if he holds that the contracts are not good then the appropriations will be wholly unnecessary, because surely payments will not be made under the contracts if the Comptroller General holds that they are not good. That will be the first step.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me interrupt right on that point. I want to touch on that point, and I thank the Senator for having brought it up.

Suppose the Comptroller General shall hold that the contracts are illegal. Then the whole question will be settled, the whole matter can then be met without any difficulty, and without discharging anybody except the fellows who look after the refrigeration in the mail-carrying ships, ships which are carrying letters in cold storage. On the other hand, suppose the Comptroller General or the Attorney General should decide that those contracts are legal; what would we be faced with then? All we would have to do would be to go back to the time when the President of the United States declared a moratorium in favor of all the governments which owed us something, and said they would not have to pay their debts. That was a violation of contract. All we have to do with these subsidies is to declare a moratorium, and that will settle it, that will end it. Then we could cut out that appropriation and use the money to pay the little fellows about the discharging of whom there is so much fear.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention and the attention of the Senate to the further fact that in regard to air mail contracts we are now not only paying a subsidy for day flying but are also paying a subsidy for night flying. The proof is that all the great airplane companies have been consolidated, I think. I believe there are some four in existence, but I imagine the four have a very excellent working agreement.

Mr. NORRIS. It will not be difficult for four to get together, especially when they can travel in flying machines.

Mr. McKELLAR. At any rate, these four companies now have something like $20,000,000 of subsidies, about $10,000,000 for day flying, and about $10,000,000 for night flying. The proof is that they have a splendid passenger list for day flying, and if we wanted to be exceedingly liberal to them, infinitely more liberal than we are to the unemployed, we could cut the appropriation to a subsidy for night flying, and let them earn something in their day flying, and, even in their own view, not injure them materially.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, it would be said, in such a case, that they had a contract, and that a contract is something we must not interfere with or violate.

Mr. McKELLAR. We had contracts with the European governments, but those contracts were not sacred contracts. They were not "solemn" contracts, to which the Senator from Connecticut referred the other day. They are not solemn contracts. There is a difference, it seems, between solemn contracts and contracts which are not solemn. The contracts we have with the civil-service employees are not solemn contracts, they are just ordinary contracts. The contracts we have with our debtors in Europe are not solemn contracts, they are just ordinary contracts. But when we have a contract to pay a subsidy to people who need no subsidy, that is a solemn contract, and can not be interfered with.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have contracts with the civil-service employees. Does the Senator from Tennessee intend to vote for an 11 per cent reduction in civil-service salaries above $2,500?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator does not regard that as a contract then?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am taking the same position about the subsidy that I am taking about these other contracts for the payment of salaries above $2,500, including my own. I am going to treat myself just as I propose to treat others with whom the Government deals.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, so far as I know, nobody would like to abolish the carrying of the mails through the air or the carrying of the mails over the water, but we are confronted with a condition. We have to cut something out. We must economize; and although I voted against the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee—and I think the method of economizing proposed was not an efficient way of economizing—yet we have taken that course, we have passed the resolution, and I suppose that course will have to be followed unless more people who voted for the resolution will make the same confession the Senator from Connecticut has made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. But we must cut out something; and I am tired of hearing the Postmaster General and his spokesmen here say that the only way to cut down the expenses of the Post Office Department is by reducing the pay of the little fellow drawing a small salary, and over his shoulder proposing to whip Congress into line in order to save the big fellows, to save the man and the corporation getting a subsidy from the Government, getting money and giving no adequate return for it. So, if I must either discharge the fellow in the country post office and close that post office or discharge the corporation which is carrying the mail at $4 or $5 a letter, I will save the small fellow and let the cut come in the big items where, in the first place, it will amount to something. It will not be necessary, if we reduce the appropriations 10 per cent in the aggregate, to cut down salaries or to discharge the thousands of men whom the department says it is going to discharge.

If the Post Office Committee permits the Postmaster General to outline to them and compel them to make the reduction in the way he has outlined it, I hope that when they get back into the Senate with their bill they will be defeated on the floor of the Senate, and that the bill will not be allowed to pass in that form.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. ODDIE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will take but a moment. I share the view of the matter the Senator has just expressed. I am not in favor of cutting the small employees, and to show that it is all propaganda, the Postmaster General testified that 36,000 clerks would have to be discharged. That would be his way of making the cut. But he has no power to do that. He will have to be given the power to do it if he does it, and no one is proposing, so far as I know, to give him that power, unless it may be the Senator from Nevada, who goes the Postmaster General one better by saying that the Postmaster General is absolutely mistaken about the 36,000, but that he wants to discharge 58,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to retain the floor and yield my time for speeches. If any Senator wants to ask me a question, I shall be very glad to answer it if I can, and then yield the floor so Senators may take it in their own time.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he will kindly cease referring to me as the spokesman for the Postmaster General, because I am not. I occupy a position in the legislative branch of the Government independent of the executive branch.

Mr. NORRIS. That is another apology for the making of which I commend the Senator.

Mr. ODDIE. No; there is no apology there at all. I have said time and again that I have requested certain information from the Postmaster General which has been furnished. I am not the spokesman for the Postmaster General. That statement implies that I am under his influence, which I am not. I am acting as an independent factor as a Member of the Senate. I am sure the Senator did not intend it that way.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to have that explanation. I thought from what the Senator said that in some way he had fallen under the influence of the Postmaster General when he was talking about discharging all the little fellows and saying that we could not cut down the subsidy provisions because they are a part of a contract.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has given thought to this aspect of the question. He has made a great argument for our doing away with contracts with the air mail companies and with the steamship companies, which are in the nature of subsidies for carrying the mail and which in many cases permit them to run and give us service which we would not otherwise have. The Senator said we must not let the little fellows go and help the big fellows. Does he not realize that if we destroy the subsidies to most of the air mail corporations, they will have to let a lot of the little fellows go?

Mr. NORRIS. That would be true.

Mr. BINGHAM. The pilots and the men who take care of the planes will all be thrown out of work and, furthermore, the sailors on the steamers, which could not run without the subsidies, will be thrown out of work. Why does the Senator from Nebraska prefer the little fellows on the one hand and throwing out the little fellows on the other hand?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I concede there is truth in what the Senator has said, that the subsidies enable the ships to operate and that they employ some people, and that if they did not operate they would not employ those people, but would have to discharge them. I concede that is true and I am sorry it is true. I regret that some will lose their positions, but, Mr. President, it is a matter of choosing between 10,000 men on the one hand and 10 men on the other. That is about the equation; that is about the proportion.

Mr. BINGHAM. Has the Senator ever been on board a ship?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; once or twice.

Mr. BINGHAM. What ship has he ever been on that employed only 10 men?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not say I was on any ship that employed only 10 men. I said the number of men who would lose their jobs if we cut out the ship subsidies instead of saving the same amount of money in another way and discharging thousands of employees of the Post Office Department, would be in the proportion of about 10 to 1.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish this thought first.

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. There is another reason. The Senator from Connecticut stands here and in his usual frank way admits that the ships would not operate if it were not for the subsidies. In other words, we are using the taxpayers' money to permit private institutions to operate ships on the ocean. When we come to a starving people in our problem of having to cut down expenses somewhere, he would rather continue the subsidy to the Shipping Trust, which has borrowed the money of the Government to operate, often at less than 1 per cent, and which has gotten the ships themselves from the Government by merely singing a song. He would rather continue to pay that subsidy because the shipping companies employ a few people, he said, who work on the ships to operate them. That is the excuse he gives.

But does anyone believe that those who favor the shipping subsidy do it because of the few men who would be employed by the shipping companies on the ships, which the subsidy enables them to run and which would not run if they did not have any subsidy? It is perfectly foolish, it seems to me. It is perfectly evident that in the case of the subsidized ships they are not thinking about the man who is pilot or captain or who holds any other position on a ship. They are thinking of the millions of dollars that percolate into the pockets of the owners of those ships, who occupy a special-privileged position with our Government and with our Post Office Department, who are resorting to all kinds of means to get money out of the Treasury of the United States; and when we want to take away those subsidies, they say if we do that four or five fellows will lose their jobs.

That would be terrible! Instead of using that subsidy money, millions of it, in that way, if we would divide it up into allotments of $1,000 each and give it to the poor about whom these subsidized people are now so anxious, it would go ten thousand times further in the good it would do than to give it to the shipowners where the subsidy, when it percolates through their fingers at all, does not bring very much to the little fellows who actually do the work and are in their employ.

I now yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I wanted to invite the Senator's attention to that part of the resolution which provides that the committee should not reduce the appropriation for the Postal and Customs Services to the point where such services would be seriously disrupted. If adopted by the Senate, would not the Appropriations Committee be justified in believing that it is the sense of the Senate that we should proceed to apply the reduction only to other parts of the service and perhaps disrupt them?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a fair conclusion. I mentioned that a while ago. We select out two services, the Customs Service and the Postal Service, and we say, "Go ahead with your reductions, but do not disrupt these services." That would mean they could disrupt anything else they wanted to disrupt.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I want to say a few words about the matter before us. Before proceeding with what I have in mind, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question? I prize his opinion as a great lawyer. Does the Senator think that we would be justified in abrogating contracts which we have made with these shipping concerns?

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is in earnest in propounding the question, and I want to give an answer just as fairly as he has asked the question.

I do not believe in the repudiation of any contract, but if we reach the point where we can not pay our debts, I want to apply the rule which I hated to see applied when it was first applied, but which was applied against us then, and I want to apply it in our favor. I refer to the moratorium. I thought the moratorium was wrong, but Members of the House and Senate decided otherwise and tumbled over each other in their anxiety to follow the President and declare the moratorium. If we reach the point—and we have about reached it, as I understand—where we have to cut down expenses or the Government is going to cease to do business, then we will have to declare a moratorium. We would have to do it any way if we did not have the money to pay our debts.

Let me ask the Senator from New York a question. If we reach the point where we do not have the money to pay the Senator's salary and my salary, or any of the other expenses of the Government, what would we do? We would not pay those salaries. We would probably declare a moratorium. We would say, "We will pay later."

We would be in the same position as the farmer who has a $5,000 mortgage on his farm; and although he may have raised a big crop, yet by the time he gets it harvested and sold he does not get money enough out of it to pay his taxes and the interest on his mortgage and support his family. What will he do? He can not perform an impossibility. Neither can the Government of the United States. If we have 10,000 men who are engaged in the Post Office Department, in the little post offices and in the city post offices, we may have to cut down their salaries and perhaps discharge some of them. I concede that. I would hate to do it, but we may have to do it. But before we do that, I would rather say to the subsidized shipowners, "We are not going to pay you this year. We have not the money to pay you, and so we can not do it."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator's position is, it would be only as a last resort that we should repudiate our contracts.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say to the Senator that it is not a question of repudiation. A debt between two individuals is made always on the assumption that the debtor is going to be able to pay it; and when he contracts the debt, he thinks he is going to be able to pay it. If it is impossible, do not call it repudiation because he can not pay it; he simply can not do it; it is impossible to do it.

Mr. COPELAND. I concede that at once, if it becomes impossible to do it. Of course he could not pay the debt under such circumstances.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. I think, upon reflection, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] will discover a difference between the moratorium declared by Congress upon the recommendation of the President and the proposition, if there be such a proposition, to repudiate a contract. The moratorium amounted simply to a creditor giving his debtor a respite.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all I am asking.

Mr. GLASS. That was not in any way a cancellation of a contract.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator has me wrong. I am not advocating that these contracts be declared null and void.

Mr. GLASS. Nor has anybody else asked it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has intimated I am doing so.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no.

Mr. NORRIS. I am advocating, if we can not pay all the subsidies, that we shall say, "We can not pay you now. We will comply with our contracts in full if the court holds them to be good."

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the Senator that no one on the Appropriations Committee has ever suggested that there should be a repudiation of a contract or cancellation of what was determined to be a legal contract. Some of us have taken the position that this miserable, fanciful air mail, costing the taxpayers of the country $27,000,000 a year, ought to be abrogated if we legally may do it; and I would vote in favor of doing it within the next five minutes if I could. It is an outrage upon the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as this appears to be a morning of confessions, I want to confess a little. I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is to be commended for his efforts to reduce appropriations to the minimum. I have no fault to find with that spirit and with that intent. However, those of us who are serving upon the Appropriations Committee find ourselves in great distress. When we are bound by an arbitrary amount which we must cut off of an appropriation bill, when that demand becomes like the law of the Medes and Persians, then we are in difficulty, indeed, when we come to consider the individual needs of the various departments and bureaus.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate the Senator's reference to the laws of the Medes and Persians. Their laws admitted of neither inquiry nor explanation.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly the spirit of the law with which we are dealing here.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. We are dealing with the action the Senate has heretofore taken, and it has become, as the Senator from Arizona suggested, indeed, the law of the Medes and Persians.

Mr. President, I wish to make another confession. I voted with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] in opposition to any reduction in the building program of the Post Office Department. But if it comes to a question of the mutilation of the Post Office Department or the erection of those buildings, I should not hesitate a minute. We must operate the Government. We can erect the buildings when we have the money to do so. I see no reason why we can not go on with our building program; but we can not do it if we are to balance the Budget in accordance with the plan proposed by the Senator from Tennessee. Before the Senate concludes its session, I am convinced it will take the view that some of us have expressed here—that the items in this bill, in fact, in all the appropriation bills which have to do with capital investment, with permanent improvements, must be taken from the bills and their financing provided for in another way.

It was all right in the rich years following the World War for us to take our surplus, amounting to about $500,000,000 a year, add that to the sinking-fund provisions, and reduce the public debt, as we did. I protested somewhat against that at the time. I think, perhaps, I may say to my friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that I may have been mistaken about that. He took the position that in time of prosperity that is what we should do, while I took the position that it was legalized larceny to raise money from the taxpayers on the theory that we needed that money for the operation of the Government and to use it for some other purpose. However, we did raise the money; it was in excess of what we needed; and, as a result of excessive taxation, in 10 years we reduced the public debt by $10,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Which was a good thing to do.

Mr. COPELAND. We reduced the public debt a billion dollars a year for 10 years. Mr. President, we are not now in a time of prosperity; we are in a time of deep depression, and I can not speak too seriously to the Senate regarding the attitude of the country. I have been somewhat a student of human nature for a long time, and I have never found such wrath in the hearts of the people as I find there to-day. There is a demand that the Budget be reduced; there is a demand that the cost of the operations of the Government be lessened. We can not now do with our public improvements, with our capital investments, as we did in our rich years. Our Budgets included these benefits, these splendid improvements, and they were charged against the yearly operations of the Government.

It is different now. Why should the overburdened taxpayers of America to-day be called upon to pay this year for the Supreme Court Building, the House Office Building, the Botanic Garden Building, and the great public buildings being erected on Pennsylvania Avenue? Why should we do that now? We ought not to expect our people to pay taxes for that purpose. We shall have to provide for those capital investments in another way. Those buildings are going to last for 25, 50, or 100 years, and the people who live and pay taxes 20 or 25 years from now should be called upon to share in the cost of these projects.

I think we made a mistake when we adopted the Tydings resolution. I am confident that people are not reconciled to a building program which has to be paid for this year.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from New York will recall the visit of Mr. Mills before the committee during which he stated that this year, under quite a great pressure, the Treasury Department had spent in the first nine months of the fiscal year only $60,000,000 on the building program and that they expected to spend during the remaining three months $25,000,000, making an aggregate of $85,000,000. The proposed appropriation is $108,000,000. I am glad to hear the Senator from New York say that he feels that the Tydings amendment, adopted the other day, was probably an error. Mr. Mills thought so. Mr. Mills thought that at least a reduction of $14,000,000 could be made without even interrupting the building program; that such a reduction would lessen activities somewhat, but would not seriously interrupt the program in any way. I am inclined to think that Mr. Mills's view on that particular question is a rather sensible view. I very much regretted the other day when the Tydings amendment was adopted, and I believe if a proper recommendation came from the Appropriations Committee that the situation could be remedied by the Senate and that it will be remedied by the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I am sure he agrees with me that rather than hamper the operations of the departments which are involved, we had better have a reduction in the building program or so much of it as would come out of the taxpayers this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with that view; and especially would I prefer that rather than to discharge the employees who receive very small salaries.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I was sure that that was his disposition. However, I would go further——

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES in the Chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. May I interrupt the Senator just for a moment or two in this connection to refer to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury made in his letter to me of April 1 last?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ODDIE. His letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 1, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have yours of March 31, and inclose herewith a copy of the letter which I recently sent to Senator JONES. This, I think, will give you part of the information which you desire.

On pages 4 and 5 of the inclosed letter, the department indicated that between 250 and 275 of the 302 projects enumerated would have to be indefinitely deferred in the event a reduction of $25,000,000 were made in the lump-sum item for public buildings, and also advised that it was not possible to name at that time more than 17 of the fifty and odd projects which might be placed under contract in the event of such a reduction.

It is difficult to estimate the number of men in the building trades and the number of industries supplying materials therefor which would be affected by a curtailment of the public-building program, but it is believed that the value of the work which would have to be withheld from contract during the fiscal years 1932 and 1933 will total approximately $60,000,000.

Very truly yours,

OGDEN L. MILLS,
Secretary of the Treasury.

I refer again to the letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] under date of March 29.

Mr. President, the Senate has overwhelmingly exempted the building program from the operation of the 10 per cent cut, and I hope that decision will not be changed. I thank the Senator from New York for yielding.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada. But I want to say for myself that if I had to choose between such a curtailment of the Post Office Department appropriations and—if we may believe the head of the department—the dismissal of thousands of employees who are needed for the operation of the Government service, and the erection of some monumental post-office buildings, I would not hesitate a moment, and I do not believe the public would.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again? I dislike to interrupt him so often.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that the Appropriations Committee, which, excepting myself, is a most excellent committee——

Mr. COPELAND. I will include the Senator in that characterization.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is very kind. However, it is certainly a very level-headed committee. Does not the Senator think, if the question is considered first by the subcommittee and then afterwards by the full committee, that proper recommendations can be made regarding these reductions without having a resolution adopted by the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. I fear we have gone far enough already in our deliberations in the Appropriations Committee to make it apparent that if we carry out the letter of the Tydings resolution and the letter of the McKellar resolution we will be obliged to make such reductions in the conduct of the Post Office Department that it will be hampered and that there will be the dismissals which have been suggested.

I wish the Senator from Tennessee might take the view that we might well set aside both of these mandatory resolutions and permit the Appropriations Committee on its own account to see if it can not bring some recommendations to this body which will accomplish what the Senator from Tennessee has in mind and which will at the same time give the committee greater latitude in the adjustment of figures to carry out our ideas of economy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The conclusive reason why that should not be done, in my judgment, is to be found in a sentence taken from an Associated Press dispatch published yesterday, as follows:

The Treasury statement on the condition of its finances at the end of April made public to-day showed it had collected from all sources $1,685,666,535 and had spent $4,019,771,677.

In other words, we have spent considerably more than double, nearly three times as much, according to the actual figures, as we have collected in taxes. We must take some steps to correct that situation.

Mr. COPELAND. We must take some steps to correct it—I agree with that fully.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me that I may send forward a proposed amendment to the resolution offered by the Senator from Connecticut in the nature of perfecting the resolution?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator yield further so that the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia may be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Virginia to the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In lines 7 and 8 it is proposed to strike out the words "for the Postal and Customs Services," and in lines 8 and 9, to strike out "such services would be seriously disrupted" and insert "the Post Office and Treasury Departments would be required to make the wholesale dismissal of Government employees proposed by the heads of these departments."

Mr. COPELAND. Now, let us have the resolution read as it would appear if amended.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let the entire resolution be read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Appropriations, in its consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, with a view to making the 10 per cent reductions referred to in Senate Resolution 197, should not reduce the appropriations to a point where the Post Office and Treasury Departments would be required to make the wholesale dismissal of Government employees proposed by the heads of these departments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, of course I should approve of that amendment, and I hope that my friend from Tennessee will do so.

Before I sit down I desire to say a word about the mail subventions and the construction loans.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to a discussion of that question will he permit me to offer an observation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds will he permit me to offer this observation?

As the Senator knows, I have been and am in favor of the general 10 per cent economy principle, feeling that except as we have some tangible objective we will be lost in our effort to economize, and it will read to wholly sterile results.

But it is perfectly obvious that there are statutory difficulties in the way of certain of the 10 per cent cuts in certain of the appropriation bills. I submit that we must first make these statutory corrections before we can hope effectually to save the 10 per cent principle.

The House is undertaking to write what has been defined as an omnibus economy program, through the medium of which certain fundamental reorganizations of the Federal structure could occur to achieve many of these economies, or at least some of them, in a reasonable and consecutive way. Regardless of whether or not that program wholly succeeds in the House, the program will reach the Senate for our consideration. It can be made the major program, if we be so willed, through which to implement the 10 per cent economy drive and more.

Do we not, then, find ourselves in this position: Should we not suspend our consideration of other appropriation bills until we have had the chance to deal with this specific method of creating rational opportunities for economy? Should we not perfect the latter legislation before we undertake to pass further upon any of the actual appropriation bills themselves?

I submit to the Senator is not the logical procedure as I indicate?

Mr. COPELAND. I think the proposal is interesting; but when we find that the total amount of the proposed economies is only forty millions, it is an infinitesimal sum as compared with our needs for reductions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest, further, that, as I understand, that economy resolution will go to the same committee—the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I make a parliamentary inquiry, and ask if that is true? I do not know myself what committee it will go to. I am not very good at the rules; and I should like to have the statement of the President of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the question?

Mr. McKELLAR. A measure was passed over in the House yesterday providing for economies amounting to about $40,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is part of the legislative appropriation bill. The $40,000,000 is but a small part of the possible economy to be achieved through courageous treatment of the particular proposal to which I advert.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is part of the legislative appropriation bill; and, as I understand, it will go to the Appropriations Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the Committee on Appropriations unless otherwise directed by the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Chair.

Mr. COPELAND. To answer the Senator from Michigan directly, I think I, too, ought to defend the Appropriations Committee. It is striving in every way possible to effect economies; and, without disparagement of what the House has done or has not done, the economies that are coming out of this committee will be far in excess of anything which is brought over in the particular bill to which the Senator refers. I agree with the Senator, however, that it must be considered in connection with our bills.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is it not the starting point in the further reorganization of our Budget, if we are going to carry on in a common-sense method?

Mr. COPELAND. I think if the Senator had been seated in the Appropriations Committee he would think it was not even a milepost in the progress of the committee. Our committee has gone far beyond this already. I am sure the chairman of the committee agrees to that?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the committee in any sense of the word. I think it is doing a perfectly splendid piece of work. Furthermore, I am cordially in sympathy with most of the efforts that the Senator from Tennessee is making. I am simply suggesting that as a practical starting point in the further consideration of the balance of these 10 per cent cuts, we might well have in hand any opportunities for reorganizing the structure of the Government. I am suggesting that we are in final position to succeed with the 10 per cent reduction, and more, if we first proceed with the necessary statutory action to make possible a proper consolidation and elimination of bureaus and departments, and a national retrenchment in personnel. I am suggesting that we remove convenient excuses for further nonaction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to make this statement:

I can see how it might be considered, and I have no doubt in the world that it will be. At the same time it must be remembered that this particular appropriation bill for the Treasury and Post Office Departments carries over a billion dollars of appropriations, and a 10 per cent saving on this bill alone would be something like $98,000,000. If we reconsidered the idea of putting in public buildings, it would amount to more than $100,000,000 in savings, whereas the entire economy program amounts to only about $40,000,000, as I am informed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am sure that in all good spirit we are going forward as best we can in the Senate to deal with this important problem; but I do wish to say a word about the mail subventions and the loan construction legislation and contracts.

It is not quite fair for us to give the country the impression—and I am sure that if the debates are read that will be the impression—that we have suddenly entered upon a policy which has to do with giving large sums of money to rich shipping corporations and subsidizing them with other millions in order that they may operate, and that we have done that regardless of law and in some secret manner. The fact is the mail subventions and the construction loans are made in accordance with a law which we passed through the Congress after weeks of debate. There has not been a thing said here in the debate on the appropriation bills that was not said when we had the Jones-White law before us. This whole matter was fought out at that time.

I remember a tongue-lashing that the distinguished Senator from Missouri, Mr. Reed, gave to me because, as a Democrat, I was supporting what he called a "subsidy." He pointed out to me that the Democratic platforms for time without end have stood against subsidies. All those matters were brought out; but it was impressed upon the Congress that if we are to carry our tonnage on the seven seas, if we are to take our trade into the ports of the world, if we are to advertise our wares to every part of the world, we must have an American merchant marine.

It was prophesied by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and others interested that if we were to pass that bill we would put the flag on the seven seas. The truth of the prophecy is shown by the fact that we have done that.

We have built up an American merchant marine. Our flag is found everywhere now. Our ships go everywhere. They could not go except for the assistance rendered by the operation of the laws of this country.

There is nothing secret or hidden or sinister about what we have done as regards the loan fund and the mail contracts. We have entered upon those arrangements in full knowledge of the significance of the appropriations. We debated them originally at great length, and many times since. These loans have been made in accordance with law. These mail subventions have been made in accordance with the act which we passed here. I can not believe it is possible for us to repudiate them; and I was glad to have the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] say this morning, in answer to my question, that it would be a last resort if we repudiated our contracts. Certainly it would be a last resort.

We are not going to repudiate our contracts. If they were merely contracts, merely the obligation of the Government to pay, we would not repudiate them; but when, resting upon those contracts, through the operation of the American merchant marine, we are furthering the interests of the American people, certainly we are not going to repudiate them. In the interest of agriculture, in the interest of our manufacturers, in the interest of every industry of America, we need our merchant marine; and if I know anything about the sentiment of our country, that is the universal sentiment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. KING. I ask for information, because I understand the superior knowledge of my friend upon this matter. To what contracts does he refer specifically? Will he also advise the Senate, particularly myself, the duration of those contracts, and whether there are in the contracts any provisions which commit the Government to a limited or to a specific or to an indefinite period during which these subventions or subsidies, whatever we want to call them, are to be paid to one or more of these shipping companies?

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be very happy to answer my friend. I know no man who is more just and fair and loyal and devoted to his country.

It will be remembered that prior to the enactment of the Jones-White Act all of our ocean mail contracts were given for one year. Some Senators were very insistent that they should not go over that period; but it was pointed out that if we were to build up the American merchant marine these owners who were investing large sums of money must have some assurance of permanence in their operations; otherwise, they could not go forward with their activities. So, under the Jones-White Act we lengthened those contracts to 10 years. The Postmaster General was authorized to enter into 10-year contracts. That is the law; and under the operation of the law these contracts have been made for that period.

Of course, the law has not been in operation so long that much time has been wiped off the length of the contracts. I suppose some of them perhaps have only six or eight years to run. Some new contracts have been made under the operation of the law. I should say that the average remaining length of contract which we have entered upon is eight or nine years.

Those contracts were made under the operation of the law. When I have heard discussion about repudiation of the contracts I have naturally resented it as a citizen and particularly as one interested in the American merchant marine. It would be a great injustice to the men who have invested their money if we were now to terminate these contracts. As a matter of law, I do not think it could be done; but my friend from Utah is far better able to discuss that matter than I am.

Now, as regards the loans——

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a very brief observation?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nevada to make an observation?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I call attention to the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, pages 426 to 482, in which will be found a list of the stockholders of one of the companies involved, the International Mercantile Marine Co. This list consists of 56 pages of small type, giving the names and addresses of the long list of stockholders, practically all Americans, and the number of shares held by each. A very large number of the persons in this list are the holders of from 1 to 5 and 10 share lots; and a great many of them are women, probably widows, who have their investments in this company. As I say, there are 56 pages, containing the names of many thousands of these stockholders, most of them very small stockholders. I am not referring to a few large ones.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I must hurry on, because I want to give the Senate a chance to vote on this amendment. But I do want the RECORD to-day to show a defense of the construction loans as well as the mail contracts, because of what was uttered here in the early part of the debate.

As regards the construction loans, may I say to my friend from Utah and any others who may be interested, that the Government agreed to advance 75 per cent of the value of the ships which were to be built. The company itself had to invest the 25 per cent at once, and to make payment of the balance at the rate of 10 per cent a year over a period of 10 years. So the money which we talk of having "given away" we have not given away at all. It will be returned to us and upon that money we are receiving interest. In some instances the interest is very low; but that is the fault of the Senate, I may say. We held up here an amendment suggested by my friend the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], which provided for a higher rate of interest; and it would have gone into effect 10 months before it did if we had taken prompt action. As a matter of fact, so far as I can learn, every loan that has been made has been in accordance with law. The money is all going to be repaid. It was money which was advanced to put American ships upon the ocean, and it will come back to us, as it will in commerce, many, many times over.

I wanted to say this much about the mail contracts and the construction loans, because it is not fair to have it appear to the country that some hidden and secret thing has been done which has given millions of our money for the benefit of a few persons, some of them alleged to be very wealthy men.

As the Senator from Nevada has pointed out, the ownership is widely distributed. The ownership extends everywhere. The advantage to America is beyond computation. We never could have had an American merchant marine without the willingness of Government to cooperate.

I hope we may adopt this resolution, which has been amended by the Senator from Virginia, and that greater latitude may be given to the committee in determining its policy as regards this particular bill. Then we may be sure our national shipping interests will be protected and our faithful employees left in their positions.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a few remarks on this resolution, not because I am absolutely sure that my information about these matters is correct but rather that my fellow Senators may know what I think about them and instruct me if I am in error.

I have heard a good many things said, and agree with very few of them. I do not propose to discuss ocean mail contracts and air mail contracts, since I do not have before me sufficient information. But with the superficial information which I do have, I am inclined to the belief that they may be wholly illegal, because they are so outrageously unfair that they are indecent; and if that be true, then to talk about repudiating contracts does not enter into the matter at all, as the contracts were invalid from the beginning if they were obtained in violation of law.

The matter to which I desire to refer relates to the departments and bureaus. There seems to have grown up an opinion, and some of the Senators appear to hold that opinion, that the heads of the departments are either the superiors or the equals of the United States Senate, and I disagree with that conclusion. They are the servants of the United States Senate. They are subordinate to the United States Senate, and the Senate may say to them, "You shall do this or do that;" and while they may have a right to furnish facts to the Senate, to give information to the Senate, when they so far forget themselves as to become ward politicians, and attempt to control the votes of Senators of the United States through some form of threats, I resent it.

I know that Senators, as was stated by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] the other day, are impervious to propaganda. But the difficulty about it is, How do I know what is propaganda and what is truth? How does the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], for whom I have the highest regard, and know that he states only what he believes is for the best interests of the Nation, know that the figures which he has placed in the RECORD, and the statements which he has placed in the RECORD, are not merely propaganda?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I have asked the heads of the various bureaus in the departments, who are experts, who have given years of study to the handling of these problems, to furnish certain data. They have furnished those data, and I have full confidence in the majority of their statements. There may have been errors here and there, but, taking them by and large, I feel that they are based on long years of experience, and on reliable information.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I state to the Senator from Kentucky that in the consideration of appropriation bills facts are elicited which tend to corroborate his position. Recently when the Department of the Interior appropriation bill was being considered representatives of the Indian Bureau demanded large appropriations for that bureau, but it was disclosed during the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations that during the past two years the salaries of the bureau employees had been greatly increased and the number of employees had also been augmented. The total amount demanded by the bureau to meet the salaries of its employees bore no fair or just relation to the entire appropriation. The data submitted by the bureau revealed that it required more than 52 per cent of the entire appropriations just to meet the salaries of bureau employees. The Indians, wards of the Government and in whose interest it is presumed the bureau is working, were to receive less than 48 per cent of approximately $25,000,000 appropriated for the bureau, and the bureau employees were to be paid the remainder. Out of less than 48 per cent all Indian schools were to be maintained and all of the activities in behalf of the Indians were to be carried forward. The situation in other bureaus and agencies of the Government presents cases, which, if not parallel to the one just mentioned, certainly possess analogies obvious to all. The Federal Government has grown powerful by reason of its great number of bureaus and executive organizations and by reason of its hundreds of thousands of employees. It has ceased to be efficient and economical; it has become top-heavy and is reaching out into fields which should be occupied by the States and their subdivisions and by individuals. In the fiscal year 1916 all of the expenses of the Government were approximately $1,000,000,000. For the present fiscal year the expenditures of the Government will, in my opinion, exceed $5,000,000,000, and the salaries of the Federal employees will exceed $1,300,000,000. Whenever efforts are made to curb Federal expenses or to introduce needed reforms in the administration of the National Government, from every part of the land protests are heard. I fear that bureaucracy is more powerful than the Government itself. Federal and executive agencies will prevent administrative reforms and the execution of policies calculated to effect economies and governmental efficiency.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. The Senator from Nevada has referred to the fact that the statements which he has submitted were made up by experts. I beg to make this suggestion to the distinguished Senator: The experts in the departments of government everywhere resent, and bitterly resent, the fact that laymen, such as we are, would attempt to question anything they might say, and the greatest question before the American Congress to-day is, Will we restore the sovereignty of the Congress or will we delegate it to bureaus and departments to tell us what we ought to do? We might as well abolish the Congress if we are not going to exercise our own judgment.

No department may do anything except what it is authorized to do by Congress; that is, unless Congress authorizes it to modify the laws which we have passed, which has been done sometimes. When we establish a department we have a right to say, "You have this authority, you have this power. These functions may be performed by you." But we do not surrender the power to the department to exercise it forever and entirely separated from Congress. We have a right to recall that power at any time we desire to. If the Congress of the United States believes that some of the activities which have been carried on by a department or bureau should be reduced or dispensed with, the head of the department has no duty to perform other than to advise the Congress of the facts.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I agree with the Senator absolutely that Congress has the power. But take the case of the Post Office appropriation bill. An arbitrary reduction of so much money, assuming that it has to be made, can result only in large dismissals of the personnel. It can not be made by the Committee on Appropriations by reducing salaries. That will require legislation by Congress. It means dropping of a great many men and women in order to meet the cut in the appropriation.

I just want to emphasize the fact that Congress will have to change the law, modify the law to a certain extent, if this proposed 10 per cent cut is to apply.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator. But what I meant to say was this—that it is not the business of the experts of the department or of the bureau to tell Congress what it should do and what it should not do. If I were a farmer and employed a farming man and said to him, "I am going to build a new barn," and he said, "No; you must not build any new barn," and gets all the other fellows to come in and tell me that I ought not to build a new barn, I would fire him; and that is what ought to be done with the heads of these departments who are putting into the record and disseminating through the Nation information to the effect that "if you cut any of the appropriations coming to my department, then there will be so many men fired down in your State."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. May I call the Senator's attention to how the will of Congress is being thwarted by some of the bureaus?

Mr. LOGAN. I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. For instance, when the Congress attempted to control the appropriations through the Budget, making the Budget responsible to the President instead of to Congress, Congress put itself in a position where the will of Congress is being thwarted by the Budget.

The Federal Trade Commission was instructed by the Senate, through resolution, to conduct certain investigations, particularly of the Power Trust. I think no one will deny that the Federal Trade Commission has done a very good piece of work in conducting those investigations. But what do we find through the Budget and the executive department? We find that the funds of the Federal Trade Commission are reduced by the Budget by $500,000. That only means that the investigations will be thwarted, that the commission will be handicapped, or that the investigations will come to an end. That is done in the interest of economy, or is said to be in the interest of economy, but really it is done on the theory that it is all right for the power corporations to rob the people in hard times, when they have very little income, that we are not going to use the police power of the Federal Trade Commission to prevent the people from being gouged through high rates during the depression.

That will also affect other investigations which are being conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, showing how Congress, after providing the machinery to protect the public, and, according to law, passing resolutions directing the commission to make investigations, see the commission deprived through the Budget of funds with which to conduct them. That is only one of the instances where Congress is abdicating its authority and its throne.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. That is true, I imagine, in many instances.

I hold this to be true: If the Congress should determine that there should be a bureau established to teach the people how to temper the tremors of titillating tomcats, and the bureau should attempt to carry out the will of the Congress, of course it would begin with a small appropriation, as all bureaus do, and increase rapidly. But after a while the Congress might decide that it would be foolish to waste any more time with tomcats, that it was not getting the value of its money, and Congress could have the right to abolish the bureau and withdraw the appropriation. If some bureau comes and says, "You must not do that," I say to the head of the department, "Your advice we are glad to have, but when you undertake to tell us what we must do or what we must not do, you are exceeding your authority."

I make no attack upon the heads of departments. I think they have done the best they can. I would not charge them with having any desire to waste the money of the taxpayers of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall conclude in just a moment, as I do not mean to interfere with the consideration of the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule the resolution which has been under discussion goes to the calendar. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I make no charge, as I said, against the heads of the departments or any of the experts. I beg to remind Senators of these facts. Last year the total cost of the government in the United States—I mean by that local, State, and National—was $15,090,000,000, according to the best figures I can obtain. That was the total. Of that sum the cost of local government was $8,292,000,000. The cost of State government was $2,364,000,000. The cost of the Federal Government was $4,434,000,000. I have heard the propagandists who speak over the radio and who write for the newspapers say that it is not possible to make any reduction in the cost of the National Government. They say that $4,000,000,000 was the cost of the Federal Government last year. They missed it by $434,000,000 and thereby admit that there can be some reduction, which has been made even by the Director of the Budget and by the Congress.

I desire to call attention to one other thing. If we go back 10 years we will find that the cost of government was probably not exceeding $8,000,000,000 all told. What is the value of all of the property in the United States? The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] the other day said it was $400,000,000,000. I think none of the political economists have ever placed the value that high and that none of the statisticians have reached that high figure. The highest estimate I ever knew to be placed on the assets of this Nation was $350,000,000,000. That has been reduced very materially. If we take the entire assets of the Nation and convert them into cash at their full value and invest that cash in bonds at 4 per cent, the total income will not be as much as the cost of government in the United States.

I would invite your attention to one other thing in connection with this matter. We keep on talking about building up a merchant marine, maintaining the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department as they are now. I would like to ask the gentlemen who favor that program where we are going to get the money? We have now fixed charges of more than $2,000,000,000 that must be paid. Our income last year, as I recall it, was probably less than that. Our income, with all the talk that we may make about the tax bill which we are going to pass, will next year probably not meet the fixed charges—that is, the charges caused by the public debt and the moneys paid to the veterans. If that is so, it is said we can sell bonds. Yes; for a while; but even in the sale of bonds we reach the point after a while where the public can not buy any more or will not buy any more bonds.

I can not understand why it is that there is such a great objection to a reduction in the number of governmental employees. I have heard men on this floor deplore any probability of making any reduction in the number of employees. I have seen them almost shed tears in contemplation of the probable separation of a Federal employee from his job. I will make this statement in regard to the matter. I do not believe that any Federal employee whose services are needed and who renders full value for the money that he receives should be separated from his job; but I am surprised to hear Senators say that we must not turn Federal employees out of their jobs.

I am thinking, Senators, of the people who support these Federal employees. I am thinking of my friends, the people I know. They are men who rise early in the morning, who go to work early in the morning, and who labor throughout the long, long day. There is no quitting at 4.30 in the afternoon for them. There is no beginning work after 8.30 or 9 o'clock in the morning for them. They work from sunup until sundown. Yet as a result of their labors they find they are unable to feed and clothe their families and educate their children. They find that the interest on their mortgages can not be paid; that they are unable to pay their debts. Then I remember, in addition to that, that on the shoulder of each one of them, as he goes back and forth about his work, there is a little invisible Federal employee resting who reaches into his pocket and plucks out from its grimy inside every dime that he puts in there.

I do not want to see any of the Federal employees separated from the service unless perchance their services are not needed. If I had an opportunity, I know I could prove by actual experience the statement I am about to make. I believe there is hardly a public office in the United States of America, either local or State, or national, where the expenses could not be reduced at least one-fourth and at the same time the efficiency of the service improved. I have had no inconsiderable experience in public affairs. I know there is not an office anywhere where we could not reduce the expense of operating the office without seriously interfering with the public service.

It is said we are going to hurt something here. I admit that the way we are proceeding to reduce appropriations is unskillful. I admit that it is not the best way. But it is the only way we have. We do not have the information that we should have, and I very readily admit that. We ought to have something upon which we could base our conclusions or that would enable us to reach a conclusion as to whether there should be a reduction in the expenses of government at this time in these departments.

Let us see what we have upon which to base our judgment. Look over the country from one end to the other and we will find that every business corporation in the United States has been reducing its expenses. The railroads have reduced their service nearly 500,000 in the last two or three years. Look at the banks, the insurance companies, the trust companies, and every other concern that is engaged in business. There has been a radical reduction in their overhead. Reasoning from that to this, the greatest of all corporations, it seems to me that the United States of America, of which we are directors, should be able to reduce materially the cost of government at this time. That is one reason why I think our unskillful method of making the reductions is entirely justified. Is there any further reason?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to thank the Senator for the position he is taking in his speech. I think it is the position of good, hard, common sense, and I am delighted that the Senator is making the speech. But after saying that, I want to suggest this thought to him. The Senator says it is not the correct way to legislate. We are legislating precisely in the same way in making the reduction of 10 per cent that we would legislate if we had not fixed any percentage of reduction at all. In other words, it does not mean a flat reduction on every item but only on the aggregate. The committee goes into the proof as to each item of appropriation and passes upon it just exactly as it would if such an order had not been made by the Senate. The only thing the Senate has required is that the committee consider the general reduction of 10 per cent in the aggregate.

Mr. LOGAN. That I thoroughly understand, and what I meant by saying that it is an unskillful thing is that when the question of reducing an appropriation comes before us we are without sufficient information to know whether the reduction should be so much or none at all. It is unskillful because we do not have before us the information that we ought to have. When we ask for information we get propaganda. We do not know whether it is a "snark" or whether it is a "boojum."

Another reason why I think we can reduce these appropriations without interfering with the personnel is this: I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is very much mistaken about there being a reduction in the personnel of the service. We had more business to attend to in 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930 than we will have in 1933. No one can dispute that fact. It should have cost the Government of the United States more to carry on its operations during those years than it will cost next year. When our revenues have fallen off more than half, when our trade has fallen off more than half, when business of every kind has fallen off, we certainly should be able to reduce the cost of government. Instead of that it is suggested by the heads of the departments that if we reduce the appropriations we will not be able to carry on the business of the Government without releasing a number of employees.

As I said, I am not here to say that the number of Federal employees should not be reduced. The test should not be whether he is a Federal employee or whether he is not. The test should be, Are his services needed by the public? If not, he ought to go.

I can not think that the Senators who have protested so vigorously against any reduction in the number of Federal employees would say, if we have a department here doing certain work and another one over here doing the same work, that some of the employees ought not to be let out. I do not think any Senator would take the position that we should keep any man or woman on the pay roll simply because he or she happens to be on the pay roll at this time. The test is, Does the public need the service?

I am a friend of the Federal employees. I do not believe in being unfair to them. I want to help them so far as I can. But let me serve warning on them. They must make up their minds that they must cooperate in this program of economy and contribute to the reduction of the expenses of Government, or it is going to be all the worse for them.

It was suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] the other day that the State officials of Michigan had voluntarily reduced their salaries and that schoolteachers in that State had consented to a 15 per cent cut. I understand that in my own State the employees of many departments got together, the legislature not having done very much along that line, and agreed on a 25 per cent reduction of salaries. But when one talks about reducing the number of Federal employees or reducing their compensation or anything else affecting them, they come back and say, "You must not touch us; we are sacred; the Federal business must go on." If in all lines of private activity business has fallen off and is not what it once was so that business men throughout the country have been forced to reduce the salaries of their employees, I can see no reason, the revenues of the Federal Government having decreased so that it is unable to pay what it once paid, why there should not be a readjustment, why there should not be consolidations.

I am not much on cutting salaries—it may be because I have always needed mine so badly—I am not thoroughly convinced that it is a wise policy, but I am very strongly in favor of going through every department of the Government and eliminating every employee whose services may be unnecessary. In that way, I think we would bring about a real saving. I do not care whether it be in the legislative department, the judicial department, or the executive branch of the Government, wherever we find a place where men and women are drawing salaries from the Government and are not giving all the service they should render there should be something done about it.

I do not think the resolution of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] should be adopted. I think if we do anything we ought to increase the amount by which the appropriations should be reduced. I do not believe we shall ever accomplish anything by merely a 10 per cent reduction when the reduction ought to be 25 or 30 per cent; and it will not be two years until we will be forced to make a 50 per cent reduction in expenditures.

I do not believe that we are going to be able to balance the Budget at all. Probably I ought not to say that, but there is not the slightest prospect of it at this time that I can see. I believe everyone admits that it is of the utmost importance that we balance the Budget. It will be exceedingly unfair, as I view it, to place a great additional burden of taxation on the bent backs of the suffering people at this time and say that they must bear a burden that ought not to be placed upon them, and yet fail to reduce the cost of government.

I know there are some appropriations we can not reduce; I know that our revenues will not pay for those items that we can not reduce, but I am opposed to passing the burden on to the people at a time when they can not live.

Mr. BANKHEAD obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Davis	Keyes	Sheppard
Austin	Dickinson	King	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dill	La Follette	Shortridge
Barbour	Fess	Lewis	Smith
Bingham	Fletcher	Logan	Smoot
Blaine	Frazier	Long	Steiwer
Borah	George	McGill	Stephens
Bratton	Glass	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glenn	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Gore	Morrison	Trammell
Byrnes	Hale	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Harrison	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hastings	Norris	Wagner
Cohen	Hatfield	Nye	Walcott
Connally	Hayden	Oddie	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Howell	Patterson	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	Hull	Pittman	Waterman
Costigan	Johnson	Reed	Watson
Couzens	Jones	Robinson, Ark.	White
Cutting	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Dale	Kendrick	Schall

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For what purpose?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution which I offered this morning may be substituted for the resolution offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may not be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ODDIE. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, that action can not be taken in the absence of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I prefer not to yield for that purpose at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think it is fortunate that this discussion has developed to-day upon the subject of economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government. Congress must soon reach one of the most important decisions that it will be called upon to make during this session. It must decide, Mr. President, whether it is going to yield to the persistence of small, well-organized groups of Federal employees or whether it is going to lend a listening ear to and heed the protests of the silent taxpayers throughout the country. We all recognize how persistent has been the organized propaganda of every class of Federal employees in this country since the very first suggestion was made as to the elimination of any of the governmental services.

I want to commend, in the first place, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], who, while bringing down upon himself protests from many interested parties, has led with courage, with decision, and with firmness the fight upon the floor of the Senate in the interest of the business people, the taxpayers, and the consumers of America.

I have been disturbed, frankly, as I have heard Senators of great ability and of undoubted patriotism stand upon this floor and plead for the retention of Federal positions by all who are now upon the Federal pay roll. "Ah," they say, "are you going to turn men and women out of their places and have them join the great ranks of the unemployed?"

Mr. President, it is not my conception of the duty of Congress or of this Government that the taxpayers shall be called upon to provide Federal jobs for anybody, or to retain them in their positions when the Federal Treasury is not in position to do so.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has come nearer expressing my views upon the subject of economy than any one else who has addressed the Senate since I have been here. Frankly, I have been disturbed for a number of years at the steady growth of bureaucracy in this country.

In 1916, the year before we entered the World War, the total expenditures of the Federal Government for all purposes were only $800,000,000. To-day, we are faced with a Budget sent here by the President of the United States—one charged with high responsibility for the financial affairs of this country—of $5,000,000,000. That is his estimate, sent to Congress, of the expenditures for the next year.

We all recognize that during the World War an enlargement of the functions of government was necessary. At that time, when tax money was easy to secure, when the Federal Treasury was bulging with money, it was too easy to add new bureaus, new departments, new commissions, thousands upon thousands of Federal employees. To-day it seems to me that Congress is almost helpless at the hands of this group of nearly a million Federal employees.

Just look at the situation over in the House a few days ago in connection with the proposed economy bill. I know nothing of the merits of that measure, not having studied the different items involved in it; but we do know of the combined pressure of the Federal employees against all of the items which have been eliminated from the bill. So I submit that it is time for Congress to begin to realize that we are facing here a terrific contest and struggle between the organized Federal employees upon one side and the unorganized taxpayers of America on the other side.

The very argument made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE], that a reduction in the total carried by this appropriation bill would eliminate a number of Federal employees, is one of the striking advantages of it to my mind.

Mr. President, I happen to have some personal knowledge of the policy of the Post Office Department upon the subject of rural mail carriers. Last summer I wrote to the department—I have the correspondence here—and directed their attention to a small town from which four rural routes went out. I called their attention to the fact that those carriers made their trips on good roads, and in cars maintained by the Government, in from one and a half hours to two hours a day. They would go out, say, at 8 o'clock and return to the county seat by 9.30 or 10 o'clock, with no other work to perform through all the day. It was in my home State, in an adjoining county; but I suggested to the department in that letter that it occurred to me that two routes there were sufficient; that the four could be consolidated into two, and render just as good service to the patrons and eliminate one-half the cost of the service.

I was advised by the department as follows:

> When vacancies occur in the carrier force it is the invariable practice to have an investigation conducted to ascertain the practicability of effecting a consolidation. No regular carriers are removed from the service incident to revisions of this kind.
>
> We thank you kindly for the information contained in your letter.

In other words, having secured places upon the Federal pay roll, regardless of whether their services were needed or not, regardless of whether they were earning the pay that they were receiving, it was the policy of the Government to retain them upon the pay roll until death removed them!

I submit that the same policy prevails throughout this country; and certainly now, when the Government is struggling in every way possible to raise enough money to pay its necessary debts, we should not on the one hand permit wastefulness, extravagance, and bad business methods of that sort to be practiced by our Government, and then on the other hand direct our Finance Committee to go out and find every form of taxation possible to raise money to pay for that kind of service.

Do you think it is right, I ask, to vote for an increase of 1 cent upon first-class mail matter—a form of service used by everybody, rich and poor, in this country—in order to raise money from the widows and the children and the plain, average people of this country to pay the salaries of employees who either are not earning their salaries or whose services are not necessary for the efficient administration of the functions of this Government?

I recognize that there are many beneficial services now carried on by our Federal Government, many that appeal to the sentiments of all of us; but my theory is that the Federal Government should be economically administered and that it should engage only in those functions which are essential to the Federal Government. We ought to eliminate unnecessary bureaus and departments.

Why, down here in the Agricultural Department they have a bureau to study the sex life of wild animals, and there is an appropriation for that bureau in the agricultural appropriation bill. There is a bureau there to investigate insects that affect man and animals—sandflies, fleas, and things of that sort. How they are going to investigate them down here, locked up in the Agricultural Building, I do not know. I do know, however, that at this time, when the people are unable to pay more taxes, they ought not be called upon to pay increased postage rates; they ought not to be called upon to pay more for the oil they use in lubricating their automobiles; they ought not to be called upon to pay all of these taxes, which we know must be passed on to the ultimate consumer, merely to maintain bureaus and commissions of that type, and the departments are full of them.

In my opinion, Mr. President, we ought not to pay out of current income for the public buildings that are included in these appropriation bills, amounting to about $350,000,000. I have no objection to the public-buildings program. In fact, I would not object to and believe I would support an enlarged public-buildings program covered by a bond issue. It seems to me, however, that to build public buildings now out of current income and out of taxes that our committee is now searching for places to apply is an injustice to the current taxpayers. I think these permanent improvements should be paid for over a period of years.

I am willing to include several billion dollars in a bill paid for with a bond issue to give employment to the suffering people of this country. In any event, in my judgment the item of $350,000,000 for public buildings ought to be taken out of this bill. In that way we will obviate to that extent the necessity for levying additional taxes upon the business interests and the consumers of this country at a time when they are unable to stand additional taxes.

If I had my way about it, I would not stop at a reduction of 10 per cent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact, as I believe it is, that he is much more interested in cutting down the expenditures of the Government than in finding new sources of taxation to put upon the people of the United States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly the point I have been undertaking to develop in this statement.

Without taking time now to go into it, there are many directions in which the taxes of this Government can be reduced. Our business conditions, our people's incomes, our commodity prices, are now lower than they were in pre-war days. Our people are in worse condition to pay taxes now than they were prior to 1916.

Then why not revert, so far as the cost of administration of government is concerned, to a period at which the people were certainly better able to pay the amount of taxes then paid than they are able now to pay the same amount of taxes?

As I pointed out, the year before we entered the war, giving credit for the postal receipts, only $800,000,000 was paid by the taxpayers of this country, and no one heard any complaint at that time that the necessary functions of this Government were not properly administered. No one heard any complaint that by reason of small appropriations the people of this country did not have that degree of protection to which they were entitled under their Government.

I submit, therefore, that it is the duty of Congress, regardless of the number who may be taken from the pay rolls—and none of us like to see anything like that happen—to reduce expenses to the minimum. If I had my way, I would not stop at a 10 per cent reduction; I would not dally and trifle with a situation which we all know is a dangerous one in this country. I would not listen to the protests of any group or any class, however well they were organized, or however many votes they might have on election day.

Mr. President, I frankly believe that the time has come for Members of Congress to forget politics, and, as best they can, rise to the standard of statesmanship as they see it. I know that there are honest differences of opinion among Members of the Senate, but if I had my way, instead of reducing these appropriations 10 per cent, I would reduce the costs of this Government by 50 per cent, not including, of course, the fixed charges upon the public debt, and a proper appropriation for the needs of the disabled veterans of the war.

I would go back to the days prior to the World War, and it would not cripple in any way the discharge of the functions of this Government. If we could only brace ourselves to take that course, to cut to the bone, to perform a major operation, then we could almost release the Finance Committee from its search for all sorts of nuisance taxes, taxes upon checks, taxes upon admissions, all kinds of taxes which were applied during the war. If we would simply make up our minds and have the firmness to reduce the appropriations to around two and a half billion dollars, which would be more than a billion and a half over the appropriations in 1916, we would bring a sigh of relief to the people of this country.

For one, Mr. President, I do not entertain the philosophy that it is our duty, as representatives of the people of this country, to provide continued employment where it is not necessary. If that doctrine were sound, then the next step would be to contend that it was our duty to provide positions upon the Federal pay roll for everybody who could not get a job otherwise.

Mr. President, the only thing I hope to contribute to this discussion is to join my voice with those of others who stand ready to protect the taxpayers of this country in this great crisis through which they are going. I have not voted for an increase in any appropriation since I have been here. I have voted in favor of every proposed reduction in the appropriation bills. When the cry comes to me from my own State, as it does to all Senators, about the effect of reductions in the appropriations upon particular services, I simply write back that I am dedicated to the fundamental cause of reducing in every way possible the expenses of this Government, and the effect upon local institutions or local communities will not cause me to change my fundamental position. I am ready, and every Member of the Senate here may know it, to support all measures looking to reduction in the expenses of the Government.

Before I close, I want to commend the able and fair-minded statesman from Washington [Mr. JONES], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, on the opposite side of the Chamber from me, but one, who in my judgment, is rendering intelligent and useful and effective service to the Senate and to the taxpayers of this country and, in cooperation with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], is rendering the best type and quality of service which, to my mind, it is possible for any Member of this body to render to our country.

NAVAL BUILDING PROGRAM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a point of no quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield for that purpose?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Coolidge	King	Stephens
Barbour	Davis	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Blaine	Dickinson	McNary	Tydings
Borah	Fess	Moses	Vandenberg
Bratton	Hale	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Broussard	Hastings	Nye	White
Byrnes	Hatfield	Robinson, Ark.
Carey	Hayden	Robinson, Ind.
Cohen	Kean	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absentees, and the following Senators answered to their names when called:

Austin	Goldsborough	Lewis	Shipstead
Cutting	Kendrick	Oddie	Townsend
Glass

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

The following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

Bingham	Glenn	Metcalf	Thomas, Idaho
Connally	Gore	Reed	Walcott
Couzens	Jones	Shortridge	Walsh, Mass.
Fletcher	Keyes	Smith	Watson
George	La Follette	Smoot

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. McNARY. I move that proceedings under the call be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, because we recognized the heavy burden to the world of keeping up great armaments; because we wished to check the costly menace of unrestricted naval competition; because we believed that the cause of world peace could best be promoted by the limitation of armament by international agreement, the United States initiated the Washington conference in 1922. Since that time we have taken the lead in the movement to reduce naval armament, both by precept and by example.

Our position in regard to disarmament has been largely altruistic. We, better than any other country, can afford to keep up our armaments to such a strength that we become immune from outside attack. Furthermore, as we are recognized by the rest of the world to be a peaceable country, with no desire to increase its possessions in any part of the world, and no advantages of any kind to be derived from war, the degree of armament that we keep up is of little interest to the rest of the world with two exceptions, and in no way menaces the peace of the world.

The two exceptions are Great Britain, which while not at all desirous or expectant of difficulties with us, regards us as a possible rival for the control of the seas, and Japan, which considers that we are the principal obstacle in the way of her control of the East.

We have, in the international agreements which have been reached, sacrificed far more than the other powers taking part. We have further, by not taking advantage of the allowances permitted us by treaty, sought to encourage the other naval powers further to decrease their naval armaments. That our example has not been followed, and that while since the Washington conference in 1922 the United States has done little shipbuilding the other countries parties to the treaty have built largely as permitted to do under the terms of the treaties, is in no way the fault of the United States.

We have certainly done everything in our power to promote the success of the experiment to bring about world peace by limiting armament. In addition, we have contributed the Kellogg peace pact.

Mr. President, I personally am not at all certain that war can be stamped out or even made less probable by reducing armaments. I am very much afraid that the causes of war are much deeper than the mere possession of great armaments. The world is not a King Arthur's Round Table where nations go out, as did the Knights of the Round Table, to measure their prowess against their armed foes. Mostly they prefer to measure that prowess against some nation that they know they can overcome. Neither do they go out to right wrong or injustice unless the wrong or injustice is done to them.

Modern wars are pretty selfish affairs and very practical. If one country desires to make war against another country to gain some practical end, I am inclined to think that the strongest deterrent to keep it from so doing would be the fact that its opponent was too strong to overcome. Whether both countries were strongly prepared for war or whether neither country was so prepared, the war would take place, I fear, if the occasion for it and the will for it existed.

Also, it is fair to say that much of the talk about the dangers of armament has been directly inspired; first, by countries themselves impoverished by the World War and themselves unable to keep up their military machines, who would like to keep others down to the level which they themselves can maintain until more prosperous times come, and thus retain the status quo; second, by countries, themselves without adequate armaments, who would like to bring the rest of the world down to their own level of disarmament.

However, be that as it may, the present unfortunate condition of the world bears witness to the fact that the old order is not perfect, that under it wars have occurred which have done immense harm to the world. If there be a cure, let us have it. But in trying out cures, let us take all proper precautions to see to it that the patient is allowed to survive.

We have honestly set out to bring about permanent world peace. The country is back of the movement, not that we are internationally minded and ready to sacrifice ourselves for the good of the world at large, but because we believe that world peace will be good for us people here in the United States. We are not immolating ourselves on the shrine of any ideal, practicable or impracticable of realization. We will work for the good cause to the limit of common sense; but we will not stand for any jeopardizing by our representatives of our national security, should it develop that the experiment does not justify our hopes and that world peace may not be guaranteed.

That hitherto our efforts have been spent on limitation of naval armaments and not of land armaments is due to the fact that our geographical situation entails on us no necessity to keep up large land forces so long as we have adequate naval forces, and therefore our influence on land disarmament is negligible, whereas in naval disarmament our at one time threatened supremacy has given us almost paramount weight.

If there is anything at all in the pacifist argument that great armaments bring about warfare, those armaments should be cut down as well on land as on sea.

The effect of limiting disarmament to navies, as far as we are concerned, is simply to cut down the form of national defense which we particularly need, to lessen our military importance and the strength of our position in the affairs of the world, and to magnify that of the other powers which keep up great land armaments.

If the keeping up of these great land armaments is a threatened menace of war, and if wars are still to occur, the failure to keep up our naval armament will leave us in just so much weaker a position in case of another world conflict; and we must not lose sight of the fact that if a war, which is in any way general, does come about, every attempt will be made to get us in on one side or the other. If we are drawn in on the winning side with our great wealth, we shall be expected to finance our allies as we financed them during and after the World War; and if we are drawn in on the losing side, we shall have to pay not alone the expenses of the war but a large part of the indemnities therefor. Any war will be disastrous to us; but if we can be maneuvered into a losing war, we shall certainly pay as no country has ever been forced to pay before.

It is in the highest degree desirable, therefore, that we so keep up our armed forces, and especially our Navy, that no one will dare to interfere with our rights or invade our neutrality. Beyond the treaty limits we may not go, but that we should not keep up our Navy at least to the treaty ratios in these difficult and hazardous times is inconceivable.

We must be strong enough to keep out of war, and that is precisely what we shall not be if we keep up our present policy of allowing our Navy to deteriorate.

When President Harding took his seat in the White House in March, 1921, we had, in addition to the actual ships of the fleet, a very powerful force of battleships and battle cruisers on the ways, and many of them in an advanced stage of construction.

The various nations of the world which had taken part in the World War, and which were suffering from the effects of that conflict, were in a ripe condition to welcome almost any plan that would appear to make war less probable in the future, and that would reduce the burdens of keeping up armaments, while not undermining their national security.

When the 1922 annual naval appropriation bill, which had failed of passage in the last session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, ending March 4, 1921, came up for consideration in the first and special session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, called in the spring of 1922, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] succeeded on the floor in amending the naval appropriation bill by authorizing and requesting the President to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference on naval limitation. The 1917 naval appropriation bill included a similar provision, but no action to carry out the terms of the provision had ever been taken.

As far as the United States is concerned, therefore, this amendment of Senator BORAH'S, which was accepted by the Senate and later became law, was the first American action taken which led directly to the calling of a conference to bring about limitation of armament.

It was not, however, the first time that action on the part of our Government to reduce our naval building program had been suggested.

In the spring of 1919, while the peace conference was still in session in Paris, the British Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, and the First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Long, discussed with our then Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Josephus Daniels, and our then Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Benson, the proposition that the American shipbuilding program be largely abandoned. During the conference the British first sea lord admitted that Great Britain must have supremacy on the seas and that the American building program would clearly take away from her that supremacy.

In an article in the Washington Herald of January 23, 1927, ex-Secretary Daniels quoted Mr. Long as follows:

> Mr. Lloyd George can not support the League of Nations unless the United States will agree to cease the construction of its big naval program. Great Britain can not consent to any other nation having supremacy on the seas.

It is needless to say that our representatives did not yield to the British suggestion.

Later, in the same article, Mr. Daniels makes the following statement:

> I then asked him [Lloyd George] the pointed question if the agreement he proposed that the United States abandon its naval program was a condition precedent to his support and the support of his country to a League of Nations. "Of course not," said the Premier, "but the League of Nations would be a mere piece of rhetoric if we continue to build dreadnaughts."

In any event, nothing was done to check the carrying out of our capital-ship building program until the Washington conference was called in the fall of 1921.

At that time in capital ships in the course of construction we had 9 battleships, 3 of them of a tonnage of 32,600 tons each; 6 of a tonnage of 43,200 tons each; and 6 battle cruisers of a tonnage of 43,500 tons each. All of these ships were in a considerable stage of completion.

Under the terms reached in the Washington treaty we scrapped all of these ships under construction with the exception of two of the smaller battleships and two battle cruisers which, under the terms of the treaty, were to be converted into aircraft carriers. On the uncompleted vessels which were scrapped we had already expended $150,000,000.

Had there been no Washington conference and had our capital-ship program been carried out, as it certainly would have been carried out, we would in this class of ships have been incomparably stronger than any other nation in the world, and in all probability stronger than all of the other nations of the world combined, had they themselves built no further capital ships.

To promote the cause of naval limitation we gave up a position of practically certain security from outside attack, since no other nation was in a position where it was in any way possible for it to compete with our naval building program.

In return for this great sacrifice on our part we saved to ourselves the expenditures necessary to complete the program, which is a somewhat inadequate return for the sacrifice of security, but we entirely failed to reach a similar limitation on any other class of ships except capital ships and aircraft carriers.

The best opinion of our naval experts and statesmen at that time held that the needs of our country demanded a navy equal to that of any other country in the world, meaning Great Britain, and a navy on a ratio of 5 to 3 with that of Japan.

The ratios established at the Washington conference represented not alone an attempt to cut down world naval armament by reducing expenditures, but a well-considered balance of naval armament that it was expected would make for the general maintenance of peace in the world. Under the ratios reached, neither Great Britain, Japan, nor the United States could make war upon one another with any certainty of success, and the security thus afforded these three greatest naval powers, if the ratios were lived up to, was no small factor in the world balance that it was hoped had been reached and that it was hoped would prevent war in the future.

The ratio terms of 5–5–3 we did reach, or were supposed to have reached in the selected force of capital ships left to each of the three countries under the terms of the treaty, but no agreement was reached in other categories of ships.

Mr. President, one thing, however, we did reach at the Washington conference, and I fear, to the American mind, this is of more importance than the establishment of a protective ratio, and that is, we reached an agreement. To be sure, to reach it we had to give up our coming naval supremacy; we had to give up the plan of limiting all classes of combatant ships, and we had to give up the right to fortify our islands in the Pacific, but "by hook or by crook" we did reach an agreement, and the conference was hailed as a tremendous diplomatic success. Having established a 5–5–3 ratio on capital ships and having agreed to build no further capital ships for 10 years with certain exceptions provided in the treaty, we then sought to prevent further shipbuilding in other categories by setting an example of nonbuilding ourselves, and a melancholy failure our example has proved to be.

During the years from 1922 to 1929 our entire new shipbuilding program consisted of eight 8-inch-gun cruisers and three submarines, while all the other countries parties to the Washington treaty, unmindful of the peaceful example we were setting, built up their navies extensively.

In 1929, finding ourselves dropping far behind both Great Britain and Japan in the cruiser category, we did get through the Congress an authorization, with a time limit fixed in which the ships must be built, for 15 new 8-inch-gun cruisers. This authorization, which, if carried out, would have given us a considerable superiority over Great Britain in heavy cruisers, was too much for Great Britain to stand, and as a result the London conference came about.

As in the Washington conference we gave up our supremacy in capital ships, so in the London conference we gave up our considerable supremacy in heavy cruisers of a type essentially adapted to our American requirements, and in return we secured a limitation in categories other than capital ships and aircraft carriers.

To be sure, we deprived ourselves of the right to build the full complement already authorized of the type of cruisers that the bulk of American naval opinion deemed best suited to our needs, and we had to increase the ratio terms allowed Japan from the Washington treaty ratio of 5–3 to 5–3¼. In one category, the submarine, we even allowed her equality. But one thing we did reach, and that was an agreement, and the conference was therefore proclaimed to be a success.

Mr. President, just what, if anything, will happen at the Geneva conference it is difficult to foretell. We have no superiority in any category of ships to give up as we had at the time of the Washington conference and the London conference. Nor have we any advantage of any kind that we can afford to sacrifice.

The net results of our efforts to bring about permanent world peace seem to be that we ourselves are now far weaker relatively as compared with the other powers than we were at the time of the Washington conference, and no one can claim that world peace is in the immediate offing. Furthermore, the prospect of future conferences makes it increasingly difficult to enact legislation to maintain the degree of national defense held by our representatives to be essential to meet our national needs.

One of the main arguments in favor of limitation of armament is that we have profited from the lessons of the World War—that we have by treaties eliminated all probability of future conflicts, and that the need for armament for self-protection has largely been eradicated.

Everyone must admit that if a war is to take place, the country that is prepared and ready for immediate action has a great advantage over the country that is not prepared.

If a country actually gets into war, every armed ship and every trained man that it can command will be of advantage to that country in bringing the war to a successful conclusion, and it can only be because of confidence that it will not be called upon to use its armed forces that any self-respecting country having the resources to keep up an armed defense neglects so to do. The melancholy spectacle now going on in the east, where two great countries, both members of the League of Nations, both signatories to the Kellogg peace pact, and both members of the World Court have been, against the protests and warnings of the civilized world, at each other's throats, indicates very clearly that in spite of the lessons of the World War the age of warfare has not passed and the millenium has not arrived.

The treaties in which we have placed such implicit confidence have utterly failed of immediate effect and, with their prestige damaged, may not be relied upon with any degree of safety as guaranties against future war. Under existing conditions it is folly not to recognize that, little as our people want to go to war, a war may very well at any time be forced upon us, and with the tremendous interests we have at stake there can be no excuse for not being prepared to protect those interests.

We can not build certain ships that it would be to our advantage to build, because by treaty we have debarred ourselves from that privilege. For the same reason, we can not fortify certain of our possessions that we would perhaps do well to fortify. But at least we can do what by treaty we are permitted to do and what all the other naval powers, parties to the Washington and London treaties, have to a very considerable extent done, and that is, to renovate with new ships our disintegrating naval forces.

In his recent letter to Senator BORAH, Secretary Stimson gives a very strong and clear exposition of the position of our Government in relation to the present situation in the Far East. The letter calls attention to the fact that the treaties negotiated at the Washington conference are interrelated and interdependent and that the violation of any one of them disturbs the general understanding and equilibrium which were intended to be accomplished. The agreement not further to fortify our insular possessions in certain restricted areas in the Pacific certainly would never have been made but for the guaranty of the "open-door" policy and the maintenance of the territorial integrity of China with a certain degree of tranquillity in the Far East thereby assured. Based on this guaranty and on the safeguards included in others of the treaties, we did agree not further to fortify our insular possessions and did agree to a ratio of naval strength that without such safeguards might never have been assented to by our delegates. The violation of any one of the treaties opens up an entirely new situation, so far as we are concerned, and the letter makes it clear that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, certain treaty obligations have been violated. It also makes it clear that nothing has occurred, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, that would lead us to the belief that the "open-door" policy with China or the maintenance of her territorial integrity should in any way be abandoned.

There is nothing in the situation in the East to indicate that plowshares will be in immediate demand. There is everything to indicate that we should follow the prudent step taken by other nations to preserve their own interests; that is, provide for an adequate national defense.

Mr. President, on February 1 I spoke in the Senate, giving in fairly full detail the present condition of our Navy and certain comparisons between our Navy and the navies of the other great naval powers. I do not need to repeat to-day what I said at that time, as my speech is, of course, available to any Senator who will look it up in the RECORD.

Inserted in this speech were certain tables, prepared in my committee and verified by the Navy Department, giving the relative strength of the navies of the five powers parties to the Washington and London treaties, their present strength, their building programs, and their probable strength in ships not overage on December 31, 1936, provided no additional programs are undertaken, together with certain other financial and statistical data.

Based on the information in these tables certain salient points stand out. Our Navy is fast becoming a navy of obsolete ships, that is to say, of ships that under the age limitations of the Washington and London treaties are held to be no longer modern ships. The navies of all of the four other naval powers include some overage ships, but our own proportion of these ships is greater than that of any of the other powers.

At the present time, out of 373 ships on our Navy list, only 170 are underage vessels, while Japan has 184 underage vessels out of 207, and Great Britain has 150 underage vessels out of 294.

We have now 170 underage ships on the Navy list. To those will be added seven 8-inch-gun cruisers, 1 aircraft carrier, 5 destroyers, and 3 submarines now building; but by the same token in the next four years 125 of the 170 ships will have become obsolete, leaving us with not a single modern destroyer, except the 5 now building, and the 6 appropriated for but not yet started, out of a treaty quota of substantially 100, and with less than one-half of our treaty quota of submarines, and in that particular class of ships the making up of the deficiency by using overage ships can not, according to all naval testimony, with safety to the crews, be taken care of.

If we start no new construction before the termination of the London treaty at the close of the year 1936, and the other powers carry out their present programs, appropriations for which have already been made, we shall at that time have in modern ships but one-third of the ships allowed us under the terms of the treaty, to wit, 68 ships, while Great Britain will have 3 out of every 5 of her allowance, or 119 ships, and Japan will have all but 7 of her allowance in modern ships, or 156 ships.

Our Navy has steadily decreased in strength so far as relates to the other naval powers since the time of the convening of the Washington conference, and while we have added very few ships since that time, and have not taken advantage of the full allowances permitted us under the terms of the London treaty, Great Britain and Japan have gone ahead, as they had a perfect right to do under the treaty, and have greatly strengthened their navies. At the present time we are far behind our ratio with Great Britain, and instead of being on the London treaty ratio of 5–3¼ with Japan are in presently available ships on a footing of practical equality with her. The security which we are permitted to enjoy under the terms of the treaties and the world balance of naval armaments we are giving up.

So far as the expenditures for new ships are concerned we have not spent a sufficient amount of money annually since the time of the Washington conference by more than one-half to replace when obsolete even the incomplete and unbalanced navy that we now have.

It is difficult to get the people of this country and the Congress itself to understand that a navy does not last indefinitely, and that to keep it up, as to keep up the rolling stock of a railroad company, its component parts, when used up, must be replaced.

Granted that the extreme useful life of any combatant vessel of the Navy is 20 years, and in certain classes of ships the useful life is considerably less than 20 years, it follows that if that Navy is to be kept up every one of its ships must be replaced within that time. The alternative would be to carry along as we are now carrying along a lot of ships which are obsolete, and which, while still of some service, are extremely expensive to keep up and are entirely outclassed for military purposes by the modern ships of other navies.

If we are to build up and keep up for a period of 20 years a modern treaty navy by replacing ships as they become obsolete, we must spend annually for new construction, $96,000,000. To keep up by replacement our present unbalanced Navy, cutting down in all categories where we at present have a greater tonnage than permitted by treaties, and not building up in those categories in which we are deficient, would cost us approximately $87,000,000 annually for new construction. It would therefore cost us but eight or nine million dollars more per year to build up and keep up by replacement a treaty navy than merely to replace our present unbalanced navy. For the past 10 years we have appropriated for this purpose an average of less than $40,000,000 a year.

It surely can not be contended that independently of the other naval powers we should cut down our Navy below its present strength, when its present strength is below the treaty ratios, and I assume that everyone will appreciate that it can not be kept up to its present strength unless its ships, when they become obsolete, are replaced.

Assuming, then, that it is our intention at least to keep up our present naval strength, all that we need to do to attain the full security allowed us by the treaty is to spend an average of between eight and nine million dollars more annually, for 20 years, than we would otherwise spend.

As a matter of fact, the only new ships that will have to be built, over and above the ships of our present Navy to be replaced, are two aircraft carriers and seven cruisers.

The purpose of the bill now before us is to authorize the President of the United States to build our Navy up to the full strength permitted by the Washington and London disarmament treaties now in effect. The authorization is a blanket one, and no time limit is specified within which the building must be undertaken or completed. The bill authorizes the necessary appropriations to carry out the program.

If on account of treaties that may subsequently be entered into any further reduction is brought about in naval armament, and at the time under the authorization in this bill we happen to be building ships that would bring us over our amended treaty allowance, by the terms of the bill the President is authorized to discontinue such construction.

In view of the fact, however, that our Navy is in nearly all categories of ships very much below the present treaty allowances, in modern or underage ships, there is very little probability that the clause in the bill whereby the President is authorized to stop construction will ever be used, and that we shall have to scrap any ships in process of building. It is true that the bill is merely an authorization bill and, of course, coming as it does from a legislative and not an appropriation committee, it makes no actual appropriations whatever.

The same is true of the Vinson bill, which, I understand, has the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. That bill, however, goes one step farther than this bill, in that it outlines a 10-year building program which meets the best views of the Navy Department for a program to build up to treaty strength. The bill before us does not go as far as the House bill, but it does give the authorization to build the ships necessary to bring us up to the limits of the Washington and London naval treaties and for the appropriations therefor, without which authorizations no money may be appropriated for the building of such ships.

Its passage will enable the Bureau of the Budget in submitting its annual recommendations for the allocation of expenditures of the Government to take into consideration and to provide for the needs of the Navy for new construction which, under existing law, without congressional authorization it can not do. It will lead or should lead to a well-considered program for the replacement of existing ships of the Navy when they shall have become obsolete, and for rounding out the Navy by the addition of the few vessels necessary to bring us up to treaty strength, which do not come under the head of replacements.

In the case of every ship to be built the Congress will have to take further action before the necessary appropriations are made.

Without the authorization of this bill or of some similar bill we shall next year face the same situation that we faced last year and that confronts us now—the impossibility of appropriating for any new construction for our rapidly depreciating Navy.

Mr. President, I have frequently been asked what will be the cost to the Government of the enactment of this legislation. That cost would depend entirely upon whether it were found necessary to build all the ships permitted by the treaties and upon the length of time within which the program would be completed.

The time element affects the cost, because each year a certain number of ships become obsolete and are due for replacement. The cost grows as the replacements grow.

If we build up our Navy to full treaty strength by the end of the treaty on the 31st of December, 1936, it will cost us $786,055,796. This figure includes the cost of completing the ships now building, the ships now authorized, the modernization of all of the battleships, and the completion of 118 new vessels.

If the plan suggested by the Navy Department is followed for a 10-year building program, the total cost to bring the Navy up to treaty strength by 1942 would be $988,705,906, including the completion of 146 new vessels.

If the Navy is not built up to full treaty strength for 20 years, it will be necessary for all the combatant ships of the Navy to be replaced, and a few of the destroyers and submarines will have to be replaced twice, as their effective life is less than 20 years. The estimated cost over a 20-year period is $1,925,473,500.

Some question as to these figures may be raised because the statement has been made that the Navy plan as embodied in the Vinson bill would cost but $616,000,000. The discrepancy appears because those figures did not include the completion of the ships now building, the modernization of the battleships, certain planes for the carriers already authorized, the building of any ships already authorized, or the replacement of submarines that become overage after 1936.

Other than for these differences, the figures for a 10-year program under both bills are the same. I understand that the House bill as approved by the committee included the provisions of Senate bill 51 substantially as they appear in that bill.

Should this bill become a law, and should construction under the bill be started under appropriations in the 1934 appropriation bill, it is doubtful if any of the ships to be constructed would get into commission before the expiration of the treaty in 1936. Until that time we shall have to carry along with the rapidly deteriorating Navy that we now have, plus the few ships now building which would come into commission.

My belief is that the effect of the passage of this bill on the conference now being held at Geneva will be to strengthen the hands of the American delegates and to indicate to the other powers represented at the conference that we really mean what we say when we talk about parity with any other naval power and when we insist that certain ratios be maintained. Our claim that we must have parity with Great Britain and a given ratio with Japan loses all force when, though given by treaty the right to do so, we take no steps to exercise that right. We are rapidly becoming not one of the two great and equal naval powers of the world but a poor and trailing third naval power.

The passage of this bill will further serve notice to the other powers that the United States intends to keep up a proportionate degree of preparedness with the rest of the world, and that if other nations insist on keeping up to the full allowances granted them by treaties, the United States will do the same.

Mr. President, let there be no question about what, in the opinion of its advocates, will happen after this bill has been enacted by the Congress.

The bill will very surely, in my opinion, lead to the building up of our Navy to the ratio strength of the London treaty within a reasonable period of years. It is no move for a paper navy, but will, in the belief of its advocates, lead to the actual building of ships. It will not add one dollar to the appropriations for next year, and will in no way interfere with the balancing of the Budget for that year. Whether it will later be necessary to build up to the full allowances of the London treaty will depend upon the future action of the other naval powers; and if they insist on keeping up to their full allowance, we can better than they afford to do as much ourselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the word "vessels," to strike out the words "in the manner and to the extent" and to insert "within the limits," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the limitations prescribed by the treaty for the limitation of naval armament, signed at Washington on February 6, 1922, and the treaty for the limitation and reduction of naval armament, signed at London on April 22, 1930, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to build up the naval armament of the United States to the strength permitted by said treaties. Such building up shall be accomplished by new construction, replacement of overage vessels, and alterations in and conversion of existing vessels, within the limits authorized by said treaties, and appropriations for the purposes herein designated are hereby authorized to be made.

SEC. 2. In the event of an international agreement for the further limitation of naval armament, to which the United States is signatory, the President is hereby authorized and empowered to suspend in whole or in part the naval construction authorized by this act in order to bring the naval armament of the United States within the limitations so agreed upon.

REDUCTIONS IN APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I received a copy of a statement supposed to be given out by the Treasury Department, and I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT SHOWING THE EFFECT ON THE CUSTOMS SERVICE OF THE M'KELLER RESOLUTION WHICH PROPOSES A GENERAL CUT OF 10 PER CENT IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The estimated appropriation for the Customs Service for the fiscal year 1933, as passed by the House of Representatives, amounts to $22,700,000.

If a 10 per cent reduction ($2,270,000) is made as contemplated by the McKellar resolution, found on page 8375, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 18, 1932, it will be necessary to abolish the following-named districts and ports and consolidate other districts, resulting in the dismissal of 213 employees. In addition, it will be necessary to reduce the general personnel throughout the Customs Service to the extent of 875 employees, thereby causing a total of 1,088 employees to be dropped from the rolls on July 1.

Districts to be abolished

Indiana		$18,480
Iowa		12,800
Colorado		19,320
Utah and Nevada		8,100
Kentucky		16,700
Tennessee		20,900
Nebraska		15,140
St. Louis, Mo. (abolish all ports in district except St. Louis)		39,340
Duluth, Minn. (place under Minneapolis):
Abolish—
1 collector	$4,600
1 assistant collector	3,900
1 liquidator	2,600
1 clerk	2,500
		13,600
Pittsburgh, Pa. (place under Philadelphia):
Abolish—
1 collector	$5,400
1 deputy collector	2,700
1 disbursing clerk	2,200
1 clerk	2,500
1 appraiser	4,600
1 clerk	1,700
		$19,100
San Diego, Calif. (place under Los Angeles):
Abolish—
1 collector	4,600
1 assistant collector	3,500
1 liquidator	1,900
1 clerk	2,500
		12,500
Providence, R. I. (place under Boston):
Abolish—
1 collector	5,400
1 assistant collector	3,600
1 liquidator	2,600
2 inspectors	4,200
1 clerk	2,100
1 clerk	1,700
Abolish port of Newport, R. I.	4,400
		24,000
Rochester, N. Y. (place under Buffalo):
Abolish—
1 collector	5,400
1 assistant collector	4,000
1 liquidator	3,100
Abolish ports of—
Utica	4,700
Syracuse	6,300
		23,500
Milwaukee, Wis. (place under Chicago):
Abolish—
1 collector	5,400
1 assistant collector	3,500
1 liquidator	2,300
		11,200
Mobile, Ala. (place under New Orleans):
Abolish—
1 collector	5,200
1 assistant collector	3,600
1 clerk	2,400
1 clerk	2,100
2 inspectors	4,200
Abolish all subports—
Birmingham	4,500
Gulfport	4,600
Pascagoula	2,096
Biloxi	2,000
		30,696
Bridgeport, Conn. (place under New York):
Abolish—
1 collector	4,600
1 assistan collector	3,500
1 clerk	2,600
1 clerk-stenographer	1,700
Abolish port of Hartford	11,900
		24,300
Ohio:
Abolish ports of—
Akron	8,600
Columbus	7,000
Dayton	6,600
Cincinnati	22,500
Toledo	9,460
		54,160
Wilmington, N. C. (place under Norfolk):
Abolish—
1 collector	4,800
1 assistant collector	3,600
Abolish port of Charlotte	540
		8,940
Charleston, S. C. (place under Georgia):
Abolish—
1 collector	3,200
1 assistant collector	3,200
1 clerk	1,900
		8,300
Galveston, Tex.: Abolish port of Dallas		11,880
San Antonio, Tex.: Abolish port of Fort Worth		2,400
Baltimore, Md.: Abolish port of Georgetown		41,080
Georgia: Abolish port of Atlanta		9,100
Chicago, Ill.: Abolish port of Peoria		4,400
Virginia:
Abolish ports of—
Alexandria	1,140
Richmond	13,400
		14,540

New York, N. Y.: Abolish port of Albany		$16,600
Massachusetts:
Abolish ports of—
Worcester	$7,300
Springfield	12,300
Lawrence	7,400
		27,000
Michigan: Abolish port of Grand Rapids		5,400
Washington: Abolish port of Spokane		7,200
		520,676

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it is really almost impossible to think that the Treasury Department would get out a statement like this. In the first place, the Treasury Department has no more right to abolish the offices mentioned and discharge the employees referred to, unless it is directed to do so by the Congress, than it has a right to create new offices without the direction of the Congress. The appropriation bill referred to in the statement has not been passed upon even by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, it has not been passed upon by the Committee on Appropriations itself, or by the Senate, and the reductions to be made may not affect the items in the Customs Service at all.

In my judgment, there can be but one possible reason for the department sending out this propaganda. I have no doubt it is sent out at public expense. I have no doubt men employed in the department are used to get these data out. I have no doubt it is all done at public expense. And what for? Better to carry on the Government? Not at all. It is to prevent any cuts in the appropriations that go to the Treasury Department. In my judgment, it is one of the most absolutely indefensible things the department could do.

If the Secretary of the Treasury conceives that he has a right to curtail such bureaus and such divisions of his department as he sees fit to, without any regard to the Congress, then a paper like this might be sent out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. When everybody knows that the department can not abolish offices, bureaus, and functions of the Government at will—and it seems to me it is time for the departments to be learning that fact—I want to say that if I were President of the United States I would not hesitate a moment to dismiss any Cabinet officer who would permit a thing like that to be done. I am calling it to the attention of the President and of the country. It ought not to be done. It is an unseemly thing. It is showing disrespect to the Congress of the United States itself, whose power and duty it is to say what bureaus and divisions and departments and services shall be continued or not continued.

Instead of having cooperation in order to bring about a lessening of the expenditures of the Government, what do we find? We find that the several heads of the departments who have already been before our committee are fighting any reduction that is proposed; it is not confined to the Treasury Department. To my mind, of all the propaganda that has been sent out by any department, the most indefensible is the propaganda from which I have read in part, and which I sent to the desk to be put into the RECORD.

I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator has largely answered the question I was about to ask. I only ask him this: If Andrew Jackson, or Grover Cleveland, or Theodore Roosevelt were President of the United States and advocating a program of economy, and found the members of his Cabinet resisting it all along the line, what, in the Senator's judgment, would happen?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not the slightest doubt that if any one of the Presidents named had found that the members of his Cabinet were fighting a proposed reduction in expenditures, when he, the President, was asking for economy, he would dismiss any man in his Cabinet who was found thus acting.

What do we find? We find the President giving out statements almost daily in favor of economy, and we find Secretary Stimson and Secretary Mills and Secretary Wilbur and Secretary Lamont and all the other Secretaries whose departments are concerned in these appropriations appearing before the Committee on Appropriations and testifying against any reductions in their departments.

In the next place, we find these very gentlemen trying to make it appear that the Congress is not bent upon reducing expenditures but is trying to get rid of employees of the Government. Then we find the same members of the President's Cabinet sending out all kinds of propaganda, at the expense of the American people, not only protesting against the cuts but stating facts which can not be substantiated.

There never was a suggestion of the abolishment of the particular functions of the Treasury Department referred to in the article which has just been read until Secretary Mills appeared before our committee a week ago last Friday and, of his own accord, suggested himself that that was the way to save, that these offices ought to be abolished. The very next day he gave out a statement that the purpose of my resolution was to abolish these offices.

Nothing could possibly fe farther from the fact than that statement by the Secretary. I think it is time that the people were waking up to the truth in this matter, men talking about economy, and then using every effort within their power to prevent economy in Government expenditures.

If the Treasury Department has not yet learned that there is an enormous deficit in the revenues of the Government, it is high time it was making itself acquainted with that fact.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am informed that there are at least several Senators who desire to discuss the pending bill, but who are not prepared to go forward to-day, and since, in addition to that, some of the committees of the Senate are very busy holding hearings, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, May 5, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 4, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that Thou art a Heavenly Father who abides with us to bring comfort out of discomfort and peace out of disquiet; to put the gleam in the shadow and to make us feel that it is altogether worth while to live. We bless Thee for the calm, the rest, and the soul contentment which Thou art so willing to give and ready to bestow. With these blessings strife ceases, good will comes in, competition gives way to cooperation, and we study how to make a brighter day and better country. Heavenly Father, grant these mercies. Fill us with encouragement and kindly cheer, and make us a help to others. The Lord send His blessings upon this assembly like an impartial sunlight. Do Thou be the guide of every pathway, the guest of every fireside, the physician of every family, and the divine comforter of all. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 24. Concurrent resolution thanking the Governor of the State of Virginia for the statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1047. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the Historical Society of Montana, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was in use on the gunboat, No. 9, Helena;

S. 2396. An act to amend section 11 of the act approved February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. 676), relating to the admission into the Union of the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington; and

S. 3908. To amend the act entitled "An act to regulate navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters," approved February 8, 1895.

HELEN GLYNN

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 207

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Helen Glynn, dependent daughter of Theresa C. Glynn, late an employee of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to six months' compensation of said Theresa C. Glynn, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said Theresa C. Glynn.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO SIT DURING TO-DAY'S SESSION OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit to-day during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT AS ENSIGNS IN THE LINE OF THE NAVY OF ALL MIDSHIPMEN WHO GRADUATE FROM THE NAVAL ACADEMY IN 1932

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8033), providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who will graduate from the Naval Academy in 1932, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8083) providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy in 1932, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 7.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, inserting a comma after the figures 1932, and add thereto the following: "and at least 50 per cent of all graduates in subsequent years"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment, after the word "Academy" and before the comma, insert the following: "in 1932"; and the Senate agree to the same.

CARL VINSON,
J. V. MCCLINTIC,
FRED A. BRITTEN,
GEORGE P. DARROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

FREDERICK HALE,
TASKER L. ODDIE,
PARK TRAMMELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8083) providing for the appointment as ensigns in the line of the Navy of all midshipmen who graduate from the Naval Academy in 1932, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On No. 1: The Senate amendment made provision for the commissioning of not only all graduates from the Naval Academy in the class of 1932 but also of all graduates in subsequent classes. The amendment agreed upon by the committee of conference retains the provision of the House bill for the commissioning as ensigns of all graduates of the 1932 class, and further provides for the commissioning of at least 50 per cent of the graduates in subsequent classes.

On No. 2: By the text of the House bill the excess number of officers temporarily created by the bill over the number authorized by law could be carried as such until 1936. As agreed to by the committee of conference, such excess may be carried beyond the year 1936 should the attrition in the service due to deaths, resignations, dismissals, etc., not bring the strength down to that now authorized by law by the end of the year 1936.

On Nos. 3 and 4: These amendments of the Senate were inserted to clarify the language of the bill and to insure that all excess officers in the Navy be carried in the grade of ensign, except these few officers now carried as extra numbers and previously authorized by law.

On No. 5: The text agreed upon insures that no officer now in the naval service will be promoted to a higher rank by reason of the temporary increase in the line strength of the Navy as authorized by the bill.

On No. 6: Section 2 of the bill, as inserted by the Senate and agreed to by the committee of conference, provides a 2-year probationary period for midshipmen hereafter commissioned ensigns, during which period their commissions are revocable under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may presribe. The section provides a means by which those who demonstrate their fitness as officers in actual service may be retained permanently, and also directs the procedure by which the final precedence of officers appointed under this act shall be determined, which permits same to be determined by taking into consideration the class standing at the academy, the proficiency as officers in actual service, together with the marks made on a final competitive examination of the men involved.

On No. 7: The amendment of the Senate provided hereafter for fewer new appointments to the Naval Academy as a means of eventually reducing the line strength to that authorized by law. The committee of conference has effected a means therefor as provided in amendment No. 1, i. e., by providing for the commissioning of 50 per cent of the graduates of the classes subsequent to the class of 1932.

On No. 8: The Senate amended the title of the bill to conform to its amendments providing for the commissioning of all graduates after 1932; the committee on conference has corrected same to conform to the text as agreed upon; i. e., commissioning all of the graduates of the class of 1932.

CARL VINSON,
J. V. MCCLINTIC,
FRED A. BRITTEN,
GEORGE P. DARROW,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I will make a brief statement and then probably it will not be necessary for the gentleman from Wisconsin to propound his inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope so.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, what this conference report does is to give commissions to all midshipmen who graduate this year. They go to the fleet for a probationary period of two years. During that length of time the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to weed out approximately 50 per cent of the number that get their commissions in June. Then it is provided that of future classes only 50 per cent will receive commissions. After that 50 per cent goes to the fleet the Secretary is still authorized to continue to cull out midshipmen who are with the fleet. It retains the number of midshipmen to three, as is now carried in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will those who are plucked to the extent of 50 per cent receive a year's salary on their discharge?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. They will receive $720 for one year's pay. Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up a privileged resolution and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 205

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 11051, a bill to provide for the leasing and other utilization of the Muscle Shoals properties in the interest of national defense and of agriculture, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Military Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, this is one rule that has been brought in by the Committee on Rules that I do not think will be subject to the criticism that it is a gag rule.

As you have heard the rule read, gentlemen, it provides for two hours of general debate upon the merits of the bill, the debate to be confined to the provisions of the bill, and then for its consideration under the 5-minute rule under the general rules of the House.

I desire to state that although the rule itself contains the usual provision that time during general debate shall be controlled by the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the committee, it has been arranged—and that arrangement will be carried into effect—that the chairman of the committee will have control of the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], ranking minority member of the committee, who is opposed to the bill, will have control of the time in opposition to the bill.

Now, gentlemen, I am not going to undertake, in the brief presentation I am making of this rule, to argue the merits of this bill. We have had this proposition before the Congress for a great many years, and I think it may be fairly stated that the failure of the Congress to act upon this legislation—taken in connection with the activities of the Executive—is an indictment, a very serious indictment, against the capacity of Congress to legislate upon a great question of this importance. This bill has been before Congress in one phase or another many times. Twice it has passed the Congress of the United States, and it has been twice vetoed by the Executive because of matters involving, in large measure I understand, the question of the incorporation in those bills of some phase of Government operation of those plants.

I trust the committee and the House, after full consideration of the merits of this measure, will pass it without any substantial amendment. The bill is the result of long and serious consideration by the members of the Committee on Military Affairs. Exhaustive hearings were held upon it, every possible phase of it was fully and carefully considered by the committee and, in my opinion, it is the best bill that has ever been presented to the House for its consideration with reference to Muscle Shoals. The chairman of the committee and other members who favor it will give you a full explanation of the details, and I am not going to undertake to go into that.

I am very happy we have reached a stage in our program when we can consider this bill upon its merits, and I think the program for the day is that we shall conclude the consideration of this bill and take final action upon it before we adjourn this evening. There was no arrangement made with respect to time on the rule, but I presume we will use the ordinary time, 30 minutes on the side, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] will control the time on the other side.

I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, while Muscle Shoals is located in my district, each of you have the same interest in it that I have. To begin with I want you to know that this bill provides economy for the Government in that it will save the $82,000 being spent every year for keeping the nitrate plants in a stand-by condition. The enactment of this bill also means the reduction of the farmers' fertilizer bill in every section of this country from 33 per cent to 50 per cent. [Applause.] It will also give employment to thousands of those who are now unemployed. Each of you is interested in the success of agriculture. It is the basic industry. When it succeeds all business succeeds; when it fails all business lags. This is not a power proposition but a fertilizer proposition and national defense. The power plant is being operated at only part capacity, and selling the power at a very low rate it is making only operation, maintenance, and depreciation charges. If it is operated to its fullest capacity, with the sale of power even at a low rate, it would provide a revenue more than sufficient to pay the salaries of the board and all expenses necessary for the operation of the board.

You will see on this photograph a picture of nitrate plant No. 2. Some selfish interests have claimed this plant is obsolete. Such is not a fact. It uses the cyanamide process, one of the best processes for the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen. This has been demonstrated in Germany and other European countries and also at Niagara Falls, in Canada. I have seen that plant in operation. The commanding officer at this plant testified before the committee that it could be put in operation in 60 days' time.

The hearings which have been held before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House on various bills since this plant was completed prove conclusively that this plant is not obsolete. There have been some improvements in the art since this plant was constructed which can easily be added. It is really the best process for the fixation of nitrate where you have cheap power, all the raw material, limestone, coke, coal, phosphate rock, as exists in close proximity to Muscle Shoals, and in inexhaustible quantities. It has been often proven and not denied that fertilizer can be made at Muscle

Shoals for one-third to one-half less than existing prices. [Applause.]

It costs the Government $82,000 per year to keep this plant in a stand-by condition. This amount will be saved if this bill is enacted into law.

I call your attention to that photograph of the Wilson Dam and the hydroelectric power plant which were constructed by the Government for the purpose of generating power with which to operate the nitrate plant. This hydroelectric development is now, and has been since it was completed, operated by the Government, not for the benefit of the farmers in the production of cheap fertilizer but solely for the benefit of the power companies, who have obtained the power for about 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. No one has received a reduction of power rates from the power companies by reason of the operation of this development.

This bill authorizes the President to appoint a board of three, with the approval of the Senate. The board is authorized, with the approval of the President, to lease the nitrate plants and the Waco quarry and all buildings and equipment in connection therewith for a period of 50 years from the date of approval of this act. It also authorizes the board to operate the hydroelectric development and sell the power at a fair rate to the lessee for the operation of the nitrate plants for the manufacture of fertilizer and phosphoric acid. The amounts required to be produced by the lessee are fixed and stipulated in the bill. I have not the time to go into the same in detail. That will be fully explained by members of the committee. It is also provided that no part of the aforementioned properties shall be leased or subleased to any power-distributing company or to any holding company or other company affiliated or allied with any power-distributing company. [Applause.] Under the provisions of this bill the power is sold at the switchboard at the power plant. Such power as is not needed by the lessee for the manufacture of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients will be sold or disposed of by the board at the switchboard on an equitable basis—municipalities, counties, States, and the manufacturers of chemical products to have preference in the order named. Any such power sold to others than those above mentioned shall be subject to recall, after reasonable notice not exceeding 18 months, for the production of fertilizer and/or fertilizer ingredients, or for the use of municipalities, counties, States, or for the manufacture of chemical products; the fertilizer to be sold at not exceeding 10 per cent over and above the cost of production, giving farmers and farm organizations preferential rights in the purchase of same. This would result in a great reduction in the price of fertilizer not only in that section of the country but over the entire country.

It has been proven before the Military Committee that whatever price fertilizer was sold at Muscle Shoals would control the price of all fertilizer sold in this country. This question should have been settled years ago and these plants operated for the purpose for which they were built—that is, for the cheapening of fertilizer and for national defense. If the plants are not operated in peace times, they will rust out and become obsolescent and be of no benefit to national defense in the event of war.

You hear some claim that these plants should not be maintained for national-defense purposes, for the reason that explosives can be purchased by the Government cheaper than they can be produced at this plant. This is not true. In the event of war the fact that the Government owns a munition plant would enable the Government, if it desires to do so, to purchase explosives cheaper by reason of having this plant. Otherwise the munition makers would charge our Government such prices as they deem proper and profiteer, as was done during the last war. [Applause.]

You will hear much discussion in regard to Government operation. The Government is now operating the power plant for the benefit of the power companies, and will continue to do so unless this bill is enacted into law. The same organization that is operating the power plant for the Government now under the direction of the Chief of Engineers can and no doubt will continue to operate the same for the board provided for in this measure. The profit for the operation of the power plant does not exceed the cost of operation, maintenance, and depreciation of the power development.

Before the World War Germany depended on the importation of Chilean nitrates; after the World War ended Germany converted her nitrogen plants into the manufacture of fertilizers. Some were operated by the Government and some by private capital. The operation has been so successful that Germany is no longer importing nitrogen from Chile, and has not only supplied the German farmer with fertilizer but has become a large exporter of fertilizer. We are importing some fertilizer from Germany at this time. What Germany has done should have been done with these plants immediately after the war, but instead selfish interest has prevented the operation of these plants, and the poor American farmer continues to pay tribute to the Chilean Government. He not only pays a high price for the Chilean nitrates but export duty to the Chilean Government together with a high ocean freight rate for five or six thousand miles. And when he gets the sodium nitrate it only contains about 15 per cent nitrogen and the balance 85 per cent a filler, while concentrated fertilizer at Muscle Shoals, as provided in this bill, will be in a concentrated form containing from 40 to 60 per cent plant food, so you will see the economy in transportation and use of the same.

There was imported into this country from Chile 564,940 tons of sodium nitrate during the year 1930, with a declared value of $21,260,091; and 548,305 tons in 1931, with a declared value of $21,011,663. The American farmers have been paying about $12 export tax to the Chilean Government until recent reductions have been made on this tax.

We hear much about the Government operation of Muscle Shoals, or any operation of the same for the manufacture of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients as being in competition with private industry, which will really only be in competition with the Chilean nitrate industry, a foreign monopoly. [Applause.] The only propaganda that we are receiving through the mail in regard to this legislation is from the National Fertilizer Association. The fertilizer factories of this country buy their nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash and mix the fertilizer and sell it to the farmers; in other words, they are only in the mixing business.

Mr. Charles J. Brand, who is executive secretary and treasurer of the National Fertilizer Association, testified at one time before the Military Affairs Committee of the House that his opposition to the operation of Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of fertilizer was due to the fact that with a Government subsidy at that place fertilizer would be produced cheaper. That is exactly what Congress intended should happen when provision was made in the national defense act in 1916 for this development. While the plants were built during the war, they are not what is commonly known as war plants. The Wilson Dam and power house was constructed after the World War ended. This development was not only intended for national defense but for the benefit of agriculture, hence has not and will not be disposed of by the Government. The war plants have been dismantled.

Congress would not have appropriated this large sum of about $130,000,000 for the building of these fertilizer plants and power development had the law not provided that it should be used in peace times to cheapen fertilizer for the benefit of agriculture. The fertility of the soil is being depleted by continued cultivation, until to-day the farmers in almost all sections of the country are forced to use fertilizer to produce their crops.

The leasing provisions of this bill are so liberal that I feel very confident that the President will be able to secure a lease. The Government alternative would no doubt aid in securing a lease. If there should be Government operation it would be discontinued under the same conditions that would authorize the discontinuance by the lessee. The leasing provisions are far more liberal than in the bill which was passed during the last session of Congress and vetoed by the President. There is no provision in the bill for the building of transmission lines. Power will be sold at the switchboard.

These plants should have been placed in operation soon after they were completed; and, if they had been, agriculture would have been in a far better condition than it is at this time. Do not let the fear of Government operation frighten anyone, because it does not amount to competition with private capital, but, as I have said, with the Chilean nitrate industry—a foreign monopoly. [Applause.]

Let us pass this bill and put an end to the long controversy in the Congress over Muscle Shoals. The committee has given this bill months of consideration, and the same has the indorsement of the farmers and farm organizations; and all who are interested in agriculture, in granting farm relief, in stopping some of the Government expenses at Muscle Shoals, and giving employment to thousands of unemployed should support this measure enthusiastically. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], this is a liberal rule. It is a rule which brings this bill before the House for consideration, and it is a question whether or not in these days of depression we should burden the Government with an additional expenditure.

Personally, I have voted for every single piece of legislation that has been before this Congress since the war in an effort to dispose of and operate Muscle Shoals, therefore the remarks I make at this time will be thoroughly understood.

The first 13 sections of the bill provide a method whereby the Government holdings at Muscle Shoals may be leased. Section 14 provides that if the properties are not leased within a period of 18 months after the law becomes effective, then that the Government shall operate the properties. In other words, the bill is clearly divisible. The first 13 sections standing alone are not objectionable, provided the committee would consent to extend the time in which a lease might be secured.

If section 14 is struck out when the bill is read for amendment, I feel sure, although without any authority to speak, that the President would not veto the bill. This motion will be made by a member of the committee, and I bespeak for it the support of the House.

Muscle Shoals has been before Congress ever since the war. Our policy toward the project should have been determined years ago. More than $150,000,000 of the people's money have been expended, much of which has been wasted. Of course, the Wilson Dam is the big thing at Muscle Shoals. During the war we constructed two plants for the manufacture of nitrogen, the one using the cyanamide process and the other the Haber or synthetic process. While the cyanamide process is used in some plants at this time, yet I think it is conceded that no new plant would install this process. The perfected Haber process is much superior. Therefore, if the Government operates Muscle Shoals it would start out with two experimental plants—the cyanamide plant, which was operated for a trial run, and the Haber plant, which has never been used. My understanding is that an explosion at the plant, or in some other plant where the Haber process was used, was a deterrent, and no effort was ever made to use this plant. Mr. Mayo, chief engineer for the Ford plants, who appeared before the committee, stated that these plants constructed years ago, even though perfect in their day, would require much alteration to be effective in these days. The Government could not operate as directed in this bill without the expenditure of many millions of dollars in reconditioning, and this money must come out of the Treasury of the United States.

The committee tells us that the enactment of this bill starts the Government on a work that will ultimately cost from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000, and this money must come out of the Treasury of the United States, and no worthwhile manufacture of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals can be accomplished without this expenditure. I am opposed to the Government building any more dams or entering upon any business projects not incident to government at this time.

So far as the manufacture of fertilizer is concerned, the small amount possible at these plants would have no effect on the price of fertilizer throughout the country. It is true that if sold directly to the farmer it might be of some assistance within a radius of 300 miles of the plant. The only effect it would have on agriculture in my State would be to bring into competition more agricultural products, the benefit inuring to those residing in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals.

With practically every fertilizer factory in the country shut down, why should the Federal Government open up another plant, operated by taxpayers' money, in competition with an already overburdened industry?

This House seems so inconsistent of late. For the last five days we have been wrestling with the so-called economy bill in an effort to save $200,000,000. Out of the mess we have a saving of something less than $42,000,000, and let us not forget that at this good hour the Federal Government is spending $5,000 more per minute than it takes in. In other words, the expenditures are about $7,000,000 every 24 hours more than the receipts of revenue. So that during these five days of attempted economy, while we have saved $42,000,000, yet we have just a little more than balanced the Budget for those five days. I give this illustration for the purpose of impressing upon the House the necessity for economy, and as a reason why we should pass no additional legislation that will require additional taxes and revenue, or a greater expense.

If this bill becomes a law, where is the money coming from that is to be used in further developing this project at this time?

We hear much about the creation of new boards, commissions, and bureaus of late. The Government wants to get rid of some of these appendages, yet this bill sets up another board, composed of three members, with a $10,000 salary per annum for each member. In addition to this the board can purchase equipment, employ and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, attorneys, and agents, as it shall deem necessary, without regard to existing law. I am sure that the taxpayers would not vote for any such legislation.

Many sins have been committed in the name of the farmer, and it seems that every time Congress has passed legislation in the name of the farmer, it has done more injury than good. So far as cheap fertilizer at Muscle Shoals is concerned, that is a snare and a delusion at this particular time.

We have these properties. They are in a stand-by condition. Under existing law the Government should be able to realize from the plants the cost of maintenance. No one seriously believes that with credit conditions as they are in the country to-day, with everybody out of work, with no money available for new development, that the Government could hope to get a lease for these properties. On the other hand, if the Government could get a lease, the terms would not be normal, because these are not normal times, and in the end the Government would be the loser. Every principle of business and sound economics requires that no action be taken. If the Congress believes that, as a matter of policy, we must get rid of these properties at once, then pass the first 13 sections of the bill, but for my part I would prefer to leave the whole matter stand "as is" for the present.

The Congress recently passed legislation authorizing Boulder Dam, yet there are comparatively few people in the country who would vote to spend additional money at Boulder Dam at this time, and why should we start upon another venture, the limit of which can only be guessed at?

Section 15 of the bill uses this significant language:

> All appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act are hereby authorized.

The nose of the camel is under the tent, and if this bill becomes a law, every Congress for many years to come can be expected to appropriate large sums of money to carry on at Muscle Shoals. Congress had better quit and go home and the Budget will come nearer balancing itself than it will if we remain here, talk economy, cut off a few thousands here and there, and the very next day open up new channels for taking the taxpayers' money. This bill would have some redeeming features in times of prosperity, and when the Government might indulge in an experiment station, without imposing so heavy a load upon the people, but this is not the time. [Applause.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an article from my home paper, the Washington Democrat, of Washington, Ind., on municipal ownership of electric-lighting plants.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I object to any articles from newspapers going into the RECORD.

Mr. GREENWOOD. This is on the proposition about which I am speaking. On account of the limitation of time, I do not want to read the article, but I want to present the argument adequately in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERHILL. After this I shall object to any other newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of this rule to consider this proposal to operate this great project, Muscle Shoals, which has been before Congress for so many years. The provisions of the rule have already been presented to you. They are very liberal, and will permit free discussion and debate upon this bill, which comes from the Committee on Military Affairs.

My observations here this morning shall be with reference to public ownership of electric power and lighting projects. Others will discuss the subject from the standpoint of fertilizer for the benefit of the American farmer, and that is a feature that is full of merit. The American farmer has been more or less subjected to the price of trust production of nitrates and fertilizer and ingredients of fertilizer from other countries, and our own Nation is subjected also to the monopolistic commercial provisions of production and of purchase of nitrates for war purposes.

This plant was constructed to permit the United States to be self-sustaining with reference to nitrates for military purposes, but now it can well be utilized for the purposes of helping American agriculture.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Rules. Can he enlighten the House of Representatives as to the probable cost to the Government if this bill should pass?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I prefer the gentleman would not question me about that, because the Committee on Military Affairs is more familiar with those things than I am. As I said in the beginning, my observations are to be general. I do not think I could give the gentleman the intelligent answer that he wants.

I am deeply interested in this project of Muscle Shoals from the standpoint of its importance to the Southland for the production of power or electricity for public-service purposes. We are just entering the electrical age. There is enough power to be obtained from our streams to electrically light, heat, and furnish power for not only every home in the cities but, I believe, every home on the farms in the United States. This is not the beginning of a new project. This is a question of a project in which the United States Government has already invested probably $150,000,000, and to spend a million or two more dollars now in order to maintain, preserve, and perpetuate this great property, I think, is a good business proposition, regardless of the condition of the times in which we live. I said we were just entering the great electric age. The municipalities of the Southland can buy the necessary power at wholesale prices and can distribute it from their own switchboard at retail to their own citizens for home-lighting purposes, home-heating purposes, and for power for local industrial concerns.

My home city of Washington, Ind., several years ago bought an antiquated electric-lighting plant. They paid an enormous price for it. Since then it has had to rebuild that plant. The city went to the limit of its bonded indebtedness and could not issue bonds, but a company was willing to furnish the equipment of turbine dynamos on an installment plan by which it could pay for this equipment at $1,000 a month. The city paid off the bonds on the plant, and it also paid off the installment payments, until to-day it owns the plant completely. It has constructed the building in which it is installed and has made enough profit out of that plant at one of the lowest rates in the State of Indiana to pay off the total bonded indebtedness of the city, including the bonds on the city power plant, the city park, and the city hall. In addition, the city has accumulated a surplus fund of $70,000.

A few months ago there was loaned out of the light fund $10,000 or more to a local manufacturing plant that could not obtain credit at the local banks because of the depression. The city took preferred stock or a lien on the plant and preserved and enlarged this plant which employs many wage earners in this city. In addition, the city contributed more than $10,000 to the unemployment fund, and employed men through the winter to clean up the streets and alleys and to cut out the ditches and remove obstacles that were unsightly, so as to make the city more beautiful and healthful. That has been done on one of the lowest municipal rates in the State of Indiana. The mayor of the city, Hon. John W. McCarty, who has been the mayor for 20 years—and we think we have one of the best mayors that ever served a city—took his corporation counsel and went to Indianapolis to the utility board and asked for a lower rate. That board told the mayor that the city of Washington already had one of the lowest rates in the State of Indiana and that the board could not afford to make this reduction because comparatively to privately owned plants it would not be a good precedent. The rate was far below privately owned plants. The board said that our rate was already too low, but the mayor insisted upon lowering the rate to 7 cents per kilowatt-hour to local users for electric-lighting purposes, with a minimum charge of 50 cents, with a rate from 2½ cents down to 1.4 cents per kilowatt-hour, which is a low rate in my State.

When they were refused the right to lower the rate, my mayor and the corporation counsel consulted, and they told the State board they were going to lower this rate anyway, because they were getting a fair return on the investment and did not want to overcharge patrons, and the city was going to lower the rate; if there was any court procedure filed, the utility board could go into court themselves. Then the utility board made the lower rate which was asked.

That is the record of a small plant in Indiana, in a part of the country where the great Insull utilities, supposed to be a model of private-organization management, are now in the hands of a receiver because of the water-logged condition and overcapitalization of those utilities.

I am citing this to show you what the municipalities of the Southland within reach of Muscle Shoals can do. I also want to add as a further argument that before this surplus had accumulated in the electric-lighting fund our municipal tax rate was $1.14 per $100 on tangible property. That rate was lowered to a rate of 47 cents, and the coming year they propose to eliminate the total municipal-taxing rate. If a small power plant in Indiana, with an investment of probably $150,000, with this income, at the low rate of service which earns 7.6 per cent upon an investment of a million dollars, what can this great United States Government do for the cities of the Southland in operating Muscle Shoals?

I am not in favor of the Government owning all kinds of industries or going into new business, but any public utility is especially adapted to Government ownership. Where water, gas, and light are being furnished to an entire community and are a monopoly in themselves, they are particularly adapted to municipal or Government ownership.

I am in favor of it because water power is a natural resource, belonging to the whole people, and it should be utilized to the advantage of the people. [Applause.]

The United States Government years ago should have hired the best hydroelectric engineers in the world and put them in charge of Muscle Shoals, in order to produce nitrates that will help the American farmer and furnish power and electric energy for the municipalities. [Applause.]

[From the Washington (Ind.) Democrat]

INDIANA CITY, OUT OF DEBT, HAS LOWEST TAX RATE IN STATE

Sam J. Shelton, staff correspondent of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, was a visitor in Washington last week collecting data concerning Washington's electric-light plant, the city's ability to pay off all of its bonded indebtedness and have the lowest city tax rate in all Indiana.

Here is the publicity he gave Washington as a result of his investigation, the story appearing in Sunday's Post-Dispatch:

"When the lights are turned on in Washington, Ind., the citizens are helping to pay their taxes; yet the electric rate is relatively low.

"Through good fortune in management the city's experiment in ownership and operation of its light plant has turned out well and becomes a 'shining example.' The project serves a city population of 9,070 and several thousand suburban.

"John W. McCarty, mayor for some 17 years and now in his fifth 4-year term, reviewed for the Post-Dispatch the outstanding accomplishments of this municipal enterprise:

"The city is out of debt.

"There is a surplus of about $70,000 in the light fund.

"There was recently transferred to the general-revenue fund $45,000, making a total of about $176,000 supplied for that purpose over a period of years.

"A reduction in the city tax rate for 1931 was announced. The rate is 49 cents, compared with $1.12 last year.

"Last November the city called and paid off $57,000 of light-plant bonds, some of which would not have matured for 20 years.

"TO DOUBLE ITS SIZE

"The capacity of the plant will be increased 100 per cent this year to take care of the rapid growth of industries using the cheap power, and, although the cost of additions will be over $70,000, the city will not have to issue bonds.

"The city purchased the local street railway out of light-plant revenue and operates it at a 5-cent fare.

"The general electric rate applying to residential and commercial lighting starts at 7 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 50 kilowatts and scales downward to 4 cents for all over 1,000 kilowatt-hours in a month. Most of the homes do not consume more than 50 kilowatt-hours a month, and so pay the maximum rate, which, Mayor McCarty says, compares with an average rate of about 10 cents in Indiana cities where the light plants are privately owned.

"Many small homes, however, pay only the minimum charge of 50 cents a month, which compares with minimum charges of $1.60 for water and $1.25 for gas, both supplied by privately owned plants.

"A low domestic heating rate encourages the use of electricity for cooking. There are about 600 electric ranges in use, equipping approximately one-third of the homes. The rate starts at 2½ cents and goes down to 2 cents with a 5 per cent discount for prompt payment. The minimum charge is $1.50 a month.

"'SMALL POWER' RATES

"The 'small power' rate starts at 3½ cents and reduces to 2 cents, and the industrial rate ranges from 2 cents down to 1.4 cents. Schools, churches, hospitals, and libraries are charged 5 cents. For nine years the plant has been managed by James P. Adkins whose earlier experience was with Insull electric utilities, coming here in 1922 when the present plant was being constructed to replace antiquated equipment. Adkins has helped to bring about the highly efficient operation which has made possible the low rates and the handsome surpluses.

"A few years ago Adkins decided it would be just as profitable for a municipal utility to maintain an attractive store and offices as for a private utility. Mayor McCarty supported this view and the city council authorized the purchase of a building on the principal business street for $14,000. It was remodeled at a cost of about $2,000. To-day the front part is a glistening salesroom where electric ranges, refrigerators, and other appliances are displayed and sold, and in the back are the offices for the manager and his clerical assistants.

"Adkins speaks highly of the services rendered the plant by Mayor McCarty. Taking great pride in the success of the plant and in being able to provide funds for public improvements out of its surplus revenues, the mayor has insisted throughout his long service in office upon highly efficient and businesslike management. This is the bulwark that has stood against political meddling which so often interferes with the success of municipal ownership and operation of utilities.

"RETAINING AN INDUSTRY

"An unusual activity, made possible by the surplus of the light plant, was undertaken by the city last year. A shirt factory employing about 300 persons announced its intention to move to another city which had offered inducements. This would have been a severe blow to the city. Under Mayor McCarty's leadership the city council appropriated $20,000 to buy 6 per cent preferred stock in the manufacturing company on the condition that additional funds were raised to put up a new plant, increasing the capacity. This plan was carried through, the new factory building which cost about $90,000 is now in operation, and the number of employees has been increased to 500. This factory pays the light plant about $8,000 a year for electricity.

"The venture of Washington into the utility business was launched in 1900. The electric plant then serving the city was purchased from a local corporation for $83,291. Mayor McCarty says it was an exorbitant price, several times the value of the property. Under the circumstances the operation was an uncertain struggle for a number of years.

"In the first eight years of McCarty's service as mayor the city paid off $61,000 bond debt created for the purchase of the plant. Before 1922 the balance had been liquidated. Early in that year a start was made on a new, modern plant. The old plant had a capacity of 500 kilowatts; the new was to have 1,000. A bond issue to the amount of $83,495 paid for the building. Two steam turbine generating units were installed at a cost of $76,000 under a contract requiring the city to pay for them at the rate of $1,000 a month. These payments were completed on schedule. A few years later the capacity of the plant was doubled, making it 2,000 kilowatts. The additional plant investments, bringing the total up to $250,000, was paid for partly out of surplus and partly by a bond issue. The contract has been let for a new 2,000-kilowatt unit to be paid for out of earnings.

"BONDS CALLED IN

"As has been told, the city found itself last fall with a surplus in the light fund more than sufficient to pay off $57,000 in bonds then outstanding. Although the bonds had been issued in series and some were not due for 20 years, the city had saved the option of retiring them all on or after November 15, 1930. As the interest rate was 6 per cent, it was decided to pay off the bonds and save the interest.

"The balance sheet of the plant for December 31, 1930, showed property and plant assets of $579,460 and total assets of $740,735. Current assets included $74,986 cash in banks.

"From the annual report for 1930:

Operating revenue	$145,567.06
Operating expense, including allowance of $17,083.67 for depreciation reserve	69,265.05
Net operating revenue	76,302.01
Nonoperating revenue (includes $390 profit on merchandise sales)	836.19
Deduction for bond interest	2,997.54
Net income for year	74,140.66

"The ratio for operating expense to total operating revenue was 47.65 per cent.

"Net income for the year 1929 was $71,799.80, and the ratio of operating expense to total revenue was 48.32 per cent.

"Present rates were established in June, 1927, after a hearing before the Indiana Public Service Commission, which has jurisdiction over municipally owned as well as privately owned utilities. The commission at first was reluctant to grant the rates asked for by the city, on the ground that they were too low. It sent its own auditors to examine the accounts, and after six weeks ordered the reduction.

"CAR LINE SHOWS LOSS

"In the accounting system the city is billed about $12,000 a year for street and public-building lighting and $2,700 for power for the street railway.

"The street railway is not self-supporting, the city having to make up a deficit of $2,000 to $3,000 a year, virtually amounting to a gift of the power used. Mayor McCarty justifies the continued operation of the street railway in this way:

"'The city is 3½ miles long, not very wide. At one end are the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad shops, employing around 1,000 men. Many of these workers rely on street-car transportation, and we believe the city should see that it is maintained at a reasonable rate of fare.'"

"The railway property consists of 3½ miles of track, seven cars, and car barn and office. The city paid $15,000 for it seven years ago.

"Mayor McCarty is president of the Municipal League of Indiana and has received wide notice on account of the Washington light plant. He said he receives frequent requests from other cities for information about the plant.

"McCarty said the city council has cooperated admirably in the management of the plant. A lighting committee, consisting of Councilmen George Cavanaugh, R. L. McIntosh, and John Yarbrough, assists the mayor."

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANSLEY.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the rule, because I believe it unwise, if not foolish, to bring up a Muscle Shoals bill at this time. In the first place, whether the Government operates or whether a lease is effected, it surely does not spell economy.

I would like to call attention to section 14 of the bill. At the proper time a motion will be made to strike out that section. If the motion is agreed to, I believe, with one or two correcting amendments, a real leasing bill can be made; a bill which will be signed by the President.

Section 14 provides if a lease is not made in 18 months, then the Government is to operate the plant at Muscle Shoals and produce fertilizer, manufacture fertilizer, in spite of the fact that to-day more fertilizer is produced in this country than can be used. Many of the factories to-day are closed down. The balance are operating 40 or 50 per cent of their normal production. If the bill is passed as is, it will be impossible to lease in 18 months. To attempt to raise millions of dollars for a new enterprise with financial conditions as at present is surely absurd. Let me call attention to the fact that it will cost millions of dollars to modernize the plant to produce fertilizer alone. Six or eight hundred men will be added to the Government pay roll, causing the discharge of a like number from private operations. Is this economy?

I am unalterably opposed to the Government in business. It is un-American. It is opposed to our form of Government. It is a long stride toward socialism. Imagine a government of the people and for the people competing in business with its own citizens.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSLEY. Not at this time.

I beg of you to permit the business geniuses of this country to control all business enterprise. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, better no bill than a bill that commits the Congress, in these times particularly, to the socialistic policy of private operation of a highly developed and technical industry. Better no bill than a bill that, for the first time in the history of this Congress, has reported the socialistic principle of having the Government operate this plant in competition with private chemical industry, because they know that the leasing provisions of this bill will not permit in these depressed times for a lease to be consummated. If the Democratic majority on the committee had faith in the leasing provisions of this bill, they would stand back of those leasing provisions; but, instead, they use that as a camouflage in order to seek Government operation of a Government utility in a venture where private industry is overstocked, oversupplied, and, worse still, in a plant which, all the evidence before the committee confirmed, is obsolete.

It is conceded by everybody that plant No. 1, which never was in successful operation to produce nitrogen under the Haber-Bosch process, is absolutely unworkable. It is agreed even by the disciples of Government ownership, the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, and the gentleman from Alabama, that nitrate plant No. 1 is pure junk, only a shell of a building, nothing inside that is of any worthwhile consequence.

As to nitrate plant No. 2, which was designed for the manufacture of nitrates by the cyanamide process, it is acknowledged that that process is obsolete; that all modern plants, constructed in the past 10 years, here and abroad, are equipped to use the synthetic process of extraction of nitrogen from the air. More, it is agreed that to put nitrate plant No. 2 into workable condition as a manufacturing plant, equipment and supplies would require the investment of from $12,000,000 to $18,000,000.

If the committee had any confidence in their baby, in the child that has emanated from the fertile brains of the majority of the Democratic membership of the committee, with the support of the ranking Republican member of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan, who supported that proposal, as being able to lease this property, it would not have put in a leasing bill this unheard-of substitute of governmental business operation.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at this time. The Muscle Shoals proposition has been the football of politics for 14 years, and the Democratic majority thinks that with a presidential election coming on, this is a most favorable time to continue it as a football in politics, and put it up to the President to veto.

This is the identical bill as to fertilizer which the President vetoed two years ago. Have industrial conditions improved since this bill was last up for consideration? No one will contend that for a moment. What does the President say in his veto message?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Briefly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is a member of this committee?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And the gentleman just made the statement that the bill now being considered is the identical bill that the President vetoed two years ago?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the identical bill as to the leasing provisions that the President vetoed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not what the gentleman said.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is absolutely wrong, and no one knows it better than the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me read what the President said in his veto message, and let the House determine who is right. On page 4, he said as to the Norris resolution providing for private leasing for the manufacture of fertilizer:

> Inquiries have been made by most responsible and experienced concerns that might possibly undertake such lease, and they have replied that under conditions set out in the bill it is entirely impracticable for them to make any bid. The leasing provision is therefore of no utility. It may at once be dismissed.

One of the important features of this bill is the manufacture of fertilizer by the Federal Government. Wherein is the bill that was before the President for his consideration different as far as the operation of this plant was concerned for the manufacture of fertilizer?

Mr. JAMES and Mr. FITZPATRICK rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at this time. The Governors of the great States of Tennessee and Alabama, pursuant to the suggestion of the President in his message, appointed a commission of three members to aid in the solution of this problem. What did that commission find? It found that nitrogen, one of the three essential component parts of fertilizer, the three parts being nitrogen, phosphorus, and potash, could be bought cheaper than it could be manufactured at Muscle Shoals; and that commission did not recommend that this plant be utilized for the manufacture of nitrates. Yet the bill prescribes as a condition of the leasing provision that there shall be a minimum amount of nitrate manufactured, with the market glutted as far as nitrate production is concerned.

Do you expect any private capital, even in normal times, much less in these times of stress, will be found to invest under a lease which requires the production of a minimum amount of nitrates when the market is glutted and when the commission itself found it could be bought in the open market cheaper than it could be manufactured at Muscle Shoals?

Therefore, knowing that no lease, as the President indicated with respect to leasing provisions similar to those of the bill under consideration, could be made two years ago, when conditions were a hundredfold more favorable, they now wish to have you believe that a lease can be obtained when every economic condition is one of uncertainty. If they had, as I said a moment ago, any confidence in the leasing provisions of this bill they would have left out the Government-operation provision. Why did they put that in? Oh, they fell back on section 126 of the national defense act, which says that this plant is dedicated to the purposes of agriculture in time of peace and to production of munitions in time of war.

Now, I will quote as an authority the Chief of Ordnance, who in this Congress stated, as did also the then Chief of Ordnance in the Congress two years ago, that there is absolutely no need for this plant for munition purposes; that private industry has so developed the manufacture of nitrates that there is an ample supply for the Army, in fact ample to keep the Army supplied for two years.

The mere fact that a Congress in 1926 stated that the policy of the Government should be for one thing does not mean that that should control all subsequent Congresses when conditions have changed.

Mr. Speaker, the Chief of Ordnance says there is no necessity for the operation of these plants, and that we now have in this country a great deal more nitrogen than is necessary.

You are seeking by this means, this socialistic proposal, to commit the Government to the manufacture of fertilizer, the most inane and nonsensical proposal I have ever heard since I have been a Member of this House, and particularly in this Congress.

Stop Congress! is the cry that is going throughout the country. Stop Congress! Day before yesterday you passed the Goldsborough bill, and that has had the effect already of reducing the price of the dollar in foreign financial markets. That is particularly true in France and Holland, where the gold point as to francs and guilders is higher than the local price.

Yesterday the word was sent out to all the world that this Congress had failed to balance the Budget, and yet on top of that you are going to commit the Government to the policy of the expenditure of at least $60,000,000 at the start of this venture. Where are you going to get the money for this fantastic experiment, an experiment that if persisted in will cost the Government $100,000,000 and more? That is not the only money the Government has lost in experiments of this kind. It has lost $28,000,000 on its experiment to manufacture armor plate and projectiles at South Charleston, W. Va., which is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy to be junked. The same thing is true of the Alaskan Railroad. In every instance where the Government has launched into private industry there has been failure. Yet under the guise of helping the farmer you are going to commit the Government to a further waste through this extravagant proposal, which is going to cost the taxpayers of the country, not for the relief of the country but for the burden of the taxpayers, from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000.

I say halt, halt, in your extravagant policy of increasing the burdens of the taxpayers of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield my remaining seven minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], a member of the committee.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in favor of the rule; and in doing so I wish to state frankly to the membership of the House that I am not surrendering any of my opinions or my judgment on the question of Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plant. I started out in the opening of these hearings several months ago with the idea in mind—and I still have that idea—that it is not best for the Government to engage in private business in competition with private interests; but I feel, as all members of the committee, in my judgment, feel, that no man's individual opinions should stand in the way of any legislation that is calculated to redound to the welfare of the Nation as a whole.

I have reached the conclusion—as no doubt the great men who framed the Federal Constitution did—that a man must sometimes yield his preferences in order to be fair to the best interests of all the people. I do not believe we would have had a Federal Constitution had it not been for the compromising attitude of Benjamin Franklin. I do not believe we would have had the great Missouri Compromise had it not been for the wisdom, statesmanship, and forbearance of Henry Clay. Therefore, when I come to this House to-day, I am able to support this bill upon the idea that it is the best effort that has been made by any committee in the decade that Muscle Shoals legislation has been pending in the Congress. [Applause.]

It is best for this reason: It starts out with a leasing privilege under the most favorable terms that have yet been brought out by any committee. It goes even farther than that. It provides that if the Government should enter into the operation of the plant it may yet be leased to private enterprise. I am not willing, as a member of this committee, to see an investment of $140,000,000, or perhaps $150,000,000, continue to be idle for another period of years, especially in view of the fact that the great Southland, the agricultural section of our country, needs it operated as an industrial plant so badly.

Complaint has been made by my friend from Wisconsin that we are putting the Government into the fertilizer business.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I will ask if the gentleman knows who purchased the fertilizer that has been scattered all along the highway between Mount Vernon and Washington, that fertilizer evidently having been purchased in Germany.

Mr. MAY. I do not know who bought the fertilizer and I did not know it had been scattered, but what I am interested in is to get a complete commercial fertilizer containing the essential properties which will furnish a successful improvement of the soils on the farms of the South.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. If the gentleman will yield farther, evidently it was bought at the suggestion of the United States Government and scattered along a national highway. The fact that the Government has been forced to go beyond the confines of the United States to purchase fertilizer ought to be a very strong indication that we need production of that kind at home.

Mr. MAY. They will never need to go beyond Muscle Shoals if it is operated as a fertilizer plant for the needs of this Nation. [Applause.]

I want to emphasize the fact that I am appearing here in the interest of the farmers and the business interests of Alabama, Tennessee, and the entire South, where their soil has been depleted by centuries of erosion and the continuous cultivation of a principal crop, that of King Cotton. I want to say now that if Muscle Shoals is utilized—as I believe it will be under the provisions of this bill unless politics is played with it—we will have a production of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals that will bring us to the point where the men of the South will no longer have to teach their sons the art of war and the making of implements of war, but that they will turn all of their swords into plowshares and their sabers into pruning hooks and the lamb and the lion shall lie down together in peace, and that the farmers of the South will have fertilizer to make their depleted soil fertile. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. May I suggest to the gentleman that Government operation of Muscle Shoals would not be in competition with private industry in this country but in competition with a foreign monopoly which controls Chilean nitrates?

Mr. MAY. It would be primarily in competition with a foreign government that is selling its product in this country on a favorable scale in competition with our own industry.

This question has been agitated in the Congress for 10 years, and during the winter I procured from a Birmingham paper an article headed "Harness the Great White Elephant Now." I want at this point, Mr. Speaker, to insert in my remarks as a part of this speech this article. I want also to insert a statement which I made before the Military Affairs Committee that was not included in the printed hearings.

To my mind Muscle Shoals is a problem that is easy of solution. The bill creates a board with authority to lease it. They are not only given 18 months for the procurement of a satisfactory lease but they are authorized, even after the Government starts operation of the plant, to accept a favorable lease. In addition to this, the Congress, whether it reserved it especially in this bill, has the right to amend it, and if the board comes back to the Congress in a few years and reports it has been unable to procure a satisfactory lease the Congress can then take further action.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Birmingham News, January 24, 1932]

HARNESS THE GREAT WHITE ELEPHANT NOW!

This week a matter of momentous import both to the present and the future of the State of Alabama will be up for action in the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives.

This committee will report upon the bill embodying the Muscle Shoals Commission plan for leasing this great water-power project for production of commercial fertilizer ingredients and other chemicals.

No measure which has ever been proposed for utilizing the electric energy at Muscle Shoals has ever been so unanimously and so enthusiastically supported by all interests in this State. Agriculture, industry, capital, and labor are all solidly behind it. All would receive boundless benefits should it be adopted.

Present benefits, sorely needed in this time of economic stress, would result from immediate investment by private capital of many millions in new machinery, equipment, and furnishings, necessitating the employment of a large amount of labor and the use of many Alabama products, such as iron, steel, cement, machinery, etc.

Future benefits, which would accrue throughout the years to come, would be almost limitless. Among them:

First. Providing farmers and cotton planters with fertilizer at low cost, thus enriching impoverished land, increasing yields, and enabling our farmers to grow many products now purchased elsewhere.

Second. Increasing Alabama's coal and coke consumption by several hundred thousand tons a year, required in the manufacturing processes and by the railroads for transporting raw materials and finished products to and from the Muscle Shoals district.

Third. Increasing Alabama freight movements (estimated at 2,280,000 tons annually) of materials and products in and out of Muscle Shoals, thus producing an estimated $5,000,000 annual revenue, and additional employment and earnings for Alabama railroads.

Fourth. Increasing value of Alabama's manufactured products, fertilizers, and other chemicals by about $35,000,000 annually.

Fifth. Furnishing direct employment to about 3,000 Alabama men a year, and indirect employment to about 6,000 others engaged in mining, manufacturing, and transporting raw materials and supplies.

Sixth. Adding enormously to the taxable property value of Alabama.

Seventh. Developing Alabama's chemical industry, which has enjoyed such remarkable expansion in recent years, but has, as yet, barely realized its true potentialities.

These are just a few of many benefits which Alabama would receive—now and in the future—without one cent of cost to the Government or taxpayers—if the Muscle Shoals Commission plan goes through. But these should be enough to arouse Alabama! These should be enough to induce every citizen to wire or write his Representative in Congress and the Senate urging action—action with the least possible delay.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, February 18, 1932.

The committee this day met, Hon. JOHN J. MCSWAIN (chairman) presiding.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Mr. May wants a stenographer to take down his statement.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, ordinarily I would not ask the committee to indulge me in making this statement, but in view of the fact that this is a matter of vital importance to the country at large, and one which has been pending for some 10 years in the Congress, and the further fact that I am a new member of this committee and perhaps there are many things about the matter that I am not thoroughly acquainted with, I feel that in view of that fact and the further fact that certain publications in the public press of the country have appeared with particular respect to myself, that I owe it not only to myself and my constituency but to this committee that I should make a statement at this time on this subject.

To begin with, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have very definite opinions based on what I regard as the fundamental principles of government involved in this bill or under the proposed bill. While that is true, I am just the character of man that feels that I ought not, if what has been published in the press with regard to my position about the matter is true, to delay action of the committee in any way, and I have no desire to do so. Personally, I feel like this is a matter where it requires compromise and concession on the part of any and all members of the committee and a waiver of preferences, if we have them, that we might get together on something that will bring a bill out of this committee before Congress in order that Congress may pass upon the question. In the last two or three days I have received from editors and persons who are interested in the Muscle Shoals problem in Tennessee clippings from newspapers published in various sections of the South, in which it is made to appear that this committee is tied up on this proposition and that I am the key man.

Mr. PARKER. Will you state in what newspapers those stories appeared and the dates, if you know them?

Mr. MAY. I left the clippings on my desk, but one of them is from the Knoxville Sentinel and the other I do not remember, but there is one paper in Birmingham, the Birmingham News, Age-Herald, or some such name. I simply wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, that so far as I am personally concerned I am unalterably opposed to Government operation of the Muscle Shoals plant in any respect; but I am willing to forego some of my preference about these matters in order that the Congress of the United States may settle the question, and I believe that this committee ought to authorize the manufacture of fertilizers for the farmers of the South and the whole country on a large scale if it can be done by private enterprise, and I believe it ought to put a clause in this bill that would prohibit any power company or subsidiary of a power company or anyone directly or indirectly connected with a power company from obtaining a lease of this property for any purpose. While I believe that, I still believe it is in a way wrong that the committee should single out any industry in the country and specifically discuss it as being marked for slaughter in connection with it, but I am willing to put that in it. I say this:

I am opposed to Government operation of the plant on fundamental principles. It is an invasion of the old democratic doctrine of State rights, and yet I am willing to accede to the wishes of the committee in those respects and allow this matter to go to a subcommittee to be drafted if that is the practice and the wisdom of this whole committee, but I do feel we ought to settle the fundamentals here in the whole committee before we give any instruction to a subcommittee to draft a bill as outlined by the whole committee. In doing that, without waiving the question of Government operation, I will specifically reserve the right as a member of this committee to oppose the final report of the subcommittee or oppose it on the floor of the House of Representatives if I feel at that time I ought to do it. In other words, my attitude is one of getting a bill out of the committee and let Congress say what it wants about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's position is rather analagous to the one I occupied on the Reece bill. I accepted the decision of that committee, and while the subcommittee and as my friend STAFFORD said, helped to write the bill and reserved my right to file a minority report and sought a constructive rather than destructive solution of the question, I hope and believe my friend from Kentucky approaches this thing in the same spirit.

Mr. MAY. I say this. I am reluctant under any circumstances to sign a minority report against the majority of any committee for any purpose. I may not sign a minority report and I may sign one, but I do not think I will. In other words, what I want to do is to be in the attitude of being fair and impartial about the matter, but yet there are certain fundamental principles involved.

I do think this committee ought to make a report, and Mr. JAMES, who is, perhaps, one of the best-informed men on the committee and whose leadership I delight to follow, knows that I suggested to him some weeks ago before we were half way through the hearings that it seemed to me, that considering that many members of this committee had to do with this problem in years past that it was unnecessary to hear quite so much testimony as we heard, but his answer was a wise one, that everybody was entitled to a hearing and ought to be heard so that the committee would have ample chance to see the testimony in the record, and as a lawyer I yielded to that viewpoint, because when I argue my law cases I am always told by the court to keep within the record, and I want to go along with this committee and be in the attitude to facilitate this matter. That statement is what I wanted to make but I do feel we ought to gather around one table; as old Solomon said, "In a multitude of counsel there is safety," and in that way get out a bill, give instructions to a subcommittee to bring in a bill to go through the Congress of the United States.

I think I should call attention to one thing which I have heard in my contacts. Politically, I am opposed to the President. Everybody knows that. Politically, I do not agree with him, but in his message of March 3, 1931, vetoing a similar bill he has made statements with which I entirely agree, and if he was then under the conviction that those statements are true he will undoubtedly stick to them now, and if he does now, which I do not doubt he will do, a public ownership bill will be vetoed by the President.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is no question about that.

Mr. MAY. And defeat this legislation, and I covet an opportunity to see something passed that will benefit the farmers and business men of Alabama and Tennessee.

Mr. JAMES. If we are going to take the President seriously, and we are going to pay attention to what the President wants and pay no attention to what we decide to do, then report out a bill that embodies the only thing ever suggested by the President—that is, we turn it over to the States of Alabama and Tennessee. That is the only bill that we know will meet the approval of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman from Michigan is going altogether too far, because I am more or less in a position to say authoritatively that the President believes in the private leasing of these properties under terms that are liberal so as to secure fertilizer production.

Mr. JAMES. Has the gentleman from Wisconsin ever talked to the President?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have.

Mr. JAMES. How long?

Mr. STAFFORD. Nearly an hour.

Mr. JAMES. Since the President vetoed it?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. Prior to the veto.

Mr. JAMES. I talked to the President the night before he vetoed it and I suggested to the President then that if he was dissatisfied with what Congress did, that he put in his veto message what his remedy was and we have it there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know personally from a long talk I had with the President as to what his views are and I do not think the gentleman is warranted in saying he will veto any leasing bill that we pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

Mr. MAY. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, as a further explanation of my attitude and speaking now from the viewpoint of a lawyer and business man, that I think the evidence we have heard here from such—well, from everybody before the committee, of every kind, knowledge, or condition, that we are in the midst of the worst depression in the history of America—makes the possibility of private leases, or other conditions that would operate in favor of the procuring of private leases that once existed, less, and that has been eliminated by the conditions.

For instance, the Ford proposal is no longer available to solicit because they have stated here, Mr. Ford's representative, that they are entirely out of the picture at this time due to the developments they have made elsewhere. If I remember right, Mr. Bell, of the American Cyanamid Co., said that he was not interested at this time and Mr. Swann, of the Swann Corporation, also. Speaking from the standpoint of a lawyer, I would say that any contract that is to be entered into by contracting parties that is not of mutual advantage to both parties is detrimental to both. I state that as a principle; and if we lay down rules here by which any commission that is appointed—the commission or corporation that is created—if such rigid regulations or provisions are incorporated that it is not of mutual advantage to both parties, then we have killed the thing in that direction without giving it out to the President of the United States or anybody in any branch of Congress.

Now, with this statement, I will conclude by saying I am ready to do whatever I can to bring from this committee a fair and reasonable bill that will secure for the farmers, the business men, and the people of the South, the country in which I live and the country that I love, the operation of this plant; and now, if the gentleman from Connecticut desires, I yield to him.

Mr. GOSS. I understand that your suggestion is to have the committee write the fundamentals, the whole committee, and make suggestions to the subcommittee.

Mr. MAY. My position is that they should instruct the subcommittee on the fundamental provisions to be included.

Mr. GOSS. When the gentleman from Alabama made the statement I did not gather that was his opinion. When I asked him if he would be willing to support a vote on a bill for private leases only, I understood him to say no; my thought is we ought to go along and have the Government-operation clause after a certain period if a lease was not given.

Mr. MAY. That is the way I understood the gentleman from Alabama, and I believe that is the provision in most of the bills we have killed except the Goss and Almon bills.

Mr. PARKER. Before I make my statement I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] one further question.

Mr. MAY. That is all right.

Mr. PARKER. Were the names of any other members of this committee mentioned in the newspaper stories you referred to?

Mr. MAY. Yes. I think the name of the gentleman from Georgia Mr. PARKER, and I do not remember who else—yes; Mr. JAMES—I do not remember who else.

The CHAIRMAN. Judging from the number of telegrams and letters, my name is in some of the papers down there.

Mr. PARKER. I just wish to say at this time that my position is about the same as the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MAY, except that I am willing to go a little bit farther in one respect. If I can conscientiously vote with the majority of the committee in recommending that a particular bill be reported favorably, I am going to do that. If I can not conscientiously vote with the majority of the committee, I will not vote with a minority and I will not sign a minority report. I may reserve the right to vote "present" and hold myself in such position where I can vote on the floor of the House as my conscience dictates.

(Thereupon the committee resumed proceedings in executive session.)

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, the practice of Government intermeddling in business is fundamentally wrong and contrary to the principles upon which this Government was founded. You can read the Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the Federal Constitution, and everything from the word "in," in the first line of the first chapter of the Book of Genesis, to the word "amen" at the end of the Book of Revelation, and you will not find one word authorizing government as a principal to be engaged in private enterprise. The purpose of government is to govern and to give to all equal opportunity and equal protection of the law, and allow each and all to work out their own salvation, but the time has come in this country, and it is not far distant, until we or our children shall be at death grapples with bureaucracy. The immortal Thomas Jefferson declared as a slogan that has been followed by our party since his day, "Equal and exact justice to all men and exclusive privileges to none," and he further declared that the high prerogative of the citizen was an inherent right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Upon this trinity of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness hangs the law and prophecy.

Thirty years before the Civil War, great patriots from the South were battling in the Congress of the United States for the preservation of liberty and the rights of the States. In the celebrated debate between Daniel Webster and Robert Y. Haynes, in the Senate of the United States, when there was under discussion the Foot resolution, the immortal Haynes from South Carolina, defending the right of the citizens to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and stressing the rights of the individual States, and the danger of usurpation of power by the Federal Government, said:

> The gentleman has made an eloquent appeal to our hearts in favor of union. Sir, I cordially respond to that appeal. I will yield to no gentleman here in sincere attachment to the Union; but it is a union founded on the Constitution, and not such a union as that gentleman would give us, that is dear to my heart. If this is to become one great "consolidated Government," swallowing up the rights of the States, and the liberties of the citizen, "riding over the plundered ploughmen and beggared yeomanry," the Union will not be worth preserving. Sir, it is because South Carolina loves the Union, and would preserve it forever, that she is opposing now, while there is hope, those usurpations of the Federal Government which, once established, will, sooner or later, tear this Union into fragments.

Again that distinguished southern statesman, standing as he did in the front ranks of leadership, and defending with great ability the rights of the States and their citizens against the usurpations and paternalistic tendencies of the Federal Government, declared:

> If I had, sir, the powers of a magician, and could, by a wave of my hand, convert this Capitol into gold for such a purpose, I would not do it. If I could, by a mere act of my will, put at the disposal of the Federal Government any amount of treasure which I might think proper to name, I should limit the amount to the means necessary for the legitimate purposes of the Government. Sir, an immense National Treasury would be a fund for corruption. It would enable Congress and the Executive to exercise a control over States, as well as over great interests in the country, nay, even over corporations and individuals—utterly destructive of the purity, and fatal to the sovereignty and independence of the States. Sir, I am one of those who believe that the very life of our system is the independence of the States, and that there is no evil more to be deprecated than the consolidation of this Government. It is only by a strict adherence to the limitations imposed by the Constitution on the Federal Government that this system works well, and can answer the great ends for which it was instituted. I am opposed, therefore, in any shape, to all unnecessary extension of the powers or the influence of the Legislature or Executive of the Union over the States, or the people of the States; and, most of all, I am opposed to those partial distributions of favors, whether by legislation or appropriation, which has a direct and powerful tendency to spread corruption through the land, to create an abject spirit of dependence, to sow the seeds of dissolution, to produce jealousy among the different portions of the Union, and finally to sap the very foundations of the Government itself.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a quotation from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 19, 1830, which contains the great debate between Webster and Haynes, and that even in that distant day was the expression of a prophetic vision of one of the ablest statesmen of all time, and it is proving true in this day and in a marked degree.

The pending bill is fundamentally wrong in many particulars. To begin with, it creates a new bureaucracy, consisting of a board of three, and authorizes as an alternative the putting of the Government of the United States into industrial business in competition with private industry. To all that I am opposed; but yet when I look to the other end of this Capitol and find there a companion measure of this, reported for favorable action of the other branch of the Congress, and providing in the initiative for the operation of this gigantic enterprise by the Government, with private leasing as an alternative, I am compelled to support the pending bill in order to escape the more drastic and dire consequences of a more vicious proposal, which inevitably will pass this Congress, unless the pending bill as a substitute shall be passed.

Upon that ground, and that alone, I shall support the pending measure as being the least of two evils. High authority has said, "Between two evils, choose ye the least," and if I am to swallow strychnine, I prefer 1 grain to 10 grains. If the Muscle Shoals plant is leased under the provisions of this bill to private industry and put in operation, it will become an instrument of untold blessings to the farmer and agricultural interests of this entire country; but if it is operated as a Government enterprise, it will become a menace and a curse, and that is so apparent and it is realized so forcibly that even the ordinary citizen understands the effects of it.

In the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the United States Senate, February 16 to 24, 1932, Mr. Mercer Reynolds, of Chattanooga, Tenn., testifying before the committee, made this striking statement:

> I do not agree with you. I object to the Government ownership of any industry that can be financed by private capital. It is just an acknowledgment that we are gradually adopting the Russian form of government instead of our own. And if the Russian form of government is correct in one particular, it is correct in whole.

And the same witness, testifying upon the same occasion, made the further statement:

> I am a farmer. I have 4,000 acres of the poorest land in Georgia. It needs fertilizer. I want fertilizer. I objected to the Government going into the fertilizer business and not in the power business. Some of them seemed to think it was all right for the Government to go into fertilizer business but not in the power business. I am anxious to protect legitimate private capital that is in a legitimate business, whether it be in the fertilizer business or in the power business. I have no interest whatever in a fertilizer plant and no interest in any power plant. I have never received or been offered a nickel, as I have testified, or one penny, from any public-utilities corporation in my life, and was never connected with one, directly or indirectly. My only interest is the development of my community, more on account of the five sons I have growing up in that community than on account of myself. I have retired from business. Their future depends on the future of my community, and I am interested in the settlement of this matter and the development of the Tennessee River more for that reason than for any other reason.

Here we have a southern farmer with the hope, the ambition, and the future of his five sons in mind, and when we look over the field of governmental activities of this day we should not be surprised that even farmers of the South are awake to a realization of the awful and staggering gloom of the future of our Government unless the hand of paternalism is stayed.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States is rapidly becoming an industrial concern rather than an institution of law and orderly procedure of government. Even now this Congress is passing resolutions providing for the investigation of the activities of the Government in business enterprises that are gradually becoming so atrocious and dangerous that within a decade the battle of this body will not perchance be a battle alone with poverty and depression, but a battle against the encroachments and paternalistic tendencies of the Federal Government in its rapid usurpation of the powers of the States, and the destruction of the initiative of the individual citizens. We have witnessed in this session of the Congress on the floor of this House the amazing spectacle of Members of this House arguing against Government in business and displaying articles of merchandise from chewing gum to boots, shoes, and clothing, manufactured and sold in commercial competition with private business by the War Department. We even have numerous agencies of the Government going out and buying in large quantities from jobbers, merchandise in every form and character, and retailing it at ridiculously low prices, in direct competition with individuals engaged in like business.

In the House Office Building, within the shadow of this Capitol, they are selling everything from chewing gum to ham sandwiches, and just down the street a few blocks, we have a gigantic Farm Board, with its multiplied hundreds of employees and high-salaried officials, engaged in the business of buying and selling in the open markets wheat, corn, and oats, in competition with the horny-handed farmer, on whose burdened backs we are beseeched to lay the drastic hand of taxation, by which we draw blood money to support the agencies of the Federal Government that is rapidly becoming the master and not the protector of the people. The guaranty of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness that was visualized by Jefferson for the generations that were to follow him has become a dead letter. The dangers and perils of paternalistic government are developing rapidly and stealthily and its despoiling influences are radiating in a thousand directions from this Capitol throughout the land.

We need less government in business and more business in government, but when I am confronted with a choice between two evils I shall accept and do accept the least of the two. I shall vote, Mr. Speaker, for the committee bill, with the hope and belief that a private lease of this valuable and expensive property will be secured under its provisions; but in conclusion let me warn my colleagues that at no distant day we or our successors will be at bayonets' points in a death grapple with paternalism, and in the defense of the generations of the future I indulge the fond hope that the patriotism of this day shall survive the attacks of bureaucrats and come forth conqueror over all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11051) to provide for the leasing and other utilization of the Muscle Shoals properties in the interest of national defense and of agriculture, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11051, with Mr. GARRETT in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET], a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill.

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted me I shall try to explain some provisions of this bill.

A special subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee had the preparation of this bill under consideration for many weeks. I was a member of this subcommittee. We held daily sessions and considered the Muscle Shoals proposals in keeping with instructions from the main committee, which were, in effect, as follows: The main committee instructed the subcommittee to draft a bill providing, first, for the leasing of Muscle Shoals, and that the leasing provisions be made as liberal as possible, but, of course, in keeping with and with due regard for the interests of the Government. Secondarily, that the bill should provide that in the event a lease of Muscle Shoals could not be secured within a reasonable time, provisions should be made for the Government to operate Muscle Shoals, and, third——

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTET. Yes.

Mr. BACHMANN. Is the gentleman able to tell the House what it will cost the Government if this bill passes?

Mr. MONTET. If the gentleman will permit me to at least get started with my statement, I shall be glad to answer the question later.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONTET. No.

Mr. JAMES. I trust the gentleman will give some information to our new leader, who has just been elected whip.

Mr. BACHMANN. I would be glad if the ranking minority member of the committee would advise the House what it will cost the Government.

Mr. JAMES. I could not tell the gentleman anything about it.

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further. I hope the gentlemen will permit me to complete my statement without further interruptions.

The committee further instructed us to write a provision in the bill that would permit the leasing of the Muscle Shoals project even if and after the Government had undertaken its operation. We sought to carry out the instructions given us by the committee.

Section 1 of the bill declares, in very plain terms, the purposes of this legislation. It declares the purposes to be to aid American agriculture and to provide for national defense and primarily for the production and development of fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; and, secondarily, for the production of chemicals.

Section 2 of the bill provides that the administration of the provisions of this act shall be vested in a board, and I may say to the members of the committee that the entire proposal, with respect to the operation of Muscle Shoals under this bill, revolves around the board.

It is provided that the board shall be composed of three members, who shall receive a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum. These members are to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; the board is to be an overlapping board. The members are to be appointed 2 years, 4 years, and 6 years, respectively, and their successors to be appointed for terms of 6 years, thus effecting the idea of an overlapping board.

As I have already stated, these appointments are subject to the approval of the Senate. With these safeguards thrown around the appointments, the country can depend that the membership of the board will be composed of men of high standing, whose record will be well scrutinized by the President and the Senate of the United States before final confirmation. Their salaries are fixed at the rate of $10,000 per year.

I want to explain here that that does not mean that they will receive $10,000 a year. These salaries are fixed at the rate of $10,000 a year, which means that if they devote six months' time to the affairs of Muscle Shoals during any one year they are to receive only six months' pay, which would be $5,000.

The committee felt that in a matter of such importance, involving the administration of property worth millions of dollars, salaries should be sufficiently attractive to invite the services of men able to deal with such a project.

Section 3 provides that the board shall maintain suitable offices and appoint attorneys and agents, and so forth. It also provides that two members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

Section 4 gives the board broad authority to lease this property, including the limestone quarry, for the term of 50 years; the lease also to include all property of the Government at Muscle Shoals involved in this project and all machinery, tools and improvements, and so forth.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTET. I yield.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The gentleman stated that under the proposed bill the board is to be selected by the President of the United States.

Mr. MONTET. With the approval and advice of the Senate.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. In view of the fact that the President has indorsed the purchase of fertilizer in large quantities from Germany, now lying along the national highway, does the gentleman think he would be very particular about the kind of a board he would appoint?

Mr. MONTET. I would not undertake to answer the gentleman's question at this time. In this connection the bill also provides that this great property at Muscle Shoals shall not pass into the hands of any Power Trust—that it shall not be leased to any power-distributing company or holding company or any company affiliated with any power-distributing company.

While the bill gives broad discretion, broad powers to the board, it also places most of the responsibility on the board; but, on the other hand, it also places limitations and restrictions in connection with certain features of operations, with special reference to the minimum quantity of fertilizer to be produced by the lessee, thus insuring the farmer a definite minimum supply of Muscle Shoals produced fertilizer and its ingredients. These safeguards are indispensible to insure reasonable and adequate fertilizer production.

Since time is so precious and the amount allotted me permits no further comment at this time, let me conclude by saying that this bill is the result of weeks of hard work by our subcommittee. It provides for a full and final disposition of Muscle Shoals with the interests of the Government fully safeguarded and is a definite insurance to the farmer that he will be supplied with highly concentrated fertilizers at great savings in cost.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, who was for 10 years a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, five minutes.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the question of the disposition of Muscle Shoals has been a live one for the past 12 years. The question has grown so old that it is gray and mossy, and some of the Members may have forgotten much of what they once knew about the project.

It came into being as a result of the war, under what we know as the national defense act. I have had ringing in my ears for many years that it was for the production of nitrogen, for explosives in time of war, and fertilizer in time of peace.

Gentlemen, this is a great project at Muscle Shoals, and it is almost a national scandal that this vast property has been permitted to run to waste all these years.

The Government has invested there something like $140,000,000 or $150,000,000. There is a great hydroelectric plant there, perhaps the greatest in the world. There is a great steam plant as a subsidiary. They have the largest plant for the manufacture of nitrogen, perhaps, in the world.

Certainly—up to a year or two ago—it is the only one in the world standing idle. If all that has been testified about Muscle Shoals, and all that has been said here on the floor of the House about Muscle Shoals and also in the Senate, could be stretched out line by line it would go largely around the globe. I would like to know just what the printing bill has been in connection with it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As a matter of actual fact, not that I want to find fault with the bill, is it not true that as a matter of national defense that question has almost been exploded?

Mr. WRIGHT. The experts testified along that line.

Mr. SNELL. They say that has practically gone by as a matter of national defense.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is true. The experts say that.

Mr. ALMON. But the gentleman does not believe it, does he?

Mr. WRIGHT. Oh, the experts tell us a great many things that we do not find to be altogether practicable.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. There is a division of opinion among the experts on that question.

Mr. WRIGHT. Oh, yes; but I was referring to the experts in the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any question but that the present Chief of Ordnance and the Chief of Ordnance two years ago, General Williams, said that there is no need for this plant for national defense?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes; but I always take their testimony as to this with a grain of salt. I do not always agree with them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who are the other experts?

Mr. WRIGHT. Those are the experts to whom I referred.

Mr. JAMES. And the same Chief of Ordnance, Hoff, submitted a letter to the President that he did not sign.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And is not that the only plant in the United States of America that will make ammonium nitrate, which is the explosive substance used?

Mr. WRIGHT. It is the only one that I know anything about. There is no doubt the plant has value for the manufacture of explosives and fertilizer. What has been going on all these years? Nero fiddled while Rome was burning. Here is a plant capable of generating about 150,000,000 kilowatt-hours a month, which the Government through the War Department has been leasing to the Alabama Power Co. at the low price of 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. I am speaking now of the power end of it. General Brown, the Chief of Engineers, who has had this matter in active charge, has finally worked the contract up to where the minimum amount paid during the year shall amount to as much as $560,000. They have been paying around that sum. They take only about 25 per cent of the power generated. They use it as a dry-water proposition. I mean when the Alabama Power Co., the lessee, gets short of water somewhere else it draws on Muscle Shoals. I can not discuss this question in the time allotted to me, but I have always stood for leasing this proposition by the Government. We tried that for years. We had a good proposition from Henry Ford to lease it. That passed the House once, but it did not pass the Senate. We had another splendid offer by the American Cyanamid Co. through one of its subsidiaries, but it failed of passage.

The property is still in hand and what are we going to do with it? It should be kept in mind that each year we appropriate from $250,000 to $260,000 to operate, maintain, and repair it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no. How much do we receive at the present time?

Mr. WRIGHT. About $560,000. In other words, it costs about half of what we get for it to operate and maintain it.

Mr. ALMON. And the other half is taken up in maintenance charges and depreciation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes; we get nothing out of it. What I wanted to say is this: I have always stood for leasing the project. It seems we can not make a lease directly by Congress; at least, we never have been able to do it. The bill before you now provides for the creation of a board to make this lease, with the consent of the President. It gives the board 18 months in which to do it. I am hoping that they will get a lease within the 18 months. If not, then in all good reason is it not better for the Government to do something with it rather than have it go to waste. Under the circumstances I shall support the bill as being the best proposition before us.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Does the gentleman insist that the cost of maintaining this property is $260,000 a year instead of about $82,000?

Mr. WRIGHT. The cost of operation, maintenance, and repair has been from $250,000 to $260,000 a year.

My time does not permit the discussion of the great benefit it is confidently expected would result to our farmers by reason of the operation of this great plant for the manufacture of fertilizer. One of the greatest drains on the American farmer, especially those in the South, is the enormous amount paid for commercial fertilizer. It is reasonably certain, under the terms of this bill, a highly concentrated fertilizer would be produced and at radically lower prices than now paid by the farmers. Besides the bill offers promise that the Government would receive some substantial returns from the sale of the enormous power capable of being generated at the plant.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman fom Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have ever considered a question before Congress from a political standpoint before to-day, but I want to discuss this for just a moment from that angle. I do not speak for the President; but if he runs true to form and this bill passes the Congress, there is no doubt in my mind that he will veto it and thereby he will add to the record that he has already made on vetoes which have saved the people of this Nation close on to a billion dollars. I would like to call attention to the fact that during the last session of Congress the President vetoed seven bills which called for large governmental expenditure Of these the House of Representatives overrode two vetoes. My recollection is that practically all the Democratic members joined in overriding these vetoes. If the same proportion had supported the vetoes in the Democratic Party that was found amongst the Republican members, these two vetoes would have been sustained.

Of the vetoes sustained in one House or the other the expenditure called for can be quickly interpreted into the expenditure that would have been added to the Government up to the end of the next fiscal year.

Senate 543, increasing the pay of mail carriers, $288,000.

Senate 3060, to establish State subsidies for employment service, $10,000,000.

Senate 3165, for the payment of certain Indian claims, $6,500,000.

And in addition to that, a recent veto that has saved almost an equal amount.

Senate Joint Resolution 49, relating to Muscle Shoals, $100,000,000.

H. R. 10381, to extend the disability presumption into the veterans' act. This would have cost the Government in the fiscal year——

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order under the rule. The rule requires the gentleman to speak to the bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I am going to speak to the bill. I am presenting a few figures and facts to carry out the argument which I wish to present. This would have cost the Government $110,000,000 in the year 1931, and in the fiscal year just ended $264,000,000. In the fiscal year, which we have had under consideration, $365,000,000, or a total for this one bill alone of $737,000,000.

Now, the two bills on which the President's veto was overridden were the Spanish-American War veterans, amounting to $60,000,000, and the other one——

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the rule requires the gentleman to speak on the merits of the bill, and I insist that the Chair rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. UNDERHILL. So that the President has saved the people of this Nation by his vetoes, as I stated, about a billion dollars.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I renew my objection and demand a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman will confine his remarks to this bill.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. In just a moment. After all the interruptions I think I may at least state that this presumptive veto will save the people of this country another $120,000,000.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the remarks of the gentleman be stricken from the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman says the contemplated veto will save the people $120,000,000.

Mr. UNDERHILL. That is about what I figure it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In the gentleman's computation did I catch an item of $100,000,000 that was saved by vetoing the Senate resolution?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman add that together and take $100,000,000 for one action and $100,000,000 for the contemplated action?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes; because in the meantime the deterioration of the property would probably require another $20,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But that would be $220,000,000.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I get the gentleman's point. Well, this would be a renewal—another saving of $120,000,000. Eternal vigilance is the price of economy.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. What would be the profits from approval by the President of the Cape Cod Canal?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the question of the Cape Cod Canal is not under consideration at the present time, and furthermore, the total cost to the Government thus far of the Cape Cod Canal has only been about $9,000,000.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I must proceed in order, Mr. Chairman. I can not yield.

I am not willing to swap a life-saving inland waterway at an expense of $9,000,000, which has all been paid for, years before the present fiscal and economic condition, for a $100,000,000 business venture. It would reflect upon my Yankee training. May I say to the gentleman from Alabama that had he or any of his colleagues from the State of Alabama dared introduce a bill like this 25 to 50 years ago, I doubt if they would have received 50 votes in their district for reelection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman's attitude toward Muscle Shoals has changed materially since the passage of the Cape Cod Canal bill.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is woefully mistaken. I have always voted against the Muscle Shoals bill on the ground that it would put the Federal Government into business. Thus far I have followed the doctrine of Thomas Jefferson, which has been abandoned by most of his followers in the South, who would sell the heritage left them by that great statesman for a mess of pottage, composed in most part of political patronage.

Now, unless the South is willing to abandon its traditional policy of State rights and State maintenance, it can not consistently vote for a proposition such as this, even though it lie within its own borders.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is beyond the question. The question is, Are you going to make additional expenditures at this time when we have tried vainly up to now to balance the Budget, when we are way in the red, when the people are crying for relief from taxation? You do not hear as much from the unorganized majority of the people who suffer from taxes as you hear from organized minorities who benefit, but let me tell you that they are interested and incensed just the same. I took a little trip over the week-end, and practically everyone I met had some criticism to make of Congress and its inability, its inefficiency, or its ignorance in judging the temper of the people, and its subservience to special vociferous classes. So that to-day the crying need of this country is not greater expenditures by the Government. The Government never went into a business yet that did not result in tremendous loss and that did not result in a scandal. I have only to refer to the $2,000,000,000 of loss sustained in 21 months by the Railroad Administration, to the over two billions of dollars of loss sustained by the Shipping Board when it tried to run the merchant marine of this country for a period of 23 months. I have only to refer to the scandal resulting because the Government tried to go into the oil business. It makes no difference how far you go back, even to the crédit Mobilier, the Government has failed when it entered the realm of private business. Pass this bill and it will afford another opportunity to the President to protect the people through the medium of the veto from the unwarranted expenditures of Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, when I first came in here this morning I heard the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. BACHMANN] ask what it might cost the Government if this plant were put into the operation of making fertilizer. I want to refer you for a moment to page 557 of the hearings, where the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], in referring to the amount to be expended by a proposed lessee, claimed that it would be $10,000,000. Mr. Bell agreed to put that in at the outset and then some $35,000,000 more. I have noticed to-day that the speakers preceding me have not referred to the so-called Cove Creek Dam provisions of this bill. On page 13 of the bill you will find this language:

SEC. 11. (a) When a lease of the Muscle Shoals properties has been effected, or if no lease be effected, when the board shall certify to the President that there is a demand for increased power for the manufacture of fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients at Muscle Shoals, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, when appropriations shall be made specifically available therefor by the Congress, to construct, either directly or by contract to the lowest responsible bidder after due advertisement, a dam in and across Clinch River, in the State of Tennessee, which has by long usage become known and designated as the Cove Creek Dam.

The testimony before the committee stated that that dam would cost various figures. I want to be accurate. I think the committee assumed that it would be around $30,000,000. Am I right, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. McSWAIN. To be accurate, it would be about $34,000,000, including all of the equipment for the dam, the lifts and navigation facilities.

Mr. GOSS. It would cost the Government $34,000,000 for a dam that is authorized to be constructed out of appropriations made by Congress in addition to some $35,000,000 that would be necessary for some private lessee to spend down there to get the plant in shape for operation.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. BACHMANN. The gentleman has not included the salaries of the employees to be appointed, or the furnishings of the offices, and so forth.

Mr. GOSS. I agree with the gentleman that there would be considerable additional expense. I am naming but a few of the larger items, which amount to something like $60,000,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. Does the gentleman think the cost will amount to $75,000,000?

Mr. GOSS. I think that would be a conservative estimate.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I know the gentleman wants to be accurate.

Mr. GOSS. I do.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Because Mr. Bell said it was his intention for the American Cyanamid Co. to spend $35,000,000 if it took over the plant does not mean at all that it is necessary to spend that much money to operate the big nitrate plant there. Mr. Bell intended to go down there and operate on a great scale, just exactly like he is operating at Niagara Falls and in Canada. He was going to modernize the plant, build a great phosphoric-acid plant, and a big chemical plant in addition.

Mr. GOSS. I can not yield for the gentleman to make a speech in my time.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. If the gentleman wants to be accurate, he should refer to all the facts connected with that expenditure.

Mr. GOSS. I refer the Members to page 557 of the hearings.

Of course, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] was arguing for the amortization of the contract over a 15-year period.

Mr. JAMES. Since the gentleman has mentioned my name, I was not talking about the amount of money. I was bringing up a supposititious question and how he would charge it off.

Mr. GOSS. If he had to charge it off, naturally he had to spend it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Where are we going to get the money to do this work if this bill passes?

Mr. GOSS. That is my point. I do not know, in these times. The bill provides a leasing clause of 18 months. If a lease is not made within that time, then six months thereafter the board may go ahead and operate it as a fertilizer plant for the Government.

Mr. LINTHICUM. You set up an organization in the beginning of three men at $10,000 a year each.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is not that mandatory upon the President? As I read the bill, it is mandatory.

Mr. GOSS. Yes; it is mandatory. He must operate it if a lease is not made within the period of 18 months.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not the President, but this board?

Mr. GOSS. Of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this board will be in sympathy with that proposal.

Mr. GOSS. That is true. The majority of the House Committee on Military Affairs incorporated this section 14 in the bill, which will automatically put the Government into the fertilizer business to which I have just referred.

There are many authorities on this. These hearings comprise some 700 pages, and the hearings took over two weeks. I would like to call attention to the testimony of Mr. Mayo on page 445 of the hearings. Mr. Mayo is one of the eminent engineers of the country, the chief engineer of Mr. Ford. He said:

> As I said at the beginning, I haven't followed the fertilizer art, but my guess would be that what is down there in the way of fertilizer plants would be so badly out of date now—10 years from the time we were talking about it—that there would be very little value in it.

Then he went on to say that personally he thought it would be very disastrous for the Government to engage in this particular business of making fertilizer there. Of course, if the Government operates the plant at all, it must operate it for making fertilizer.

I want to refer for a moment to Mr. O'Neal's testimony. Mr. O'Neal is the president of the American Farm Bureau. Let us see what he had to say about it. He answered a question which I asked him about the production of nitrogen there, and he said:

> My dear sir, you might fix a fellow so down there if you made him make 40,000 tons of nitrogen that you would put him out of business and ruin the whole project.

That is when we were discussing the amount of nitrogen and phosphoric acid in the bill, fixing a definite amount in the bill, and the testimony of the president of the Farm Bureau was that he thought that was very dangerous and might ruin the whole project.

Mr. HART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. HART. Does not the gentleman know that Mr. O'Neal had some one on the pay roll as a Farm Bureau man who was working for the American Cyanamid Co. when this bill was last up?

Mr. GOSS. I did not know that.

Mr. HART. It is in the Caraway lobby investigating committee hearings.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. As I read the bill and as I understand from the gentleman's argument, the terms of the proposed lease are made so impracticable that there is no reasonable probability of a lease being made during the 18 months provided in the bill, and that if it is not made within that time, then the Government must go into the fertilizer business.

Mr. GOSS. The gentleman is absolutely correct. We have a large capacity in this country for nitrogen production, and the plants engaged in that production have been expanded very much. General Hof testified that 172,000 tons of nitrogen would supply an army of 2,000,000 men for two years, and he admitted we had enough production in this country already and that 600,000 tons could be produced annually. So he convinced me that there was no particular need for the Government manufacturing nitrogen. Furthermore, the testimony all the way through bears out the fact that nitrogen can be bought very much cheaper than it could be made at nitrate plant No. 2. I would refer you to pages 482, 483, and 484 for the testimony to which I have just referred. General Hof said he had a publication showing the capacity of the United States to be 538,000 tons of synthetic nitrogen.

There is another provision on page 9, section 5, which provides that—

> The lessee shall maintain during the term of the lease United States nitrate plant No. 2 in at least the equivalent of the condition in which it shall be turned over to the lessee at the commencement of the lease term.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. GOSS. It was testified it would be a profitable matter to make phosphoric acid in plant No. 2 at Muscle Shoals and that this plant could be readily turned over to the making of phosphoric acid, but unless an amendment is offered, which I understand may possibly come from the committee, that can not be done.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New York. How much would it cost to put in the new machinery to supplant the antiquated machinery at Muscle Shoals to-day to make nitrogen in competition with commercial nitrogen?

Mr. GOSS. With the Cove Creek Dam I would say it would be somewhere between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman does not mean to say that this bill would require the building of Cove Creek Dam until certain conditions obtain?

Mr. GOSS. It requires the building of Cove Creek Dam when there is demand on the Government for the additional power, and I want to call the attention of the committee to this point. The maximum primary power under low-water conditions there is only some 45,000 or 50,000 kilowatts, and that is all that can be considered as primary power. If a man goes down there, or even if the Government should operate it, in order to get the required amount of nitrogen and phosphoric acid, there would have to be extra power, even beyond the steam plant, and, of course, they would come back to the Government for the construction of Cove Creek Dam.

In this connection let me say that nitrate plant No. 2 has furnaces there which are used in the production of nitrogen and which can be transferred and used for the production of phosphoric acid. It does not require much of a change to go from one to the other, but if the lessee were required to maintain and keep his plant in the equivalent condition it was before he took over the lease, I submit he could not change the plant over for the production of phosphoric acid.

Let me remind you that in this matter of fertilizer there are three primary ingredients—phosphoric acid, nitrogen, and potash in the various forms, and, of course, it is proposed down there to make a highly concentrated form of fertilizer which undoubtedly would work benefit to the farmer because of the freight-rate situation.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Is there any provision in the bill providing that this fertilizer shall be sold by the Government directly to the farmer?

Mr. GOSS. No.

Mr. MICHENER. They could sell it on the open market?

Mr. GOSS. It is my understanding they could.

Mr. MICHENER. And it is the presumption that they would do that?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did not the gentleman consider this a very liberal lease, outside of the Government operation provision?

Mr. GOSS. I am willing to say that if section 14 were stricken from the bill and further revision made in the Cove Creek Dam project, with an amendment to clarify the situation with respect to nitrate plant No. 2, I would vote for the bill, but with those provisions in the bill, I can not vote for it.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. And that would mean taking out the Government-ownership provision.

Mr. GOSS. Oh, absolutely. Section 14 is the Government-operation clause.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And those objections seem to be the main ones of the minority Members.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there is the Cove Creek Dam provision, which is a $30,000,000 proposition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did President Hoover object to the Cove Creek Dam provision in the other bill? He did not veto it on that ground.

Mr. STAFFORD. He had some qualifications as to when that should happen, and this measure does not have any of those qualifying provisions. This bill commits the Government to its construction under certain conditions.

Mr. GOSS. The Government is committed to its construction when it is demonstrated they need the extra power.

Mr. GREEN. Is the main objection of the gentleman from Connecticut that it will provide cheaper fertilizer for the farmer?

Mr. GOSS. Oh, no; I am very heartily in favor of that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, behold! again we are in the midst of the ghouls and the ghosts, the weird and fantastic noises, and the bleak and grotesque shadows of the old Muscle Shoals cemetery. As we prowl through the brambles, ragweeds, and dog fennel of this sadly neglected graveyard, we come upon three badly weather-beaten and dilapidated markers that attest the resting places of as many efforts to solve this problem that has become a joke and the butt of ridicule from one end of this country to the other.

First, almost concealed by the débris of time, we discover a little marker, and on close inspection and with great difficulty we are able to decipher the inscription. It reads, "The Ford offer—it died a-bornin' 1924." A little farther on, and not quite so obscure as the former, we encounter another slab with this epitaph upon it: "Here lies the body of Muscle Shoals, killed by Executive veto June, 1928." Still farther on, we find evidence of a more recent grave, and at its head appears another stone bearing this inscription: "Muscle Shoals, after weathering a lingering illness in Congress, met fate of predecessor in form of Executive disapproval, on March 3, 1931."

Now, my colleagues of the House, I have given you in burlesque phraseology the story of Muscle Shoals—a story which I maintain is a grave reflection upon the capacity of parliamentary government to function successfully.

Here we are in the midst of a depression such as our country has never experienced before. Over 5,000,000 people are out of employment and exposed to the vicissitudes and sufferings incident thereto. Here the Government has a plant representing the expenditure of approximately one hundred and fifty million of the people's money which if put to work would afford employment to thousands, reduce the cost of fertilizer to the already overburdened farmer, and cheapen the use of electricity in both domestic and commercial activity. And yet, Congress is either impotent or too obstinate to act, and either horn of the dilemma is a grave indictment of the competency and integrity of representative government.

While the bill under consideration is by no means satisfactory to me, I congratulate the friends of the proposition on the Military Affairs Committee on their ingenuity in reporting out any bill, however objectionable. I am aware of the difficulties under which they labored and the concessions which they were forced to make to get any action at all. I hope to see this measure materially amended on the floor to-day, however; but forsooth we fail in our efforts in this respect, we who contend for real effective and constructive Muscle Shoals legislation, with the Cove Creek Dam provided for, shall hope for relief at the hands of the conferees.

My friends, I am serious when I say to you that our experience with the Muscle Shoals debacle has been, in my judgment, a shining and outstanding example of the incompetency of the American Congress. This infant was left on our doorstep at the close of the war, and notwithstanding the fact that one hundred and fifty millions of the taxpayers' money was wrapped up in its swaddling clothes, we have steadily and stubbornly refused to take it up and give it nourishment. While we have debated and redebated this proposition, and that over a period of 12 years, a great selfish corporation has been coining huge profits on the power created at Muscle Shoals at a ridiculously infinitesimal cost. While we have been "fiddling" here in Congress, Rome has been and is still on fire.

In 1922 Henry Ford proposed to Congress to take over Muscle Shoals on a lease basis that had the active approval and support of such men as John McKenzie and that old Roman of Illinois, the late Martin Madden, but becoming impatient, after two years, at the delay and indifference of Congress, that great wizard of industry withdrew his proposal in disgust.

In 1928 Congress passed an act providing for the leasing of Muscle Shoals in the event a suitable lessee could be found, and in the alternative, Government operation; but this bill was killed by the pocket veto of President Coolidge. In 1931 Congress again passed a Muscle Shoals bill similar to that vetoed by President Coolidge, but it met the same fate at the hands of our present Chief Executive.

Thus, my colleagues, Muscle Shoals has been our prize white elephant for more than 10 years. For a decade it has been a constant bone of contention. But we have bluffed, side-stepped, pussyfooted, and alibied long enough. Unless we solve this problem now, we are going to stand discredited in the estimation of the American people, who have already become suspicious of our sincerity in dealing with this subject.

I do not mind confessing to you frankly, my friends, that my chief concern on the Muscle Shoals question is the proposed Cove Creek Dam feature. Cove Creek is in the congressional district that I have the honor to represent, and it is therefore, of course, of paramount importance to me. But I am willing for Cove Creek to stand on its own intrinsic merits. Every commission that has investigated the Muscle Shoals subject has recognized Cove Creek as an integral and indispensable part of the Muscle Shoals project, and has so recommended to the White House and to the Congress. Every measure that has been promulgated on this subject has included Cove Creek. And while the bill before us to-day in a sense embraces Cove Creek, it is absolutely innocuous so far as making any definite provision for the construction of this dam. In this bill Cove Creek is suspended like Mahomet's coffin, and no definite commitment is made for this project that has been recognized by our greatest engineers to possess the largest storage possibilities to be found anywhere in the country.

True, there is a remote suggestion that peradventure some day, perhaps, if certain contingencies arise, Congress may be invoked to provide an appropriation to build this dam, but the suggestion is so remote and chimerical as to hardly merit casual mention. Why postpone the development at Cove Creek? Every student of this subject concedes the importance of this development to the Muscle Shoals project and agrees that this dam must ultimately be constructed in the interest of navigation and flood control, irrespective of its essential value to Muscle Shoals proper.

From an economic sense and for the benefit not only of Tennessee and Alabama but for the good of the entire Mississippi Valley, the construction of the dam at Cove Creek is an absolute necessity. So why delay the proposition? There never was a more opportune time to build this dam than now. Unfortunately in this very section at this time unemployment is most acute. Within the past few weeks my attention has been repeatedly called to the very distressing and alarming unemployment conditions in the city of Knoxville, a city of 125,000 population, situated 35 miles from the proposed Cove Creek Dam. There are large bituminous-coal mining fields adjacent to Cove Creek, where, due to industrial conditions, thousands of men are out of employment. According to the appeals which I have had from Mr. T. H. Haynes, director of public welfare; Mr. E. N. Ogden, chairman of the advisory employment committee; and Mr. A. L. Chavannes, secretary-manager of the community chest, in taking care of her unemployed the financial resources of the city of Knoxville have been taxed to the point of exhaustion. These gentlemen inform me that unless something is done soon to relieve this situation that splendid city that has done such wonderful relief work already will collapse under the strain.

If only $2,000,000 were made available for the beginning of the work at Cove Creek, this dismal situation would be largely dissipated. Land values are lower in the Cove Creek area than ever before, which is another cogent argument for doing this job now.

And who, Mr. Chairman, is opposing this Muscle Shoals-Cove Creek movement that means so much to agriculture, industry, and the toiling masses generally?

By their fruits ye shall know them.

It is opposed by the great fertilizer trusts who fatten on the sweat of the overladen farmers of the land. It is opposed by the great power interests of the country, and for two reasons: First, so long as the Muscle Shoals controversy continues, the power companies can take at their own price—a price amounting to almost larceny and confiscation, the electric current generated at Muscle Shoals. And, second, so long as the Muscle Shoals problem is unsolved, these great power companies are free from the competition that will naturally follow when the Government leases or operates this gigantic plant. It is opposed by the great electric-bonding corporations who handle the stocks and bonds and debentures of the power companies of the Nation and sell them on a nice, fat, juicy commission.

What do they care if Chile is paying the operating expenses of her Government out of the profits on nitrates shipped into the United States to be used in the manufacture of fertilizer? What do they care if the farmer has to pay twice as much for his fertilizer as he should? What concern is it of theirs if electric current is costing the consumer exorbitant prices?

They are interested in making profits to be translated into luxuriant dividends. The woe of the farmer and the wail of the wage earner do not interest these capitalists who compose the boards of directors of these colossal corporations that juggle and manipulate the natural resources of this country—these God-given assets of the people.

But the argument will be made, Mr. Chairman, that we can not make an appropriation for the construction of the Cove Creek Dam at this time on account of the unsatisfactory condition of the Public Treasury. The old "balance the Budget" slogan will be resurrected and brought into the fore again to combat this important development.

No one is stronger for economy than I am, and I think a review of my votes on yesterday will demonstrate this fact. No one appreciates any more than I do the importance of balancing the Budget. But while we are balancing the Budget and practicing every possible economy, we must not overlook the suffering and distress incident to unemployment in our land. We must not place the dollar above our flesh and blood; for when we do, the days of this Republic, which for a hundred years has been the envy and admiration of the nations of the earth, are numbered.

I want to see the cost of government reduced to the lowest possible minimum consistent with efficiency. The taxpayers of this country are well within their rights when they demand this at our hands. Private industry has retrenched and the Government must follow. Salaries must be cut and useless bureaus must be abolished. But while this is going on, we must not stop our capital investment, our internal improvement, our public works, which furnish employment to a vast number of our citizens.

The Cove Creek Dam is an instance in point. Everybody recognizes that its ultimate construction is imperative and inevitable. Let us start it now when material is cheap and unemployed labor is plentiful and needy.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to this effect. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in the beginning that this is the best Muscle Shoals bill that has ever been reported by a committee to either body of Congress. However, there is one provision in the bill that I am not in accord with—that is contained in section 14, which provides for Government operation of the Muscle Shoals properties. All of the members of the Military Affairs Committee have been in agreement on this bill, except in so far as it provides for Government operation. I do not believe that any member of the committee seriously wants the Government to operate the plant, but a majority of the members have agreed to go along and vote for the bill, including the Government-operation feature, thinking, perhaps, that section 14 of the bill might be one that can be used as a cudgel over industry and force the leasing of the property.

I can not agree that it is necessary for the Seventy-second Congress to take action on a matter that might properly be brought before the Seventy-third Congress. Under the provisions of this bill the board will be given 18 months in which to lease the plant. If the board fails to find a lessee in 18 months, then the Government will have the right and authority to enter into business. I am of opinion that if a lease can not be consummated in 18 months the board should be required to report the matter back to Congress, which will be in session at that time. Eighteen months from now the Seventy-third Congress will be in session, and there is no reason why this Congress should borrow troubles in advance.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would not we have the same thing right over again if the bill is brought back?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I can not answer that question, but if I am here in the Seventy-third Congress, I will still be opposed to Government operation. [Applause.]

There is one other objectionable feature of the bill, as I see it, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to cure it.

Section 3, page 2, of the bill, provides that the board is authorized to provide suitable offices and office equipment, employ and fix compensation of officers, employees, attorneys and agents, as it shall deem necessary for the transaction of the business of the board.

I am going to offer an amendment at the proper time limiting the salaries of all officers, employees, attorneys, and agents of the board to $10,000 per annum.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. If the bill does not regulate the appointment of the board, it seems to me it should be amended so that no member of the board can be a member or stockholder or official of any firm that leases Muscle Shoals. I hope the gentleman will think of that in his amendment and provide for it.

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. In answer to the gentleman, I will state that if section 14 is eliminated from the bill, I will be delighted to support it in toto. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADKINS].

Mr. ADKINS. Mr. Chairman, this Muscle Shoals proposition as all know has been under discussion for a long time. I have not paid very much attention to this bill. I did to the bill that was vetoed by the President some time back, and from the beginning of the Muscle Shoals controversy I have made a study, and read what was appearing in print here before the various committees in Washington. I made up my mind that the chief thing that was wrong, the greatest hindrance to Congress in making a disposition of Muscle Shoals, was the controversy that existed as to who should control it. After looking over all this evidence which has been submitted with regard to Muscle Shoals I think I understand it fairly well. On the one hand, there was a great power company soliciting me to go out and make sentiment for the taking over of the plant by the power company. On the other hand, here was a group of real-estate men soliciting me to go out and make sentiment to let Henry Ford take it over so that they could sell the real estate at good prices. I turned them both down. I said, "I do not like the tactics of either one of you." Here is a great property which in an emergency was brought into being by the Government during the war. Some disposition should be made of it, and the contention of these two interests as to who should control in my opinion has been the stumbling block in making disposition of Muscle Shoals ever since. Some disposition should be made of it. The Government should not make this large investment of money for a plant to be only a matter of controversy for session after session of Congress. After looking over the thing, my opinion finally is that the proposition vetoed by President Coolidge is one of the best that we have ever had.

As a matter of fact, the question of fertilizer is becoming more acute as time goes on. A provision was made in that—and I presume it is in this bill, although I have not read it—that while experiments with the manufacture of nitrates, fertilizers, may go on, at the same time, in time of war, it can be turned over and used for war purposes, and we will always have a laboratory there which could be taken over by the Government in time of war. It seems to me that is a good disposition of it. As a matter of fact, that was vetoed and got out of the way. The fertilizer proposition, whether it is a wise one or not, is a very acute one in the South. The proposition comes up every session, and it is growing. As far as I am concerned, I have been using what little influence I have to minimize it. We loaned money for fertilizer and have always lost a little money. Let us make that fertilizer down there and do away with some of the public expense that is growing on us year after year.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman has stated that he has not read the bill, for his information I will state that there is a clause in the bill authorizing the recapture of the plant at any time in the interest of national defense.

Mr. ADKINS. I presumed there would be. I do not think that this committee in its wisdom would fail to improve the form of the bill each time it comes before the Congress. I am not in favor of Government operation of business, but here we have a very definite proposition. Take the question of the mails, for instance. The Government operates the mail, although a private enterprise probably could do it more cheaply than we do.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADKINS. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The Government operates the mail at an expense of over $100,000,000, which it turns back to the newspapers and the periodicals every year.

Mr. ADKINS. That is all true. For certain reasons we do operate the mail. For certain reasons the Congress in its wisdom built the Muscle Shoals Dam to make nitrates. It is not because Congress thought the Government could do it cheaply, but it was to meet a necessity. Regardless of the controversy that exists, I expect to vote for Muscle Shoals until we finally dispose of it.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADKINS. Yes.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Is the gentleman in favor at this time of undertaking an expense that may well run into a hundred million dollars in view of the distressed condition of the country and his own district?

Mr. JAMES. The bill does not provide any such thing.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. That is a question of veracity. I say it does. The gentleman has a right to his view, and I have a right to my view. I say that it does.

Mr. ADKINS. When you gentlemen get through I will say in reply to what the two gentleman contend that I know that we have spent a lot of money down there, and I should think this committee would take into consideration, and no doubt has, the condition of the country and the situation that exists there, and, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to take their judgment and vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. LOVETTE.]

Mr. LOVETTE. Mr. Chairman, there is no proposition that is of such vital interest to the people of the country as the settlement of Muscle Shoals. For more than 10 years it has been debated in Congress and through the newspapers, until the people are quite familiar with its history and with the contention of each group who are advocating some sort of action. The great question has been whether the Government will own and operate Muscle Shoals or whether it will sell or lease it to private interests. Everyone agrees, regardless of what his views may be as to how it shall be disposed of, that something should be done; that this great enterprise should not remain idle any longer. The long delay in putting it into operation has caused a general feeling of disappointment and with thousands of people a feeling of disgust. It is hard for the average man to understand such delay and to understand why we can not make progress with an enterprise which is capable of bringing such beneficent results. The people have heard so much about it and are so familiar with both sides of the controversy that they seem to understand it, but for Congress it seems to be an intricate problem. It is earnestly hoped by thousands of people, not only in the South but all over the Nation, that this session of Congress will dispose of it in a way that will be beneficial to the country.

Against Government ownership and operation of this enterprise we always have the argument that the Government should not go in business in competition with its citizens. As a general proposition that argument is good, and generally I am not in favor of Government operation of public utilities; but there are exceptions to all cases, and Muscle Shoals is a notable exception. When we consider that Muscle Shoals is a natural monopoly and must necessarily always be so; that the potential energies of this great river belong to the people; that it is proven that great benefits, profits, and blessings are tied up in it, and that, like Tennyson's Brook, they will flow on forever, it seems that it would be poor business, poor economy, and poor policy to turn it over to the power trusts or any other combination of capital to reap the golden benefits. That is especially true in view of the fact that those who favor private ownership or private operation have no offer to purchase or no offer to lease, for an adequate consideration, from any source whatever.

We have spent in round numbers $150,000,000 and have carried the investment for more than 10 years. That sum, at 4 per cent interest, would amount to $6,000,000 per year. So that we may consider we have an investment of more than $200,000,000 in Muscle Shoals, and yet those who propose to sell it or lease it want to put it on the market at a time when we are in the midst of a great financial depression, at a time when all markets are paralyzed and when business is stagnant everywhere. It would be disastrous to the people, their rights, and their interests to make such a sacrifice. It would go for a song, either in a sale or a lease, and the only bidder that we could hope to have would be the power companies, and that without any serious competition. That, however, is what the power companies want, and that is what they have been working for and lobbying for, and that is why the original plan of the building and operation of Muscle Shoals has been thwarted for the past 10 years.

Let us examine some of the advantages of Government operation: First, we own the plant. It was built to provide for our Nation's defense in time of war and produce cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of the country in time of peace. When it was built there was no intention or purpose, express or implied, of leasing it. It has been decided by the Government Board of Inquiry, who were experts and who made an exhaustive examination of the whole subject, that there is a great saving in the manufacture of fertilizer, and they place the figure at 43 per cent of all the fertilizer used and that saving, applied to 20 Eastern States, which were regarded as within shipping distance of Muscle Shoals, amounts to the enormous sum of $100,000,000 a year, or a round billion in the 10 years that our Congress has been debating this subject.

If, in these days of financial distress and hard times, our farmers had this billion dollars in their pockets, with a prospect of saving another billion in the next 10 years, there would not be so much talk of hard times in the country. It would do much to relieve the distress that is so prevalent over our land at this time. But that "water has gone over the wheel" and we must look to the future. If it is true that there is a saving of 43 per cent on fertilizer alone, and if it is true that saving amounts to $100,000,000 per year to the farmers, it would seem that the Government, which has the responsibility of bringing the greatest prosperity and happiness to the people, would do well to embark in such an enterprise. There is one lesson we must learn in this country, if we have not already done so, and that is that the farming industry is the basic foundation of our entire economic system.

If the farmers prosper, business in all lines will flourish; if the farmer fails, all other business must fail. There is no possible chance for us to get relief from our present financial troubles until we can first get the farmers out of the doldrums in which they are to-day. Anything that can be done by the Government, lawfully and constitutionally, to relieve the farm situation is justifiable and should be done in the interest not only of the farmer but in the interest of all business. Another serious proposition which confronts us to-day is our widespread unemployment. That, taken with the farm problem, makes it all the more imperative that something should be done as soon as possible to relieve the situation. The Southland is too great and too rich in its natural resources to be neglected by the Nation. We can not afford it, neither can the Nation afford to neglect a section that is so rich. It has been blessed as no other section—it has been called "the Ruhr of America"—it is a veritable Eden, a garden spot. We have iron, coal, timber, cotton, wool, and tobacco. We have the greatest diversity of agriculture and horticulture, and the greatest water power in the world. But these great resources are more or less dormant.

From a historic standpoint we have a glorious past. It was southern statesmen and soldiers who were the leaders in laying the foundation of the Republic. Under Washington we established the thirteen original Colonies. Under Jackson we acquired Florida. Under the leadership of Jefferson we acquired the Louisiana Purchase, comprising all of the great Mississippi Valley. Under Polk, Houston, and Crockett we acquired Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, and all of the great Southwest. Under Clarke and Lewis we reached out to the great Northwest and took possession of Washington and Oregon. Under the leadership of Andrew Johnson we came into possession of that great rich territory of Alaska, all acquired by the valor and statesmanship and under the leadership of southern statesmen, and all taken together comprises and covers the entire map of the United States.

With all of our history, with all of our resources, and our climate the South has been neglected for the past 50 years. We have been in an unfavorable political situation. When one of our great parties was in power the South was neglected because the party in power had it already and it required nothing to hold it in a political way. When the other party was in power they regarded the South somewhat as an alien, expected no political favors and gave none, and as a natural result of this situation we have occupied the unfavorable position of the average stepchild. Most of the favors of our Government have gone to what is known as pivotal States, where the political tide ebbs and flows and where it is necessary to do something to keep them in line.

We have a fair sample of the neglect and waste which is going on at Muscle Shoals at the present time. The contract was made when financial conditions were much more favorable than they are to-day, and yet the present price of electric power to the Alabama Power Co. is only 2 mills per kilowatt-hour. This contract with the Alabama Power Co. only takes about one-tenth of the available power, and the balance is allowed to go to waste. It is little wonder that Muscle Shoals has become a national question and almost a national scandal. The people have cried out; they have called on the Congress, the chambers of commerce, boards of trade, civic and business organizations of the country, have appealed in vain to the Congress to do something with Muscle Shoals.

Our hopes have been raised many times, and when it appeared that we were almost to the goal, that the proposition would be settled, some politician has hurled a monkey wrench into the machinery, and it was all over for another session. If the Government would turn loose the product of Muscle Shoals, build the Cove Creek Dam, and put the great energies of this great enterprise into action, if they would permit the profits and benefits to percolate into the pockets of the people, instead of the coffers of the Power Trusts, it would bring an era of prosperity to the country such as we have not heretofore experienced.

It is nothing short of tragedy to see our Government, which was instituted to bring prosperity to the people, neglect this great opportunity. It will be far better to spend money operating Muscle Shoals, to build the Cove Creek Dam and such other dams as are necessary for the successful operation of this enterprise, with a prospect of profit, income, and new business, than to spend great sums in public buildings in order to relieve unemployment. It is all right to build public buildings, and they doubtless are needed, and it is a fine time for the Government to expand its public-buildings program, but the point is that while we are doing that we can also spend money in the establishment of the Muscle Shoals proposition which will not only give substantial aid to the unemployed but will go on indefinitely relieving unemployment. In other words, it is permanent aid to unemployment, as distinguished from temporary aid.

It is pathetic to see the waters of a mighty river run complacently by laden with power capable of yielding great riches to the people, to whom it belongs, and at the same time see the farmers of the country using a large per cent of the proceeds of their toil to pay exorbitant fertilizer bills. While these conditions exist we will always have the farm problem; and while temporary measures of relief are commendable, it is so much better to seek permanent relief. The saving on fertilizer heretofore mentioned will go a long way toward permanent relief.

Another great benefit to be derived from the Government operation of Muscle Shoals is the production of cheaper power. This is an electrical age, and when the power is made available at a reasonable cost it will be used in great quantities. The attraction of capital and establishment of the industries that would follow such development would be almost incalculable. It will develop other great natural resources where electric power is needed and demanded, and will furnish employment to thousands. Five hundred million dollars would be a conservative estimate of such capital so attracted to the power development of Muscle Shoals. In other words, the people would capitalize the great river and all of its rights and benefits. They would keep control and utilize all of its profits.

Governments are instituted for the purpose of bringing the greatest prosperity to the greatest number. Our Government was instituted for that purpose. On the whole, that has been its tendency. It is a great Government and a great system, and yet the fact remains that there has been too much concentration of wealth in the hands of the few at the expense of the many.

That should not be true. It should be the duty of all those in authority and in a position to control, to see as far as possible that every man stands equal before the law and has an equal chance in the world. It will be too late to cure the situation when we are owned, governed, and controlled by a few plutocrats and when our Nation is made up of a horde of peasants groping in poverty and want. It would be a sad day for us if that time should come; and if that should happen, then we may expect to see a fertile field in which the seeds of communism and bolshevism will germinate and flourish.

Government operation of Muscle Shoals, the building of the Cove Creek Dam and such other dams as are necessary on the Tennessee River will be a great aid to navigation and flood control. It is hard to estimate or calculate the value of this item. It will afford a great waterway through a rich and populous section of the country, thereby enhancing our financial and commercial status for all time to come. It will hold the winter waters and afford great relief to those who live in the Mississippi Valley and who have suffered so much from floods in recent years. We have spent great sums on the relief of flood sufferers, and no doubt will be called upon to spend much more as the years go by. We have an opportunity now in the program which has been laid out for Muscle Shoals to hold back the flood waters and at the same time convert them into a substantial profit for the benefit of the people and also make of the Tennessee River a great waterway. It should be done without any further delay.

If those who favor private operation could show or if the Government could have demonstrated in the last 10 years that it could sell or lease the Muscle Shoals plant to good advantage, there would be some basis for the argument for private leasing. Having totally failed in that respect up to the present, it seems that it is time to try something else.

Even now if the proponents of private operation could exhibit some offer to purchase or lease the plant on terms that would forever safeguard the people's rights and interests, that would guarantee that the price of electricity would always be reasonable, that fertilizer would be manufactured at a price at which it is now known that it can be done, if flood control and navigation could be taken care of in a contract that is secure and binding, the people would be satisfied. That is all that is required or demanded. Until that can be done the Government had better keep its hand on the switchboard.

We should not be frightened and deterred by the cry of "government in business." The Government is already in business; it already owns the property; it has invested vast sums of the people's money in it. It is vitally interested for our defense and has a perfect right to be in business for that purpose. It is not only the right but the duty of the Government to demonstrate that fertilizer can be manufactured for about one-half the present price, and, in the interest of farm relief, to actually manufacture it unless it can be otherwise obtained at a reasonable price. It is the business of the Government to protect the people against disastrous floods. It is the business of the Government to provide farm relief.

There can be no objection to the Government going into business or staying in business in the development of Muscle Shoals. Where one citizen would suffer injury there would be millions to enjoy its profits and blessings.

The issues are plain—the power companies want one thing and the people want another. So far they can not agree; they are in deadlock. We have the hope that the people will finally triumph. They will still have representatives who will champion their cause. These great resources will not be turned over to a great trust, whose tentacles reach out octopuslike from ocean to ocean. They shall not manacle us. They shall not bind our posterity hand and foot. They may maintain a great and powerful lobby; they have the money, which they have squeezed from the people as the result of exorbitant prices, but with all of that "they shall not pass." [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, General CHIPERFIELD. [Applause.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, properly or improperly, correctly or incorrectly, the Congress of the United States stands under a general indictment by the people of this land for wicked and unwarranted extravagance. I am not entirely in sympathy with that view. I realize that there is a fixed charge of approximately $2,000,000,000 which the Government of the United States is under honorable obligation to appropriate before it can get to the place where it can use any discretion with reference to any appropriation.

I think the day will soon come when the people of the United States will have a much better understanding of this situation than they appear to have at the present time, inflamed as they frequently are by propaganda, and in many instances by more or less unfair attacks emanating from a partisan press. However, I submit to this House in all candor and seriousness whether or not, if correct in the contention that we advance, there will not be a great additional Government expense incurred by the enactment of this legislation if it should be undertaken at this time and under present conditions. That is not a political question. I have listened with great interest, and as I have said, with considerable sympathy, to the efforts that have been made by the Economy Committee for the purpose of reducing governmental expenses.

It occurred to me then, as it doubtless occurred to you, that it was a pitiable sight, perhaps born of necessity, to see the effort made day after day to meet increased expenses of the Government by taking and cutting down the pay of the underpaid employees of the Government of the United States. Is it not an exemplification of the old maxim of "saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole"? Is it not the wrong place to commence any real economy?

I am well aware that if necessity exists these workers would be willing to yield, providing a general effort was made to economize; but I am also well aware that unless there is some imperative and controlling necessity that will force upon the Government of the United States the undertaking of this large potential obligation and this great expenditure, which will be required if this bill becomes a law, it is not wise to engage in it at this time.

Mr. CARTER of California. Will the gentleman yield at this time?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes; briefly.

Mr. CARTER of California. I notice section 15 on page 18 authorizes all appropriations necessary. Can the gentleman give any idea of what the amount necessary would be, provided this board operates the project?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes. I have made a very careful estimate, and, based upon the testimony before our committee and based upon the facts and figures set forth in the President's veto message, it is my deliberate judgment that it would come to at least $100,000,000. My esteemed friend the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] takes sharp issue with that proposition, and I do not criticize him for his view; but, based upon the evidence in this case, as shown in the hearings before our committee, with such ability to understand and analyze it as I possess, it seems to me the figure I have given of $100,000,000 is within the range of probability and likelihood.

I want to call the attention of the House very briefly to the situation that now exists at Muscle Shoals. We have there the Wilson Dam, a hydroelectric power unit, which has a total capacity of about 260,000 horsepower. We have the Sheffield steam power plant. We have nitrate plant No.

1. We have nitrate plant No. 2. We have about 4,000 acres of land. We have a quarry that has been opened in connection with those works. We have expended under the guise of national defense approximately $140,000,000 for the purpose of building and perfecting this plant.

The condition of plant No. 1 to-day is that it is entirely obsolete and could not be used for any constructive purpose.

Plant No. 2 is so obsolete that if it were scaled on a standard of 100 in efficiency it would not rank over 50 per cent at the present time. This plant has for years stood idle, with certain exceptions that I will mention, from the time it was erected until the present time.

In plant No. 1 there has never been produced one pound of nitrogen or any equivalent for nitrogen.

In plant No. 2 there was produced years ago, experimentally, 1,600 tons of fixed nitrogen, that was available, perhaps, for either ammunition or for fertilizer.

We have had as revenue ever since this plant was constructed the sum of about $7,500,000. At the present time for the water power we are getting substantially $560,000 per year, with a maintenance cost of $260,000 per year, and for the steam plant about $1,800 a year. It formerly was a larger sum, practically $110,000 per year. While the very distinguished gentleman from the Appropriations Committee, for whom I have great admiration, made the statement that it was necessary to expend $260,000 for care of this plant, in private conversation afterwards very generously he said he meant for the maintenance and operation of the hydraulic plant from which the Government is receiving revenue.

As a matter of fact, it now takes $82,000 for the care and protection of this property per annum.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. In just a moment. Mr. Chairman, in that connection I want to incorporate a few figures from the power report for 1931 of the gentlemen appointed by the Governors of Alabama and Georgia as a commission to investigate and report upon this matter, which will be illuminating if included in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PROJECT

As a full understanding of the Muscle Shoals project—its location, physical aspects, and legislative history—was essential to the commission in arriving at the foregoing conclusions, it is considered desirable to review the subject.

While the Muscle Shoals project is essentially a product of the World War, it is a part of the development of the Tennessee River which was visualized many years ago and has been the subject matter of surveys conducted periodically during the last 100 years. The area known as Muscle Shoals is a shallows located in the vicinity of the towns of Florence and Sheffield, Ala., on the Tennessee River. These shoals are approximately 37 miles in extent, and are said to have derived their name from the muscular effort required to push water craft upstream in the early days.

The Tennessee River flows in a southerly direction through the eastern section of Tennessee, and upon entering the State of Alabama flows westwardly across the northern section of that State and then turns north into and through the western section of Tennessee into the Ohio River. Between Chattanooga, Tenn., and Paducah, Ky., where the Tennessee River joins the Ohio River, a distance of approximately 460 miles, the fall measures about 340 feet. Nearly one-third of this entire fall takes place at Muscle Shoals.

EARLY HISTORY OF MUSCLE SHOALS

The early history of the area is well described in the following extract from part 3, subpart 1, hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, on H. R. 16396 and H. R. 16614:

"The history of the efforts of the United States Government to improve the 37-mile stretch of the Tennessee River between the head of Browns Island and the site of the present Florence Bridge, known as the Muscle Shoals, had its official beginning on December 7, 1824, when President James Monroe in his annual message to Congress presented the annual report of the Secretary of War, John C. Calhoun, recommending a survey of Muscle Shoals as one of the three great works which he regarded as most important for the improvement of transportation conditions in the United States.

"As a result of these recommendations a preliminary examination was ordered on March 12, 1827, and in the report dated May 14, 1828, a lateral canal around the shoals with 16 locks was recommended. These locks were each to be 32 feet wide, 120 feet long, and of 5-foot lift.

"The work was done by the State of Alabama under these plans in 1831, using funds from the sale of a part of a grant of 400,000 acres of public lands donated by the United States. Before the canal was completed, however, it was discovered that these 16 locks were only the middle link in the canal system required, and in 1838, after $644,000 had been expended and the work had been virtually completed, the boats still had to wait for a rise in the river in order to get through. Recommendations were therefore made in 1838 for $750,303 more in order to complete the requisite canal system, including Elk River Shoals, Big Muscle Shoals, and Little Muscle Shoals. Congress, however, declined to award this amount, but appropriated $56,769.33 to complete the original canal of 16 locks covering only the middle section of the shoals. Having no provision for its maintenance, however, the canal fell into ruin.

"Thirty-eight years later, in 1872, the United States engineers submitted a plan for the enlargement and repair of the old canal at a cost of something over $4,000,000. The locks were to be 60 feet wide, 300 feet long, and of 6-foot depth over the miter sills. There were 27 locks required, and there were to be canals around the Elk River Shoals, Big Muscle Shoals, and Little Muscle Shoals, respectively. In 1899 the project was modified, reducing the number of locks to 11 and substituting open-channel work for the canal around Little Muscle Shoals. The plan as outlined in 1877 was completed in 1890 at a total cost of $3,191,726.50. It was in two sections, one with two locks along the south bank of the river around Elk River Shoals, and the other with nine locks along the north bank of the river around a portion of Big Muscle Shoals. Between these two portions of the canal, however, is what is known as Nancys Reef, which the Government has improved by means of certain open-channel work, but the minimum depth here in low water is less than 2 feet, and commercial navigation at times of low water has never been practicable.

"In 1891 a board of engineers submitted a project for the extension of the canal around Little Muscle Shoals at an estimated cost of approximately $3,000,000. This project was never acted upon favorably by Congress, with the result that there never has been built around Muscle Shoals a navigation canal which could be considered complete according to standards proposed in 1838.

"Power development: It has long been recognized that there was a large undeveloped water power at Muscle Shoals which could be made available if the river could be improved by means of a slack-water system of locks and dams. Application was made to the Federal Government for a permit to build such dams in 1903, but the permit was not granted.

"Between 1905 and 1912 a number of examinations and reports were made upon the improvement of the Muscle Shoals section with a view to securing more effective improvement, and in 1912 the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors requested the Board of Engineers to review all previous reports on this section of the Tennessee River and to submit an estimate based upon a navigation improvement which would conserve the water power.

"The board proceeded to make further studies and investigations and finally concluded by asking for bids for the lease of the water power. Two bids were received; that of the Muscle Shoals Hydroelectric Power Co., offering to lease proposed Dams Nos. 2 and 3 for 100 years, was considered the more advantageous to the United States. It required an expenditure on the part of the Government estimated at $18,701,000.

"Nitrogen fixation: The proposal of the power company, although approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, was not accepted, as the Engineer Board recommended that 'if Congress does not adopt the project at once it is at least advisable to make an appropriation of $150,000 to provide for the completion of the detailed surveys, foundation borings, and the preparation of plans * * *.' The appropriation of $150,000 was included in the rivers and harbors act of 1915.

"The survey and plans were promptly made and submitted to the House on June 28, 1916, accompanied by a report, which, while recommending the provisional acceptance of the power company's offer, also recommended that no action be taken thereon until it had been determined whether the Muscle Shoals power would be required by the Government for the operation of a nitrate plant for which Congress had appropriated the sum of $20,000,000 in section 124 of the national defense act of 1916."

NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The construction of the present Muscle Shoals project was authorized by section 124 of the national defense act of June 2, 1916, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 124. Nitrate supply: The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if in his judgment such means is best and cheapest, such site or sites, upon any navigable or nonnavigable river, or rivers, or upon the public lands, as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment or other means than water power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

"The President is authorized to lease, purchase, or acquire, by condemnation, gift, grant, or devise, such lands and rights of way as may be necessary for the construction and operation of such plants, and to take from any lands of the United States, or to purchase or acquire by condemnation materials, minerals, and processes, patented or otherwise, necessary for the construction and operation of such plants and for the manufacture of such products.

"The products of such plants shall be used by the President for military and naval purposes to the extent that he may deem necessary, and any surplus which he shall determine is not required shall be sold and disposed of by him under such regulations as he may prescribe.

"The President is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such officers, agents, or agencies as may in his discretion be necessary to enable him to carry out the purposes herein specified, and to authorize and require such officers, agents, or agencies to perform any and all of the duties imposed upon him by the provisions hereof.

"The sum of $20,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, to enable the President of the United States to carry out the purposes herein provided for.

"The plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital.

"In order to raise the money appropriated by this act and necessary to carry its provisions into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the President of the United States, may issue and sell, or use for such purpose or construction hereinabove authorized, any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909, the act of February 4, 1910, and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, to a total amount not to exceed $20,000,000: Provided, That any Panama Canal bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable, and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909, not exceeding 50 years."

MUSCLE SHOALS PROPERTIES

The Muscle Shoals properties comprise approximately 4,000 acres of land located at and near Sheffield, Ala. Included in the project are nitrate plants Nos. 1 and 2, the Sheffield steam plant, and Wilson Dam, together with all buildings and other appurtenances thereto.

NITRATE PLANT NO. 1

Nitrate plant No. 1 is located at Sheffield, Ala. The plant covers approximately 1,839 acres of land. It was constructed for the purpose of manufacturing nitrate by the synthetic-ammonia process which is a modified Haber process. It includes a power plant of sufficient capacity for its independent operation. The capacity of the plant is about 22,000 tons of ammonium nitrate per annum. This plant was authorized on September 28, 1917, and was placed in a stand-by condition in January, 1919. The plant buildings are all of steel-frame construction, with walls of brick or asbestos-protected metal.

NITRATE PLANT NO. 2

Nitrate plant No. 2 is located at the town of Muscle Shoals, Ala., about 4 miles upstream from plant No. 1 and just across the river from the town of Florence, Ala. The plant covers approximately 2,307 acres of land. It was designed for the production of ammonium nitrate by the cyanamide process, and has a capacity of approximately 110,000 tons per annum. The entire plant buildings are of steel-frame construction with brick walls or corrugated-metal walls and substantial roofings of various types. This plant has remained in stand-by condition since its successful test run of two weeks ending January 25, 1919. Connected with this plant is a steam plant known as Sheffield steam plant. The general characteristics of the Sheffield steam plant are as follows:

Boiler plant: 12 Babcock & Wilcox boilers, 1,507 brake horsepower each, in 4 rows of 3 each; stoker fired, 275 pounds pressure, 175° F. superheat. Boilers designed for operation at 150 per cent rating. Boiler house planned for an addition of four boilers.

Power plant: One high-pressure and two low-pressure Westinghouse turbo-generators of 23,530 kilovolt-amperes each. Generator house designed for one 33,333 kilovolt-amperes turbo-generator for which foundation was included with original construction.

Average fuel consumption: 1.67 pounds per kilowatt-hour in 1925.

Transformer station: 40,000 kilowatts in 13,000/110,000 volts transformer equipment.

WILSON DAM

Wilson Dam (Dam No. 2) is the principal navigation power dam of the project. It is a monolithic concrete structure located about 3 miles above proposed site of Dam No. 1 and is about 4,500 feet long and 100 feet high. The entire structure contains about 1,250,000 yards of masonry, making the structure the largest masonry dam in the world. The general characteristics of the hydroplant functioning therewith are as follows:

Power house: Designed to permit of an ultimate installation of 18 units.

Present installation: 4 units, 25,000 kilovolt-amperes each; 4 units, 32,500 kilovolt-amperes each; total, 230,000 kilovolt-amperes, 184,000 kilowatts.

Transformer station: 260,000 kilovolt-amperes in 12,000/110,000 volts, or 12,000/154,000 volts transformer equipment.

Primary power (estimated): 50,000 kilowatts.

Primary energy (estimated): 438,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum.

Secondary energy (average): 937,000,000 kilowatt-hours per annum.

Capacity available, eight months (average): 155,000 kilowatts.

Energy available, eight months (average): 1,200,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

The values of the properties at Muscle Shoals, the available power, and the operating costs of the plants are succinctly stated in the message of the President to the Senate, dated March 3, 1931.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF MUSCLE SHOALS

A brief legislative history of the Muscle Shoals project is as follows: After the armistice the Federal Government pursued the policy of disposing of its excess war equipment. Long before the Wilson Dam was completed plans were considered for its disposal and also the disposal of the nitrate plants. During the years following the war and until the Seventieth Congress, various proposals were submitted for the disposition of the Muscle Shoals properties. Among these was the offer of Henry Ford for the purchase of the properties. This offer attained wide publicity, but no agreement was reached between the Government and Mr. Ford. Later, other proposals for leasing Muscle Shoals were recommended for passage or were passed by the House or Senate without receiving approval of Congress. Among these was the Underwood bill, authorizing the President to lease the plants, the American Cyanamid proposal, and the joint proposal of a group of southern power companies.

On December 19, 1927, Senator NORRIS introduced Senate Joint Resolution 46, which provided for Government operation of the Muscle Shoals properties. This bill was passed by both Houses of Congress, but was not acted upon by the President before the close of the Seventieth Congress.

In the Seventy-first Congress a bill substantially similar to Senate Joint Resolution 46 was introduced by Senator NORRIS, which bill bore the number S. J. Res. 49. This bill was passed by both Houses of Congress and forwarded to the President for approval. On March 3, 1931, the President vetoed the bill. The text of the veto message of the President returning the bill without his approval is quoted in full, as follows:

"PRESIDENT HOOVER'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

"To the Senate:

"I return herewith, without my approval, Senate Joint Resolution 49, 'To provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of the Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama; to authorize the letting of the Muscle Shoals properties under certain conditions; and for other purposes.'

"This bill proposes the transformation of the war plant at Muscle Shoals, together with important expansions, into a permanently operated Government institution for the production and distribution of power and the manufacture of fertilizers.

"Disregarding for the moment the question of whether the Federal Government should or can manage a power and fertilizer manufacturing business, we should examine this proposal from the point of view of the probabilities of success as a business, even if efficiently managed. Such an analysis involves a consideration of the capital invested, the available commercial power, the operating costs, the revenue to be expected, and the profit and loss involved from this set-up. The figures and estimates given herein are furnished by the War Department upon the authority of the Chief of Engineers.

"VALUE OF THE OLD PLANT AND FURTHER CAPITAL OUTLAY REQUIRED

"The following properties and proposed extensions are embraced in the proposed project:

"(a) Wilson Dam and its hydroelectric equipment, valued at $37,000,000, being the original cost of $47,000,000 less $10,000,000 applicable to navigation.

"(b) The steam power plant at Muscle Shoals, valued at $5,000,000, being a reduction for depreciation of $7,000,000 from the original cost of $12,000,000.

"(c) Proposed further additions to the electrical plant at Muscle Shoals costing $9,000,000.

"(d) Proposed construction of Cove Creek Dam with hydroelectric plant with transmission line to Wilson Dam, $41,000,000, of which $5,000,000 may be attributed to flood control and improvement of navigation, or, say, $37,000,000.

"(e) Proposed construction of transmission lines for wholesale distribution of power within the transmission area, $40,000,000.

"(f) Nitrate plants, quarries, etc., at Muscle Shoals which originally cost $68,555,000 but upon which no valuation is placed at present.

"The total valuation of the old property to be taken over for the power portion of the project is therefore $42,000,000 after the above deductions from original cost. The new expenditures from the Treasury applicable to the power business are estimated at $90,000,000, less $5,000,000 which might be attributable to flood control, or a total of $127,000,000 of capital in the electrical project. This sum would be further increased by accumulated interest charge during construction. As shown later on, several millions further would be required for modernizing the nitrate plants. The total requirement of new money from the Federal Treasury for the project is probably $100,000,000, even if no further extensions were undertaken.

"AMOUNT OF POWER AVAILABLE FROM THIS PROJECT

"Assuming the additional power given by the construction of the Cove Creek Dam and the use of steam power for five months in the dry season each year, and taking the average load factor from experience in that region, about 1,300,000,000 kilowatt-hours of continuous power could be produced annually. Considered as a general power business, a portion of this must be held in reserve to protect consumers, leaving a net of about 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually of salable power. This amount would be somewhat increased if a large proportion of 24-hour load were applied to fertilizer manufacture.

"The secondary power for a period of less than seven months in the year is not regarded as of any present commercial value.

"OPERATING COSTS

"The following is the estimated annual overhead and operating cost of the electrical end of the project, including the steam plant necessary to convert 7-month secondary power into primary power as stated above:

Interest at 4 per cent per annum on capital of $127,000,000	$5,080,000
Amortization	1,890,000
Operating and maintenance cost of hydroelectric plant	775,000
Operating and maintenance cost of steam plant	850,000
Operating and maintenance cost of transmission lines	550,000
Total	9,145,000

"The estimated cost of production and distribution is, therefore, about 9.1 mills per kilowatt-hour. If only part of the transmission lines were constructed, it would decrease capital and operating charges but would not comply with the requirement of equitable distribution through the transmission area.

"ESTIMATED GROSS INCOME

"The purpose of the bill is to provide production and wholesale distribution of surplus power and to give preference to States, municipalities, and cooperative organizations. It further provides that the policy of the Government must be to distribute the surplus power equitably amongst States, counties, and municipalities within transmission distance of Muscle Shoals and provides for the construction of transmission lines to effect this purpose. Such a transmission system for wholesale purposes only is estimated to cost $40,000,000. If it is proposed to sell power at retail to householders, then there would need be a great increase in the estimates of capital outlay and operation costs for such distribution.

"The average gross income of the power companies in that territory, including retail as well as wholesale power, is about 12 mills per kilowatt-hour. This includes retail residential power averaging something over 50 mills per kilowatt-hour. Miscellaneous industrial power realizes about 10 mills per kilowatt-hour. The power sold wholesale to other companies and those engaged in municipal distribution averages about 7.2 mills per kilowatt-hour.

"It is impossible to compute Muscle Shoals income under this project upon a basis which includes retail power sales, as this is a project for wholesale distribution only. It is impossible to compute it upon the basis of miscellaneous industrial rates, as sales for industrial purposes from Muscle Shoals would presumably be mainly for manufacture of fertilizers, and it would not be possible to average 10 mills per kilowatt-hour. A rate of not over 2 mills would be a large charge for such power. While the load factor would be improved by large use for this purpose, the net result, however, would be to diminish the gross income below the above rates from municipal and miscellaneous industrial services.

"Assuming that the whole 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours should be sold to municipalities or other power distributors, it would on the basis of the realizations of the private companies of 7.2 mills yield a gross annual income to this project of about $7,200,000, or a loss upon this basis of nearly $2,000,000 annually. This territory is now supplied with power, and to obtain such an income it would be necessary to take the customers of the present power companies. To secure these customers it would be necessary to undercut the rates now made by them. It is difficult to estimate the extent to which it would be necessary to go in such rate cutting in order to secure the business. In any event it would, of course, diminish estimated income and increase the losses.

"It is obvious that any estimate of income contains a large element of conjecture, as the proportions of industrial and municipal load can not be foretold. But any estimate of the income of the project as set up by this legislation will show a loss.

"FERTILIZER MANUFACTURE

"The plants at Muscle Shoals were originally built for production of nitrates for use in war explosives. I am advised by the War Department that the very large development in the United States by private enterprise in the manufacture of synthetic nitrogen now affords an ample supply covering any possible requirements of war. It is, therefore, unnecessary to maintain this plant for any such purposes.

"This bill provides that the President for a period of 12 months may negotiate a lease of the nitrate plants for fertilizer manufacture under detailed limitations, but in failure to make such a lease the bill makes it mandatory upon the Government to manufacture nitrogen fertilizers at Muscle Shoals by the employment of existing facilities or by modernizing existing plants or by any other process. I may state at once that the limitations put upon lessees in the bill are such that this provision is of no genuine importance. Inquiries have been made of the most responsible and experienced concerns that might possibly undertake such lease, and they have replied that under the conditions set out in the bill it is entirely impractical for them to make any bid. The leasing provision is, therefore, of no utility; it may at once be dismissed. In consequence the project we have to consider under this bill is the manufacture of fertilizers by the Federal Government.

"The Department of Agriculture reports that these plants are now more or less obsolete and that with power at even 2 mills per kilowatt-hour, with proper charges included, could not produce the products for which they are constructed as cheaply as these products are now being sold in the wholesale markets. Therefore it would be necessary to modernize the equipment at an unknown cost in millions. There is no evidence as to the costs of nitrogen fertilizers by the newer equipment, and there is, therefore, no basis upon which to estimate the results to the Government from entering upon such a competitive business. It can, however, be stated with assurance that no chemical industry, with its constantly changing technology and equipment, its intricate problems of sales and distribution, can be successfully conducted by the Government.

"PROPOSED ADMINISTRATION

"The first essential of all business is competent management. Although the bill provides for the management by three directors, the Congress must from the nature of our institutions be the real board of directors and with all the disadvantages to a technical business that arise from a multitude of other duties, changing personnel, changing policies, and regional interests. These three directors are to have political qualifications, as it is stipulated that not more than two shall be of one political party. They are to receive $50 per diem, but are limited to $7,500 each for the first year and $5,000 annually thereafter. The act provides that——

"'All members of the board shall be persons that profess a belief in the feasibility and wisdom, having in view the national defense and the encouragement of interstate commerce, of producing fixed nitrogen under this act of such kinds and at such prices as to induce the reasonable expectation that the farmers will buy said products, and that by reason thereof the corporation may be a self-sustaining and continuing success.'

"In other words, they are to say that they believe in Government manufacture of fertilizers, and that it can be made a success on this set-up. We are thus supposed to appoint business administrators on the basis of their beliefs rather than their experiences and competency. These directors are manifestly to have a political complexion, and apparently the entire working force is likewise to have such a basis of selection, as the usual provision for the merit service required by law in most other Federal activities is omitted. Three men able to conduct a $150,000,000 business can not be found to meet these specifications.

"GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

"I am firmly opposed to the Government entering into any business the major purpose of which is competition with our citizens. There are national emergencies which require that the Government should temporarily enter the field of business, but they must be emergency actions and in matters where the cost of the project is secondary to much higher considerations. There are many localities where the Federal Government is justified in the construction of great dams and reservoirs, where navigation, flood control, reclamation, or stream regulation are of dominant importance, and where they are beyond the capacity or purpose of private or local government capital to construct. In these cases power is often a by-product and should be disposed of by contract or lease. But for the Federal Government deliberately to go out to build up and expand such an occasion to the major purpose of a power and manufacturing business is to break down the initiative and enterprise of the American people; it is destruction of equality of opportunity amongst our people; it is the negation of the ideals upon which our civilization has been based.

"This bill raises one of the important issues confronting our people. That is squarely the issue of Federal Government ownership and operation of power and manufacturing business not as a minor by-product but as a major purpose. Involved in this question is the agitation against the conduct of the power industry. The power problem is not to be solved by the Federal Government going into the power business, nor is it to be solved by the project in this bill. The remedy for abuses in the conduct of that industry lies in regulation and not by the Federal Government entering upon the business itself. I have recommended to the Congress on various occasions that action should be taken to establish Federal regulation of interstate power in cooperation with State authorities. This bill would launch the Federal Government upon a policy of ownership and operation of power utilities upon a basis of competition instead of by the proper Government function of regulation for the protection of all the people. I hesitate to contemplate the future of our institutions, of our Government, and of our country if the preoccupation of its officials is to be no longer the promotion of justice and equal opportunity but is to be devoted to barter in the markets. That is not liberalism! it is degeneration.

"This proposal can be effectively opposed upon other and perhaps narrower grounds. The establishment of a Federal-operated power business and fertilizer factory in the Tennessee Valley means Federal control from Washington with all the vicissitudes of national politics and the tyrannies of remote bureaucracy imposed upon the people of that valley without voice by them in their own resources, the overriding of State and local government, the undermining of State and local responsibility. The very history of this project over the past 10 years should be a complete demonstration of the ineptness of the Federal Government to administer such enterprise and of the penalties which the local community suffers under it.

"This bill distinctly proposes to enter the field of powers reserved to the States. It would deprive the adjacent States of the right to control rates for this power and would deprive them of taxes on property within their borders and would invade and weaken the authority of local government.

"Aside from the wider issues involved the immediate effect of this legislation would be that no other development of power could take place on the Tennessee River with the Government in that field. That river contains two or three millions of potential horsepower, but the threat of the subjection of that area to a competition which under this bill carries no responsibility to earn interest on the investment or taxes will either destroy the possibility of private development of the great resources of the river or alternately impose the extension of this development upon the Federal Government. It would appear that this latter is the course desired by many proponents of this bill. There are many other objections which can be raised to this bill of lesser importance, but in themselves a warranty for its disapproval.

"It must be understood that these criticisms are directed to the project as set up in this bill; they are not directed to the possibilities of a project denuded of uneconomic and unsound provisions, nor is it a reflection upon the value of these resources.

"I sympathize greatly with the desire of the people of Tennessee and Alabama to see this great asset turned to practical use. It can be so turned, and to their benefit. I am loath to leave a subject of this character without a suggestion for solution. Congress has been thwarted for 10 years in finding solution, by rivalry of private interests and by the determination of certain groups to commit the Federal Government to Government ownership and operation of power.

"The real development of the resources and the industries of the Tennessee Valley can only be accomplished by the people in that valley themselves. Muscle Shoals can only be administered by the people upon the ground, responsible to their own communities, directing them solely for the benefit of their communities, and not for purposes of pursuit of social theories or national politics. Any other course deprives them of liberty.

"I would therefore suggest that the States of Alabama and Tennessee, which are the ones primarily concerned, should set up a commission of their own representatives together with a representative from the national farm organizations and the Corps of Army Engineers; that there be vested in that commission full authority to lease the plants at Muscle Shoals in the interest of the local community and agriculture generally. It could lease the nitrate plants to the advantage of agriculture. The power plant is to-day earning a margin over operating expenses. Such a commission could increase this margin without further capital outlay and should be required to use all such margins for the benefit of agriculture.

"The Federal Government should, as in the case of Boulder Canyon, construct Cove Creek Dam as a regulatory measure for the flood protection of the Tennessee Valley and the development of its water resources, but on the same bases as those imposed at Boulder Canyon; that is, that construction should be undertaken at such time as the proposed commission is able to secure contracts for use of the increased water supply to power users or the lease of the power produced as a by-product from such a dam on terms that will return to the Government interest upon its outlay with amortization. On this basis the Federal Government will have cooperated to place the question into the hands of the people primarily concerned. They can lease as their wisdom dictates and for the industries that they deem best in their own interest. It would get a war relic out of politics and into the realm of service.

"HERBERT HOOVER.

"THE WHITE HOUSE, March 3, 1931."

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I am constrained, not because I have any desire to be captious, to oppose the present legislation for several reasons. Before I get into that, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] wishes to interrogate me now I will be pleased to yield to him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman from Illinois said that the Government has spent $140,000,000 on this plant.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Substantially.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What does the gentleman suggest should be done with the plant on which we have spent $140,000,000?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I will get to that presently. But I will answer it now in this way out of courtesy to the gentleman from New York: I would do with it just what the gentleman from New York would do with property that belongs to him which represented a constant loss.

If to operate it means a continuing loss, I would not operate it. I would let it remain idle as a measure of economy. I would not throw "good money after bad." If there were any available scheme to utilize it at a profit, I would use that scheme.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman know of any available scheme except that proposed by the committee?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I will discuss that presently, and I trust my attempt, at least as to good faith, will meet the approval of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I started before these questions to say that I have been constrained to oppose this legislation for two reasons. First, because it means inevitably Government operation. There is no half-way house on this.

If there is a place where a lease could be made that would take this property and use it at a profit, or at least at an abatement of some part of the loss to the Government, I would say, "Let that lease be made." I trust that in part answers the question propounded by the gentleman from New York.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHIPERFIELD].

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Mr. Chairman, before I branch off into a discussion of that proposition I want to call attention to the fact that the only excuse or justification for the creation of this plant in the beginning was in behalf of national defense, or the furnishing of farm fertilizer to the people of the United States.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. LOVETTE] made statements a short time ago in this discussion which, it seems to me, ought not to go unchallenged.

In the first place, he said the operation of this plant by the Government, or otherwise, would reduce the cost of farm fertilizer.

The gentleman is in error in this respect.

He could not be more so.

The evidence in this record, which no man can successfully dispute, is that commercial manufacturers of fertilizer are in a position to-day, and have been for years, to produce commercial fertilizer at a much cheaper cost than the Government of the United States can possibly produce the same, equipment and power considered.

Mr. LOVETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I yield.

Mr. LOVETTE. Does the gentleman know that, although that is true, they are not selling fertilizer any cheaper to the farmers of the South?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. No. I know that is not correct, and I will state my reason for your information. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. LOVETTE], and I do not want to take any issue of fact with him, that the committee had before it for its consideration the comparative figures at which these commercial fertilizers and fertilizing elements are furnished in Germany and other countries, as well as in the United States. There is such a surplus of production over demand to-day that many fertilizer factories are closed.

Mr. LOVETTE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. LOVETTE. Does not the gentleman think that those who buy and use fertilizer in the South know more about the price than some witness who appeared before the committee?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Most positively I do not, considering the high character of the witnesses who appeared before the committee and gave their testimony.

Mr. LOVETTE. I will say to the gentleman that they have not reduced the price of fertilizer and that the farmers of the South can not pay their fertilizer bills.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I thought the gentleman asked me to yield for a question, and not that he might make an argument. I will say that considering the high character of the witnesses who appeared before our committee, I do not agree with the gentleman's statement that the man on the farm, however skilled he may be, has an equivalent knowledge of the prices and cost of production of commercial fertilizer to that of the men who appeared before this committee and gave testimony in much detail.

The gentleman also says that the operation by the Government of the plant at Muscle Shoals would put thousands of men to work.

I do not know how far afield the gentleman's mind has traveled, but the evidence on the hearings before our committee is to the effect that the full-time operation of this plant at capacity would put something like 562 men at work, and no more.

Now, getting back to the subject of this lease and its provisions, the only justification, in the first place, for the creation of Muscle Shoals was national defense.

I do not hesitate to say from the evidence before our committee and from the statements made by officers of the War Department that that necessity for the operation of Muscle Shoals—as a component part of the scheme for national defense—no longer exists.

They say—that is, all the Government experts—that they do not regard the plant as a national defense necessity in any way, shape, or manner, and that nitrogen for use in ammunition in time of war can be secured and produced commercially in superabundance and at a far cheaper figure than the Government could manufacture it at Muscle Shoals.

So when we come to the proposition of this lease—since the production of nitrogen for fertilizer or ammunition as now written therein is merely a joker—I want to call your attention to page 7 of the bill, paragraph 5.

All that this bill requires of any lessee is that within two years there shall be produced by such lessee 10,000 tons of fixed nitrogen.

That is all that the pending bill requires, and there is no annual requirement for production of nitrogen after that. If this nitrogen can not be manufactured at a cost that would be profitable to whosoever might lease Muscle Shoals—if that happy day should ever arise—then the lessee is not under any necessity by the terms of the lease of ever producing another pound until that is disposed of at a profitable sales price.

Now, the fact remains that it is the consensus of opinion of all who are informed on this subject that there will not be a private leasing of the Muscle Shoals property under the provisions of the bill. The lease must be agreed to within 18 months.

I can well understand the interest of gentlemen from the vicinity of the Muscle Shoals property in having this property operated by the Government. It means much prosperity and welfare for their immediate section of the country, but the proposition contained in this measure is this: That anyone who desires this property for any purpose whatsoever, subject to the slight restriction that is contained in the lease, may lease it and manufacture agricultural implements or cloth or stoves or anything that can be manufactured. There is virtually no restriction. It need not be dedicated to national defense or to the manufacture of fertilizer.

This brings me back to another proposition contained in the question of the gentleman from New York. If a lessee could be obtained under the provisions of this bill, without the objectionable governmental ownership and operation feature, one who would pay some adequate return to the Government, then in that event it might be highly desirable to enter into a lease for private operation, but I am asking the gentleman from New York this: Is there any justification, after the expenditure of $140,000,000 of the money of the United States, for absolutely abandoning in private operation—and note I say private operation—the entire field and plan of national defense or failing to manufacture and furnish the fertilizer that the gentleman from Tennessee so very much desires and, as he states, needs for his people?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Briefly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the proviso that begins at the bottom of page 7, in regard to the quantity of fertilizer required to be manufactured:

> That the contract shall contain a stipulation requiring the lessee to produce within two years from the date such lease shall become effective, such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients containing not less than 10,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, and shall require periodic increases in quantity of fixed nitrogen from time to time as the market demands may reasonably require.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I have much regard for the gentleman's construction of the language of this measure, but he should not stop reading there. He should go on and read the rest of it. It is as follows:

> But whenever said stock in storage shall fall below the quantity containing 2,500 tons of fixed nitrogen, the production of such nitrogen, and the manufacture of such fertilizer or fertilizer ingredients, shall thereupon be resumed.

The further manufacture of fertilizer does not have to be resumed until that day comes.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I will yield if the gentleman will make it brief.

Mr. ALMON. The gentleman says there is a surplus of fertilizer, but there is not a surplus of fertilizer. If there was, we would not import half a million dollars' worth from Chile every year.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. The gentleman is absolutely in error.

The unquestioned evidence in this case is that the nitrogen plants of the United States have been cut down in production to a small proportion of their capacity because the market for such fertilizer is glutted, or because there is not the ability to purchase at this time. I do not know which.

Now, there is not a gentleman on this committee so reckless that he would care to stake his reputation on the fact that there will be a private lease of this property under this bill. There is no man so reckless as to predict that will occur within the period mentioned—18 months.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I will say you will not lease it unless that provision is put in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. What provision?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That if a lease is not made within 18 months the Government will go on and operate it. With that out you can not lease it.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Then the gentleman must consider that the Government is eventually going into the operation of Muscle Shoals.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not believe in Government operation myself, but I would like to see this property leased.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Then I am to understand the gentleman's thought is that because the Government may go into business it will as a threat impel private parties to make a lease for this property?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Exactly, because they would like to get control of that property down there.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Is the gentleman bold enough to predict that within 18 months a private lessee will be found?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I hope this country will get back to prosperity long before 18 months expire.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. I hope so, too. Of course, we all do.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think there ought to be a change in the country in that time.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. But when we had prosperity, the greatest prosperity this country or the world has ever known, Muscle Shoals was a drug on the market, and it is just the same old white elephant to-day as it ever was. It does not require any gift of prophesy to declare that it will continue to be the same old man of the sea.

The only reason the gentleman, or any of the proponents of this bill, wants the Government-operation provision in it is because he and they know very well that there is not going to be any private lease entered into, and this provision is just a little bunk and "come on" for the deluding of the people of the United States.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman will admit that this is a very liberal lease. The gentleman admits that.

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. It is a very liberal lease.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Would I be justified in concluding that if section 14 providing for Government ownership were stricken out, the gentleman might give his consent to vote for the bill?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. If you will strike out section 14 and put in such a provision as will require the lessee to manufacture nitrogen for fertilizer and for national defense, I will vote for it.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHIPERFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. May I ask the gentleman if the fertilizer companies of the country are not about all "busted" now, and by subsidizing this matter for the Government we would complete the job?

